because we do not care for our bodies and our spirits as we should. At the age of ninety we should be young in spirit, and the body be as a well-worn garment, soon laid aside. I have often considered the plan of death, and to me there is no harshness in it. I only see the loving kindness and mercy of our "Great Ruler." I am a believer in a God. To me he is all kindness and love. What He sends to me, be it sunshine, or sorrow, I am content to abide by, because I know He sees from the beginning to the end of time; and to His children He will send naught but what is for their ultimate good. cannot tell why such things be but af-ter coming in close touch with "invisible power" and being shown by many little things how wise and thoughtful the mind is of the "Great Spirit" who guides and guards us, we should be content to abide by His will. Many people say "if they could only be sure of a life after death, how happy they would be." To me, from my early girlhood there has never been a glimmer of a doubt concerning, the new life; but since my eyes have been opened and my hearing made clear, to the beauties of the spirble power" and being shown by many made clear, to the heauties of the spiritual world, I know as well as I know the sun shines upon the earth planet, dreamless sleep, to open in the glad, happy home above.

I often wonder how anyone can be happy and have no belief in a future life. I love to think of the long eter-nity before me, and the many things I pray earnestly will be given me to do. This idea of a long earthly life given. to sin and idleness, and at the moment spotless and pure, is quite beyond me. For every evil deed and thought, I believe we will be compelled to make restitution before our pathway will be plain to the cities above, Progression will be our motto in the shadowless land. Ever onward and upward, new things to learn, new ideas to bring forth, new beauties to see, and the measureless fullness of God's love o be over and around us all. Always helping those behind and below us to climb the hill of knowledge; striving always to do good, even as we should do here, but so often forget? When our earth life is nearing its close, and we hear the first faint whisper of the angels of death calling us will it not be good to look back over our earthly life, whether it be long or short in years, and see some good we have done, and some one we have helped? We live for some purpose, though our life on earth may be but a day. We are born to be given our individuality, and to do our earth work, and how blessed it is for us when we find our work, and do it willingly, and gladly, caring not for earth's praise nor blame; knowing it is the desire of Him who sent us here to prepare our spirits for the land im mortal. Then will death be swallowed up in victory and we will know there is no mystery regarding it, only a natural

HOW OFTEN.

How often, O how often I have crossed life's restless sea, Watched the lowering clouds appear which hid the light from me; Heard the sea-bird call its mate, then plume his wing for flight. Watched the twinkling stars come out to deck the brow of night.

How often, O how often I have listened with delight. To music of the cricket, neath the rosebush after night, My soul would go out searching for the bliss earth cannot bring,

Till I found my dear departed; and heard the angels sing, How often, O how often I have begged my soul to wait.
For the coming of the hour they will open wide the gate; Where my anxious friends are waiting to bid me enter in.

And rest within their circling arms away from earthly din. How often, O how often I have smoothed a brow of care; With tender hand touched lovingly his crown of silvery hair; Dispelled the clouds of dought that were nestling round his heart And prayed the God above to bless, and that all fear depart.

WASHINGTON CAMPS.

D. W. Hull Has Good Words for Them.

There were two pmeetings in Washington this year; there will probably be more in a year or two. I attended both of them—the State Spiritualist Association camp-meeting, on or near the Seattle and Tacoma Interurban Electric road, nine miles from Tacoma a few days at first, then the Etna meeting, at Etna, Clark county, about 30 miles north of Portland, for a while, returning to the state camp meeting again about a week before its close.

on these or other subjects, she does not render Spiritualism ridiculous by talking about "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," or talking nonsense for science. Bro. Bourquin is, or his inspirers are, care ful and exact in their statements, but owing to sickness, he did very little of the speaking.
There were a number of mediums, but none of them did platform work except Mrs. Nagel. B. F. Foster, the spirit photographer, took about sixty photographs of campers and their spirit friends, and I believe about all were well satisfied with the pictures of themthe enlightenment of the delegates to is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific as a physical and musical test medium. He always exacts on himself test conditions, and all have a chance starts out with a comparison of the test conditions, and all have a chance teachings of Tom Paine to the instrucnomena occurring about him.

This was the second year of this camp, and the crowd was more than twice doubled this year. Brother Allen has been the promoter, and the man of all work at this meeting. Indeed he did all that was done for this camp without any captains. without any assistance from anyone, and he assumed all the responsibility. Yet there are a number of good Spiritualists about Etna who will see that he does not come out entirely minus.

Mrs. Hull had taken sick when leaving Kansas and had the sickest spell of her life while there, and we were unanswerable way, by quoting their made to realize the protherly dindness own language, the fact that Dr. Milton of the campers here by their ministraof the campers here by their ministra-tions. Shall we now tol-erate men teaching Paine's views in our of as Esther Thomas—good enough for her; she should not have built an excellent reputation on that name, but her husband, though not a public man, is every way worthy of her. I don't remember of ever having met a more profound Oriental scholar and thoroughly scientific thinker; Mrs. L. Nagel, who was also at the Etna camp; Mrs. Loie F. Pryor whose reputation is not national only, but world-wide; Mrs. Frances Sheldon, whose splendid abilities are well known on the coast; Mrs. Flora Heckman, who is assistant pastor of the Tacoma Spiritualist Church, Mrs. Sheldon being the regular pastor; Brother Copeland, an ex-Unitarian minister, and another brother whose name I cannot remember as I was at the Etna camp when he was there; Sister Lovejoy, for years pastor of a Spiritualist society in Tacoma: Sister M. E. S. McCall, of Tacoma, and probably one or two others whose names I have forgotten. The grounds for the camp-meeting were purchased only three or four weeks before the meeting and there was no time for advertising the meeting. Yet it was a splendid success. The funds for the first payment of three hundred dollars were raised and paid, and all the other expenses were met. As there is only one hundred dollars payment to be made on the grounds next year and for four subsequent years the expenses will easily be met, and a little will be left for improvements camp, all the work in the camp grounds and responsibility fell upon Brother Julian and Sister Irene Smith. Though all was done under the auspices of the State Association, Brother and Sister Smith assumed all responsibilities and did all the work. These grounds are situated at the head of a beautiful lake, half-mile wide and three-quarters long, and nicely shaded with fir, maple and cascaret trees. When finished it will be one of the nicest places in the world for a camp, situated only about threefourths of a mile from the Interurban railroad station. Our meetings were the most harmonious of, any camp I have attended in a long time.

After the close of the regular campmeeting the State Association meeting was held in the big tent, at which a great interest was manifest. A splendid list of officers was elected from the most earnest and capable men and women in the state, and at the close of the election we realized that we had material left, but unutilized, sufficient to have elected two or more such lists as those chosen. They will co-operate with the officers whenever they can be of use. The following is a list of the offi-

THAT NEGRO PROBLEM

NO. 721.

The Divine Law of Love the Only Solue

tion. It was with regret that I read such a manifestation of race prejudice as that expressed in The Progressive Thinker, of Aug. 29, by S. H. West, in the article under the heading of "The Negro Problem."

He says: "While slavery existed there was a strong feeling of sympathy in the North for the negro." Yes, some people in the North were possessed of another than the negro." enough of love of humanity and of justice and mercy, to so deeply sympathize with their cruelly downtrodden black brothers and sisters, that they could not rest until that terrible system of slavery was abolished; and it is a mistaken idea that this sympathy has faded away, or that that class of people feel any antipathy against the negro. There always was, during slavery days, a always eas of people in the North, who were coldly indifferent to all the cruel horrors endured by the slaves, and another class whose sympathies went strongly with the oppressors of these unfortunate people. Many people in their present state of development are not capable of sympathizing with the unfortunate.

Again Mr. West says: "The lack of affinity between the two races becomes more evident every day," and he follows that assertion with the statement that the feeling of antipathy against the negro is stronger in the North than in the South, which shows plainly that it is a mean, narrow, selfish prejudice that causes the trouble, instead of a lack of natural affinity, for were it the latter, the greatest antipathy would exist where they are constantly brought into closer relations—where they are best acquainted with each other.

Again he asserts that "No intelligent, close observer of passing events can fail to realize that we can never form a homogeneous nation of whites and ne-groes?" Why can we not? Is it be-Why can we not? Is it because of our "antipathy" to our weaker and less developed brothers and sisters of the dusky complexion? Are we really so hopeless of the possibility of our own spiritual development that we can-not expect ever to be able to tolerate or to live in harmony with those whose attainments are less than ours? If we are really so domineering and overbearing, so determined to persevere in injustice and selfishness, then we had better be the ones to move on to another continent; for if either of the two races has a better right to a home in this country than the other, it is the negro. Those four hundred years of bitter. bondage are by far the greatest price yet paid for a home in this country. He speaks of an "unwritten law which has governed this country ever. ince the first settlements." Says "that law is that white men shall rule America, which has been rigidly enforced against the Indian, the Negro and the Chinaman. Right or Wrong," and he might truthfully have added against the white man's mothers, wives, sisters and daughters also, save some few excep-tions which, with great difficulty have recently been obtained by the long and weary struggle of some freedom-loving women. He seems to believe in and love this unwritten law far more than the writen law that Americans profess to believe in—the law that proclaims that "All men are created free and equal with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.'

And now he sees a vision which to him is beautiful! A prophetic vision, the fulfillment of which involves conquest, war, the murder of millions of our brother men, followed by the enforced exodus of the hated negro race, the long enslaved, long suffering objects of the white Northerners' "antipathy." He tells us he gets his impressions from the spirits of the two greatest emancipators that ever lived. Well if that is true, retrogression and not progression is the law after death. But the truth contained in that statement is of the same character as that truth that the ministers of the gospel used to be inspired with before the war, when they preached that the religion of Jesus sanctioned slavery. This slander of the great humanity-loving, liberty-loving spirits of the emancipators, by pretended Spiritualists can never make wrong right or solve the negro problem any more than the slander of Jesus made slavery right—or averted the just retribution of that awful crime.

Advanced spirits tell us that Love is the only solution of all problems involving the relations of human beings to each other, or of any beings high or low in God's universe. Without love which is the only fulfillment of divine law, we can never advance or come into harmony with all humanity. Love and justice go hand in hand. Where we love it is easy to be just.

"The world is my country and to do good my religion," declared the great Thomas Paine, and when we all attain to as great a height spiritually, we shall more deeply concern ourselves about the well-being and happiness of our colored brethren than about the white man's supposed prerogative to rule. Our most jealous watch will be kept over our own spirits, lest we manifest more of selfishness than justice.

SOME SUGGESTIONS In Regard to Mistaken Methods of Investigating Spiritualism. In the investigation of any subject, especially that involving facts and principles not familiar to one's experience, there are certain conditions that must be observed in order to succeed in that investigation. It must be admitted that by far the larger portion of what we call knowledge which is accepted and acted upon such, has its rise in what we learn from others.

The realm of absolute causes is entirely unknown to us. All things that we can know are facts; that is, the effects of causes. These are the revelators of all so called knowledge. There fore, a correct cognition of facts is the essential requisite in forming logical

As is seen in the history of the development of physical science—the long struggle and uncertain conclusions, (as for instance, in the geocentric theory and that of alchemy,) the facts were as familiar to the ancient, as to the mod-ern world. The forces that gave rise to the facts upon which these theories were founded, were not even dreamed of; and the facts themselves were incorrectly cognized, not understood.

But when Newton discovered and formulated the laws to which these forces gave rise in regard to planetary astronomy, it was made a possible science. Every astronomer, from Herschell to the latest, has accepted the discoveries of Newton and Keplar; and acting on this knowledge, men have extended that knowledge to its present

The development of chemical science has undergone the same struggles, though not so long nor severe in its development. Sir Humphrey Davy sustains the same relation to chemistry that Sir Isaac Newton does to planetary astronomy; and all investigators and students accept the results of the original discoverers, as final conclusions without attempting to go back and traverse the ground of the original investigators. Such an attempt if persisted in, would materially impede, if not defeat all further progress in science, The student in chemistry goes into the laboratory already supplied with knowledge of the elements and their affinities in definite proportions, and pursues his manipulations with as much certainty of results as if he had acquired his knowledge by original inves-

These operations are all on the plane of physical life; and even here, the realm of ultimate causes is hidden from view. No one can know why all attract each other directly in proportion to the quantity of matter in each, and indirectly as the square of their distance apart increases; nor why an acid and an alkali unite chemically, giving rise to a salt essentially different in appearance and quality from its | vation west of the Missouri river. Acelements. The fact is all that we can cording to the account of one who ac-

But when we begin our investigation of facts that have their rise in the activities of those who have passed to the spirit side of life, we must recognize the fact of a spiritual cause just as in regard to the facts that have their rise in physical forces. It will be urged that this statement is a begging of the question; but it is no more such than is that of the facts that have their rise in physical forces. The spiritual facts are as well authenticated as are the physical facts. No intelligent person pretends to deny them.

But as in physical science, the successful investigator must be familiar with physical facts, so in spiritual scimust be familiar with the phenomena that have their use in sniritual forces, directed and operated by snirittal beings.

The difference in regard to the character of these forces must be noted. The spiritual forces are characterized should be any difference in the method of investigation, it is impossible to tell. both, the facts reveal their respective causes, and the same method of investigation must be pursued—there is no other method possible.

Just as in the domain of physics, the successful student is dependent on the acquisition of others' knowledge, so the student of spiritual science is dependent on the knowledge of others for his success in the investigation of spiritual science. As the ancients could not interpret the fact that a light substance rubbed on a piece of amber would attract feathers and the like: nor could they grasp the significance of Hero's cup, so the investigator, without a knowledge of the principles of spiritual philosophy, is not prepared to interpret the facts of Spiritualism.

The knowledge that has been acquired by many earnest and able investigators, each reaching the same conclusion, though unknown to each other. is beyond the ability of any one to obtain by traversing the ground of the original investigators; yet that knowledge is as essential to the successful investigation, as was that of the original investigator; and like the student in physical science, he is equally dependent on human testimony, as is the student of physical science.

When he is satisfied that the spiritual phenomena are genuine, he must conpen of sapling poles was erected around him, in which he remained until sider their vast extent and the intricate. and to us the unknown and unknowable cause of their production; likewise the ability, earnestness and perseverance came unbearable, when the white peo-of the multitude of investigators in ple in the neighborhood dug a grave reaching the same conclusion based on indigenous and spontaneous manifesta-tions. remains, together with this parapher-nalia, goods and chattels, lands and ten-

There are other reasons why failure to reach right conclusions often result; Among them are incorrect conceptions in regard to the character of the inhab itants of the spirit world; no recognition of spiritual forces as different from physical forces, preconceived opinions far different from those revealed by the spirits, and which are held as realities the investigators; and withal, the established habit of feeling, thought and action that unconsciously determine the ordinary conduct of life; but in the search of newly discovered truth, this fact is nover considered. Besides, selfknowledge is grievously lacking in such cases the failure is attributable to those who fall in their investigation. Story of an Indian Tragedy and Spirit Prof. Jamieson, Off the Track, Put to * Manifestations That Followed. Rights.

To the Editor:—In the issue of your excellent paper of September 5, you publish an article in regard to the I notice that Bro. W. F. Jamieson, as usual, is off the track; and as he proposes to do me the honor of a series of spirit of the squaw wife of the indian chief, Au-be-nau-be, whom he killed, letters in answer to my letter published in The Progressive Thinker for July 18 the article states, at Lake Manatou, near Rochester, Ind., being frequently seen about that romantic spot. Some I deem it well to help him back on to the track, before he proceeds too far. If he once gets started fairly, with all wheels on the track in good order, he years ago I had occasion to make a thorough investigation of that early inmay reach the desired station safe and dian tragedy, an account of which may sound, and then he will probably make the discovery that he is a Spiritualist. be of interest to some of your readers: Au-be-nau-be held by treaty from the Otherwise he is liable to run on to boulders, into the swamp, over wild fields of waste and confusion, and land government thirty odd sections of land ordering on Lake Maxinkuckee in Marshall county, and extending into Fulton county, Indiana, where he estab-

In his last letter he quotes from my letter as follows: "Of course we all know that faith is a factor in all scientific as well as religious study," then he says: "But let me tell Brother Howe that faith is no more science than belief is knowledge." Did I say it was? Read it again Brother Jamieson, with your logical glasses on. I said "faith is a factor in all scientific study." Not that faith is science. Then again he says, "What is the issue? That Spiritualism is not mere belief or faith, but knowledge." Off the track again. "Spiritualism is not mere belief," nor is it all knowledge. It includes both, and so does science Bro. Jamieson denies that faith has any part in science. Let us see. Scientists freely talk of atoms, as if they were demonstrated realities. From Dalton to Tyndall, the atom has been accepted as an important factor in the study of chemical science. In fact they hardly see how they can get along with-out it. But no man knows that the right to defend himself, and if he could atom exists. Scientific men the world over talk of the ether, as if it were a reality, capable of sensuous demonstra tion. Astronomers forecast eclipses, by means of knowledge of the past and present motions of heavenly bodies, and faith that they will continue in the same order indefinitely. But I more emphatically refer to the faith—belief of the great-body of the people, Brother Jamleson included, in the statements of schoolmen about matters that they have no personal, experimental, knowledge; and these statements of scientists are published in books and periodicals and read by intelligent people with confidence, and accepted as true. But it is all faith on their part. Brother Jamieson has seemed to have faith in them, and, if I mistake not, has predicated much of his materialistic reasoning upon the testimony of scientists, without verifying it by experiment, and settling every question by personally demonstrating its hunting and fishing along the rivers and lakes in the neighborhood where he had Brother Jamieson is constantly confusing and confounding the creeds and stories of the past, with the manifestaformerly lived. His life, however, had proven a failure: his kindred and friends had been dragged from him; he grew restless and discontented, drank tions of the present. If there was no past, the demonstrations of the present are ample proof of the truth of Spiritualism. If Brother Jamieson has not occurred at or near Winamat, Indiana, found this evidence it is probably behe was so badly hurt that disease set in cause he has not sought it in the spirit of unbiased interest and critical thorand he died. The writer of this was inoughness

He asks: "Does not the entire history the pall bearers! that the body of Paukoo-shuk was carried from Winamac of science show that faith and knowland buried on Long Point on the west edge have been for ages the deadliest bank of Maxinkuckee, the most heautifoes?" A phase of faith-belief-has been an important co-partner with scienceby intelligence and design; the physical consequence. Human bones were knowledge—always. But certain kinds are simply the manifestations of a found there many years ago, and many of faith, predicated upon fiction, and blind, unconscious force, and without of the early settlers had implicit confi-any apparent purpose. Why there dence that Pau-koo-shuk was buried are the foes of knowledge (that is such knowledge as exposes the fallacy and falsehood of the claims of that kind of early days believed that his ghost came faith.) He asks me to "name the real scientist who hangs a large share of science upon faith." Who said any one did? I said faith is a factor in all scientific as well as religious study;" and I have sustained that statement in this letter: and as a scientist who employs that fac tor in scientific work I might name several hundred-in fact all scientists past and present. If he wants a special name I might mention Prof. Crookes, Flammarion, Trowbridge, Marconi, Tesla, Edison, Newcomb, James, et al.

Can Brother Jamieson show that it is not faith by which they accept the atom and the ether, as indispensable factors in the study of science? Definitions differ. Science is not complete with the knowledge of facts. That is only one part of it. Prof. Dolbear is high authority in science. He defines it "a consistent body of relations." To him the atom and the ether are important factors in making up the "body of relations" in which facts and faith co-operate as factors, one as essential as the other. Spiritualism has its facts and demonstrations, which all who will may know. It has also its faith, or belief, which co-operates in the scientific structure of its "consistent body of relations. Now Brother Jamieson, do us up with your skeptical carving-knife, and pick out our errors, analyze our logic, and dodge all the fatal facts you can, repeat the changes on the superstitions and fictions of the past; but do not forget that the demonstrations of the present are what we claim as the basis of our science. These are as real, as access ble, and as conclusive as the demonstrations of any other science which you accept without question and without witnessing the demonstrations upon which scientists are supposed to de pend. By the time you have finished reading this I think you will be on the track, and will not be wasting your genius in vain attempts to befog yourself and the public by making me say what never said or thought—that faith is science. Neither are facts science But faith and facts co-operate in that 'consistent body of relations" defined as science. On the track. Now drive ahead. But do not waste too much time on me, for Brother Sweringen needs your attention. LYMAN C. HOWE.

SCIENCE AGAINST FAITH

The Battle Between Materialism and Bøirituallem.

Sald Lymansc. Howe: "Faith: and knowledge. They are close compan-Are they? dils: Faith forty-second cousin to: be solute certain knowledge? I have never continuated that the selentist has no use for hypotheses, theories; but they are the scaffolding of science, not science itself. I have never said the scientist may not be a trusting man; but that his "trust," his "faith," is not science. His hope is not science; his imagination is not science. His knowledge, resulting from observation and experiment, classified, systematized knowledge, is science. Brother Howe says, in a most discriminating manner: "Of course Spiritualists do not rely on the accounts of the resurrection of Jesus, Enoch's flight to heaven, Elijah's automobile ourney to the skies, or any other story of the past, which cannot be verified. Good. Thank you for that. By faith millions of very religious people have relied upon those stories of the past, Spiritualists reject them. Brother Howe thus acknowledges that Spiritualsts themselves are skeptics, doubters, lack faith. Astronomical facts thousands of years ago have been verified, including meteoric showers. In my first article I said I have no prejudice against a fact though it may be a million years old; and that I agree with those Spiritualists who demand present-day revelations. Says Brother Howe: "Present-day experiences have the advantage of being verifiable testimony, and often by repetitions and variations which reduce them to scientific certainty."

"Scientific certainty," renders faith superfluous. Apply the principle of "veriflable testimony," "repetitions," "variations," experiments often instituted all along the line of mediumship and you will frighten fraud out of your spiritual court, or seance. Faith takes things on trust; it does not demand repetitions and variations." These are what skepticism calls for.

In my first article I said "intelligent Spiritualists declare that the race needs present day demonstrations rather than moss-covered facts, however well at-tested; living witnesses instead of dead authorities."

Mr. Howe coincides with me by saying, "Present day experiences have the advantage." I do not see how any Spiritualist can logically take any other ground. But when it comes to nesses" I admit that he has far more faith in them than I have, for he says: "But men are hung, electrocuted, de-prived of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness by the testimony of witnesses, who report what they saw, or think they say, or heard."

If that, is one of friend Howe's strong supports of Spiritualism, and has been depended on as a rule by Spiritualists, then, in my judgment, it becomes a

Yes, I admit that men are put to death on the "testimony of witnesses," and many, of those men were innocent, while hosts of criminals escape. Juries, have voted life away on the "testimony of witnesses" of set a monster free be-cause they did not know; they were ig-norant; they believed; they had faith. In many/criminal cases scarcely two witnesses will tell the same story about a transaction that they both witnessed One witness has a fickle memory, the other a lively imagination. They both "report: what they saw, or think they saw or heard? built is a shame on our civilization, that a human life should be juspended by such a brittle thread!

My friend Howe says, "In considering the value of testimony one needs to know something of the character and mental habitudes of the witness." This is what I have contended for, Too many Spiritualists proceed on the assumption that a witness is a witness; add to this the fact that their "witnesses" are seldom cross-examined, and it will be seen why a "weeding out" process has never taken place, except in a few isolated cases, in the phenomena of Spiritualism.

Brother Howe is right when he says. "Many are careless, impulsive and iump to conclusions.'

That describes many Spiritualists who are anxious to have Spiritualism proved true. They are that class who do not want to read or hear anything said against their "witnesses" nor "evidences." They isay, It is a beautiful philosophy, and if it is not true they never want to live long, enough to find it out! By their own confession they shut their eyes open their mouth and swallow whatever any medium gives them. They are the "careless, impulsive," jump-at-conclusion class: they care nothing for the "character and mental habitudes of the witness," especially if that witness is a medium. They are the credulous class, and are shocked when any one proposes strict tests, or suggests the propriety of rigid cross examination. We are told by this class that such a course throws an aura of doubt over the medium: that such kepticism is unfavorable to good spiritual conditions.

But Brother Howe says: "There are others who examine critically, observe closely, and decide after mature consideration of all the facts and appear I'know enough about Spiritualists to cheerfully admit that this is true. There are Spiritualists of this kind. I wish they were more numerous for their own sake and for the sake truth. One of this kind, president of a Spiritualist society, says he does not take "every shadow for a ghost." what do some Spiritualists, even in this what do some spiritualists, even in this discussion call, those who "examine critically, observe closely" and carefully decide? "Inbalanced," "hyper," "hypo," "figuilat," Dreadful! It is surprising now much further such alry epithets by with some folks than argument.

If Brother Howe and myself continue the good work, Spiritualists will become more critical and skeptical.

JUSTICE

Should Be Rendered to Controls and Mediums.

Friends, I am anxious to give ex-ression to some thoughts which I hope will do some one a little good.

A large proportion of the thinking people of the world have become aware that it is a fact that there are spirits who have written books through the aid of earthly mediums.

Many of these books tell us of the things which exist within the spiritual World. It is also known that there are what I will call message-glving spirits who control earthly mediums, that they may speak messages to those who seek an interview with their departed friends or dear ones. We need no longer remain in ignorance if we but wish it, for we can learn much in regard to the things of the spiritual world, as we have alread learned a great deal of the things which exist on earth. Do we of earth give these authors, speakers, and message-giving spirits, and also their earthly mediums, through whom they are enabled t reach us, the honor and respect that is certainly due them? Are we not a little too willing to accept what they offer us from the tree of knowledge, and take it as a matter of course, instead of looking upon it as a divine privilege, that we are able to have those in the spiritual world for teachers, and that we can become wise in regard to the spirit by accepting their teachings which they gladly give What matters it to us who they are, as long as their teachings help us to a higher understanding of ourselves? They have been true workers for the cause of Spiritualism and they should be honored and respected for the work which they have accomplished in the past fifty years or more, and for that which they will continue to do in the fu-I have the greatest regard for all who are earnestly and honestly working for the advancement of Spiritualism and trying to prove to us of earth the immortality of man.

The history of our country tells us of the deeds of bloodshed of the American Indian.

Let those who write the history of Spiritualism tell us of the deeds of love performed for their white brother in helping him as guides or controls, to bring before the world that man is im-

We should invoke the blessings of the most high upon them for their earnest work in helping to bring Spiritualism where it is to-day.

Are there not many people who go to the places where mediums are to give public tests hoping that some of their departed friends or dear ones may reach them and give to them some word that would prove that they were not dead but living, although they are not visible to mortal eyes?

And are not many of these tests given by the control or guide, who in most cases is an Indian? And are not the messages which they give generally correct?

I remember one evening that I with some others went to a meeting where Mrs. Webster was to be the medium that evening. She was under the control of an Indian girl.

This Indian control gave to a lady who happened to sit next to one of the parties with whom I was, what I considered a fine test, if I am any judge of such things; but to our surprise the lady did not seem to know anything about it whatsoever. The Indian control of Mrs. Webster said that all she knew of it was, what those who came to her said, and that they repeated the message which they seemed so anxious to give to her.. The lady to whom the message was given said she did not remember any one by that name, and did not know what they meant by what they had said to her.

The control said she did not seem to get anything more, but was sure what she had said was right, as her friends kept repeating the same message to her. The Indian control then left her to go some other person to whom some spirit was anxious to be made known. One of our party said to this same lady whom the control of Mrs. Webster had just left, something about the test and to our great surprise she told us it was true, but that she did not want to acknowledge it there among those assembled.

Now why do such people go where they knowingly place themselves in surroundings which may enable them to receive a message from some absent friend, unless they are willing to acknowledge the test if it is true? Truly it is an injustice to the Indian

It is an injustice to the medium It is an injustice to the cause of Spiritualism as well. Was the lady ashamed to let those who had assembled for the same purpose, hoping to receive a message, to acknowledge that some one who had passed beyond death had reached her?

If so, she had far better stay at home until she is in the condition to acknowl edge the truth if it comes to her.

If any one knows that the things which the control of some medium tell are true, let them say so, and if not deny it, and all will be well. But should we be willing fearlessly to acknowledge truth whenever and where

These are some of the annoving things which the mediums and controls have to endure many times in their great work.

May the blessings of Om descend upon the cause of Spiritualism and all of its workers, on earth, in heaven, and also within the red men's happy huning ground.

A Story of a Man Who Tried Six Times, and Failed.

Am I a fatalist? Well, probably! At any rate I believe that I am compelled to live whether I want to or not; and from my own expewant to or not; and from my own experience and observation I do not think people die until their time comes. I stomach were drawn up with a terrible pucker while my brain seemed to be on fire. I thought I would go mad with the borne in upon me for I tried to commit suicide six times and something always prevented me from committing that act, which, as Shakspeare says, "ends all

Some people have gone through all sorts of wild adventures by land and sea, through flood and fire, pestilence and famine, cyclone and shipwreck, and yet come out of it all apparently unharmed, seeming, as it were, to bear a charmed life.

Some have fallen from parachutes and been picked up for dead; some have been blown up in mine explosions i and recovered to make money out of it by writing it up for the papers; some have had their bodies almost torn to pieces in railroad disasters and yet lived to a good old age though with weak and shattered constitutions. Others have merely fallen from a two-inch step which broke their leg from the consequences of which they died in a few months; or, perhaps, the bones of a fish would go down their throats the wrong way and they would choke to death. I knew of one man who passed all through the Civil War and came out of it with very few scratches, who was killed by a brick falling on his head as he was passing under a building that was being constructed in a large city. Funny, wasn't it?

But, perhaps, you want to hear my into this world without any say-so on waking"?

But to my story!

I have tried six times to commit suicide ended in failure.

But they say, the wise-heads do, "If cide: By the poison route, by the gun, by asphyxiation, by thrusting deep grant," and six months later I tried to

Although I have been in many trades and businesses there was only one thing in which I had been completely after having locked the door securely —a successful failure! pain and torture of it. At last, how-ever, I lost consciousness. But some time later I awoke to find myself stretched out on a little white cot in a hospital ward with several men (they were doctors) fooling over me with a stomach pump. I guess I must have spoken, for one of the doctors said: "He's coming to! I heard him say, 'Damn it! why didn't they let me alone! I wanted to die!'" In a short time I was able to walk out into the light of day, ready for another attempt. A few months later I tried stabbing Some years previously I had been given a jeweled stiletto by a Spanish friend who on presenting it to me for a Christ-mas gift had said, laughingly: "That would be sure death for enemies and jealous lovers!" It was a dainty little thing, just like the senorita who gave it to me.

One day in looking through my trunk for a lost article I came upon this jew-eled weapon of destruction. I immediately took it out, and kissing it, said, "Ah, my beauty! If ever I try again to kill myself I will see what I can do with von.

I did try! But I don't know how i was! I guess I didn't hit the right spot somehow, although I bled a great deal from the chest and the scar is still there. I know I dropped like a log to the floor; and when I came to I found own particular story. It's hard lines, however, now isn't it that a man comes an attendant of the house industriously trying to resuscitate me. It seems his part, though I know the Theosophists teach differently, and if things don't suit him he is not allowed, because of some Overruling Something or cause of some Overruling Something or the state of this mortal coil"

I always suspected that the man had forgotten to lock my door when Other, to "shuffle off this mortal coil" and "sleep the sleep that knows no saw it again. So my third attempt at

It proved to be a friend who had come white as a sheet, for three days; and to tell of a job in sight for me. After during that time the medium would al-

might sense your condition and spoil your little plans. By this time I had begun to grow superstitious and thought that Fate, un-kind in all things else, would not let me commit suicide, no matter how badly I wanted to. So my last two attempts were more in the nature of experiments and my heart was not in the matter as much as at first.

One fine day during the quall-hunting season I was going by a deep river in the country, and as for several days my old sulcidal mania had been with me, things not having gone prosperously for some time past and as I could not swim I plunged boldly into the stream with all my clothes on. There was a roaring in my cars, my head sunk under water and I swallowed a large quantity of river, but ere I sank for the last time an arm was crooked around my neck and I heard a clear, penetrating voice bawl in my ear: "Steady, boy, steady!" and I was soon brought to the shore. A party of quail hunters passing that way had seen me in the water with my clothes on and surmising that I had fallen in, the youngest of the trio, pulling off his shoes and stocking had swum in after me, fishing me out like a wet rat.

As a last resort hanging was tried. For this purpose I determined to seek a lonely spot when no one was around, and not likely to be, so one night at 10:30 I alighted at the little railway station of Wenona. There was only two or three hundred inhabitants at this place; and in comparison with the bustling city of business I had just left it was sleepy-enough looking.

I guess it must have been about midnight when I had completed my preparations for hanging. I had walked at least three miles from Wenona to where there was not a house in sight, though there was some mighty big trees. Only the hooting of the owls were occasionally heard and the sound of the night in-

The rope was a pretty stout affair and was not afraid it would break. Part of the rope I still have as a memento of my last unsuccessful attempt. The last thing I remember, ere losing consciousness, was wondering whether I would really succeed this time in my oft-made attempts at suicide.

A few hours later I was answered; for I awoke in broad daylight and found myself in a farmhouse five miles away.

Shortly after midnight-or rather early Sunday morning—a farmer was passing the spot in his wagon and by the light of the moon saw my body dangling from one of the tall oak trees. Thinking to do a good deed to a fellow-mortal—for he did not know but what I had been murdered—he cut me down and carried me home in his vehicle.

If I was romancing now, I would say fell in love with the pretty buxom daughter of the house, got married and lived happily ever after. But I didn't, for there was no farmer's daughter to fall in love with; though he had a pretty niece who kept house for him and a nice-looking German servant girl named Strause, but I did not fall in love with either, though I worked in the old farmer's service for a number of months and received $8 a month and board.

Well, though I have had many ups and downs since then, I have avoided the suicidal racket for I have come to the conclusion that Fate, Providence, Kismet, or whatever you call it wills me to live for some purpose I cannot foresee and live I must whether I want to or not. If Fate's against me how can I be blamed for being a fatalist? don't remember whether it was bug juice or the rat-killer variety. Anyway, it was horrible stuff: and my like my like and my l hat do you think?

want any more of it in mine, thank you! And I will say this, that if you ever want to commit suicide, don't get a room next to a medium. He or she Running Commentary, and Fearless 2012 TS-12 Criticism, J.

It is interesting to peruse the great variety of reading matter found in the pages of The Progressive Thinker, in which its able contributors express their thought freely on various subjects. It is an easy matter for writers and speakers to express erroneous ideas they have held from childhood to maturity. They do not intend to state anything that is untrue, nevertheless, a few of the old errors reappear occasion-

I have thought I would like to write a brief criticism and commentary on various statements and sentiments ex-pressed, without special mention of any particular writer. And in doing this will quote each full, fair, clear-cut idea, averment or affirmation on which comment. "The pure in heart shall see God."

When will that be? No class of The-ists claim that the god can be seen on the earth plane; and the pure in heart from the higher realms of spirit life have often stated that no individual ever saw any such person or thing there, and even deny its existence. No intelligent, fair-minded person has ever given a description of a god if one ever was seen; therefore we conclude that the pure in heart shall never see any god or son of a god. The singers will never get "Nearer, my God, to thee," only in imagination, and their faith is a vain delusion; yet they love to sing that good old song their ancestors sung. We never have found one who approached near enough to get a glimpse of the old deity.

In ancient and medieval history and literature we read much about "the gods," indicating that the people in those remote ages recognized an imaginary something under the name "the gods." They were the gods of mythology. In course of time, under influence of the Catholic religion, the Christian nations have got them all condensed into one god, which is more convenient for modern speakers and writers, who make the word mean something, anything or nothing, just as they wish, with plenty of old dogmas and doctrines to back them.

The Theist takes for granted, and takes in faith, much delusive nonsense, It is much easier to take things for granted than it is to prove them, which requires mental labor, investigation, demonstration.

We can illustrate the bigotry of god helievers by an incident in the French Academy of Science. A member made the statement that a cat always falls on its feet. A shining light in that body made the charge of falsehood and de-clared this to be contrary to common sense and the laws of mechanics. No animal, he asserted, falling freely through the air, could possibly turn round by its own unaided exertions. Such cogent reasons did he bring forward that his colleagues were forced to accept his views. The man who made the averment brought a cat before the assembly, held it by the four paws, back downward. two feet from the table and let it drop suddenly, and it alighted naturally on its feet every time, as every honest cat should do.

When a wise man lays down a law, it should be modified sufficiently to bring it into line with indisputable facts. "The Atheist cannot imagine a conscious, living, intelligent, creative power at work molding forms of alife and beauty out of plastic matter." No-the Atheist does not care to imagine things in that line. It takes a Theist for that. But the Atheist can and does perceive and discern, not one. but many "conscious, intelligent, creaother, better, more worthy men are ushered into eternity every day of the year is more than I can understand. wer or creator. We respectfully challenge any person to show that any one power or creator alone ever produced or caused anything. The Theist boldly avers that God alone made this or caused that thing, which is baseless assumption. We cannot accept that kind of argument-we want facts, truth,

"All life is one. It consists wholly of motion."

We cannot perceive what advantage there is in condensing all forms of life into a unity or one. We suspect the motive points to a pantheistic deity. In the domain of nature we perceive four distinct departments of life—the mineral, the vegetable, the animal, the spiritual. In the animal are distinct kinds of life—the bird, the beast, the fish, the insect, the human. We also observe myriads of particular and indi-

Some folks never stop to consider the consequences of a reckless affirmation. We can point to many instances of life without motion. If all life is one and consists wholly of motion, then all life is one motion. The writer leaves us here in the dark. Why did he not ex-plain the motion? We want to know if it is a slow or rapid motion—a vertical,. a lateral, circular or zigzag motion. If all life is one, we may say human life is beast life—animal life is mineral.

Force, activity, life are self-existent. indestructible. They may change form and expression but remain forever. Human life is detached from the mass of general life, on a higher scale, the highest form of life on earth. The individual life develops the soul and prepares it for celestial life. The labors in the incarnate-life are of the greatest importance in their influence upon the after life.

We meet with intelligence everywhere. There is mind as well as mat-ter in nature. Spirit and intelligence may be inseparable from matter, but are as essential as the matter through which they are manifested. There are unknown powers, causes, forces behind all nature, moving all, and it will not advance us one step in explanation by calling them god or delty. This simply leaves the subject in the dark. We suppose no finite mind ever will comprehend the various forces, causes and motives at work in nature; and it is not necessary. What we can know is the processes of growth, development, manifestation as we learn them through various laws, observations and demonatrations.

"Men have felt that there must be a supreme power governing all things." Very likely—thought often, produces feeling, and it is easy to feel, what they imagine or believe; yet "feeling there must be a supreme power" is not conclusive proof of its existence. Men do not know there is one supreme ruler over all other powers and causes, but they assume it without proof, and it is always the ideal delty of popular relig-ion. If such men can feel one power, why can they not also feel several powers in operation governing all things? Their mistake is the combining of all powers and causes into one thing or person. If we take notice of the conflicting affirmations pertaining to the alleged supreme power, we must come to the inevitable conclusion, that he makes mistakes, commits many errors, and must be a bad ruler, Amid the largon of theories we find no facis on which to predicate a state-

Some folks say the god they believe in is not a person; yet it is a thing of male sex, singular number, and they call it he, him, father. It bears the ear-marks or attributes of personality.

H. B. Myrick says: "I believe God created things in the beginning. I do not know it; I simply believe it."

Now, if other theistic speakers and writers would confess likewise it would redound to their credit and honor, People believe things that are utterly false in some instances; and there is great difference between believing and knowing. Believing a thing does not make it true, and falth will not answer for argument and evidence. Faith is a good thing in its province, but we object to the unlawful use of it. We want a case of creation for illustration, and we will take a good crop of corn, produced by the industrious farmer in half a year. At the outset we will ask the Theist what caused or produced the corn? Of course he will say God created it-caused it to grow; and of course this an unproven assertion, of which he knows absolutely nothing. His faith, no matter how strong, proyes nothing. No god had anything to do with it, either directly or indirectly.

We will analyze the case and ascertain what caused the corn and learn how it was produced. The most important agent or factor was the man, who by use of his team of horses and farming implements prepared the fertile soil and cultivated the crop. He first prepared the ground, then planted the seeds which must be in darkness for a brief time for germination, then spring out into the light. The crop must have sunlight by day and dark ness by night—it must have moisture which is supplied by the rain—it must have fresh air by which it derives near ly all the elements of growth-it must have cultivation-it must have warm, dry weather for maturity, which appears in due time-and so the crop is made

Now here is a large quantity of corn, loads of it, visible and tangible, that had no existence six months previous; and we have traced the chief agents and causes in its production or creation. If we want to aggregate several of these causes and forces into one, we may say nature produced the corn-and so did the farmer. By use of the means he made nature do it for him. Wherever a person is found who possesses true fidelity to truth, who fears not the tools of inquisition, the fire of bigots, the ostracism of society, the grinding mills of mammon, that soul is the one to whom is anchored the hopes of the upper world. The religion of man is a tyrant where liberty lies shackled and mortals remain slaves to faith. Truth and wisdom are wanted in this age, and facts are needed which meet the approval of reason, experience and intuition. In the construction of the new temple of knowledge we accept that only which is good and true.

TWO VIEWS OF DEATH.

The Tyrant.

The greatest monarch the world has ever known And he rules alike over land and sea; From his edict stern there is no appeal,

For a tyrant king is he. He sits unmoved on his ebon throne, Where the young and the old forever meet.

The frost of centuries on his head And the nations at his feet. No word of respite unlocks his lips. Though poets and sages have questioned him! And he has no grace of a softer mood To brighten the ages dim. He shows no favor to lord or churl, And he reaps a harvest of pain and tears: His beard has growth from the dust of life. Upgathered through all the years.

Strong is the grasp of his mighty hand, And cold and keen is his arctic breath. And there is no power that earth can

To throttle the tyrant—Death. -The Olympian.

A Friend. The greatest thing the world has known Aside from mortal breath. The greatest king upon a throne, The truest friend is Death. The sobs and sighs of human woe

His soothing hand doth still: He comes with Life's eternal flow And turns the changing mill. The pains and pangs of mortal man

Are all allayed the same: The ox and worm are in his plan And all should praise his name. He strokes the peasant and the king Alike with loving hand; He is no tyrant; has no sting; Just freedom sweet and grand. DR. T. WILKINS.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association. Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, gly ing date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio. When Man is a Brute.

An incident recently recorded in the secular press of the testimony adduced in a divorce court, gives us a slight tinge of the drama of life being repeated over and over by men and women who are married, but mismated.

The husband leaves the wife and applies for a divorce on the grounds that she had given her love to others, and he takes away from the mother the little boy, their only child.

She goes to the husband's home to see her child and is admitted under protest, and, to make this editorial stronger, we give the conversation as told in one instance by the woman who went with her to aid her in the effort to see her boy:

"He let us into the house under protest "'What do you want?' he asked. "'I want to see my child,' Mrs. Dur-'I'm through with you,' he hotly, 'and I will keep the child. You are not good enough to take him. I am a Christian woman, your honor and I saw that all that human hands or human hearts could do to reunite those estranged people had been done. there was still a Power they had not appealed to. 'As they stood there looking defiantly at each other the child, dressed in his night gown and ready for bed, came 'His mother spoke to him. She called him 'darling' and asked him to come to

"Her husband stepped between them. "Then I flung myself upon my knees and prayed. I am a Christian woman I am not ashamed of what I did that night, and I am not ashamed to tell I prayed and prayed. Poor Mrs.

"When Mrs. Durrell could stand it no longer she, too, went down on her knees and prayed. As she lifted her hands above her head and sobbed out her prayer her husband's whole being seemed to change. He strode to her side. He stood over her as she knelt there and cursed her in words that made my blood run cold.
"Then as she knelt there stretched out her hand and took that of her son, the hand that her husband was

"'Pray for me, my baby,' she said.
"The poor child knelt down in his night gown and started. I guess the little chap said the only prayer he knew.
"He began: 'Now I lay me down to sleep—'

"'Stop that,' his father cried, 'I want no mockery here."

"Heaven knows it was no mockery." That poor woman's heart was bleeding, and the boy, who knew that his father and his mother hated each other, began to cry.
"But he was brave. He started again.

Again his father checked him with a rush of curses. "Mrs. Durrell staggered to her feet and I led her from the house. When asked if her husband ever tried to keep her from seeing her child, she

"He tried, and he succeeded. I went to his house twice to see my baby. My husband ordered me out. I refused to go until I had seen my child. My husband seemed not to care. Twice he pushed me from his house, and once he was so rough that he threw me halfway downstairs.

'I landed at the bottom in a heap and was almost senseless." The woman, whose pale face and burning eyes show that she is suffering a great deal, denied every accusation of wrong doing that her husband made ngainst her. As yet at the time of writing this the ase is undecided and it remains unproven whether the mother is a fit perion to have the custody of the child, but prough is shown to indicate that the human brutes are not all dead yet. He would not permit the mother who gave him birth, and no doubt upon whom the child was forced, to kiss her darling boy, and when she knelt in prayer for that mother privilege, the child was pushed back and the mother hindered. In fact while her sad, sad heart went out in supplication for her boy the brute stood above her and

No wonder her soul went out to others, if it did; she found no warmth, no sympathy, no smiles, at home, nothing to fall engagements in the East. Mr. but cold, heartless frowns and curses, as well as cuits from the one to whom she had given her life and loving yows. Her soul was hungry and the world contains others in the same condition, had if her yearning heart went in search of sympathy and food it was because she had no true companion for a cuit of the globe. He has been doing miametieg, which means inherecony and separation.

How often is a tender, loving woman made the victim of marital bestiality, abuse and forced maternity.

Unwelcome children, aften deformed idiotic, invalids for life, thrown upon s world that is ignorant of the cause and helpless to prevent, just from the effects of a brute of a man deing the 'owner" of a woman.

In the face of a continuous compilation of similar records in our divorce courts, many of our modern clergymen are crying out against our lax divorce laws, and one Protestant minister made the announcement from a Chicago pulpit that divorced people need not apply to him to solemnize their marriage, for he considered it in disregard of the higher law.

If there is a higher law there is a ligher law maker. In this event the higher law maker must know that such people are making a mistake when He joins them together," and unless he is working for a monopoly on the business of marriage and divorce He should prevent this sad occurrence that must darken two or more human lives at

Think of a law that would compel weakly woman to live a life of sorrow and pain, a life of submission to the curses and blows of the human brute she must call a husband

Thank the good angels, and the natural progress of the human mind, our laws are enacted by others than the narrow, bigoted, dogmatic clergy of the land; men who have a constituency behind them that can aid them in ascer taining just the kind of a law to be enacted to suit the necessities of the twentieth century; those who make human conditions a study from the standpoint of justice and human rights as near as they can understand. They do not always listen to the tales of the people and allow many laws enacted that are only for the benefit of the classes instead of the masses.
But upon this special kind of legislation they have done fairly well in the face of the clerical lobby they find they must endure at every session, for the liberation from bondage and its attendant crime the weaker sex, from the brutality and suffering thousands of wives and mothers. A man or woman with a brutal nature should never marry unless to join each other and fight it out without ruining

The Churches' Graft.

In ordinary civic and municipal af fairs, what is known as "graft" is regarded by all honest people as repre hensible and not morally defensible The exemption of church property from taxation is in the nature of a huge graft enjoyed by the churches, at the expense of the tax-payers. The Toledo Blade of a recent date has this to say anent this matter:

"The taxation of church property will become, some day in the future, an issue in this country. An investigation of the amount of such property, exempt from taxation, in the borough of Manhattan, which is New York City, excludng every portion of the city outside of Manhattan island, shows its aggregate value to be $150,173,700. This is an enormous amount of property, participating in all the benefits for which money raised by taxation is expended, yet paying nothing therefor. The distribution of this property among the different sects is interesting. All the Protestant church taken together own $82,521,000 worth of it, of which the Protestant Episcopal church owns $44,-303,500. This is accounted for by the. heavy holdings of the Trinity church. The Roman Catholics own $33,166, 600, the Hebrew congregations $11,339,500, the Christian Scientists $667,000, and those unclassified $1,512,000. The those unclassified $1,512,000. omes, etc., to the aggregate of $20,967,600. The property exempt in the borough of Manhattan is about one twenty-seventh of the entire taxable property. The aggregate of such untaxed property in the United States is enormous. There is really no valid reason that any kind of property in this country should be untaxed, except that which belongs to the United States, the state, the county, or the city."

ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

The Illinois State Spiritualists Association will hold its annual business convention with the Englewood Spiritual Union, at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West 63rd street, Chicago, Tuesday, October 13, 1903. Each one of its auxiliary societies is entitled to one delegate for every ten of its members, or major fraction of that number.

The first session will open promptly at two o'clock and continue until half-taken for social visiting and enjoyment of a basket dinner. The evening meeting will begin at half-past seven o'clock and include a programme of addresses music and message-giving.

Aside from the election of officers matters of importance will come up for consideration, among them proposed amendments as follows:

One changing date for the annual meeting to the third Wednesday in Feb-

One providing that individuals may become full voting members of the association by first pledging compliance with its constitution and by-laws and paying one dollar yearly into its treas-

One authorizing the official board to accept the resignation of any of its members when tendered and to fill by appointment all vacancies in its mem bership caused by death, resignation, or removal from the state, until successors are chosen at the succeeding annual meeting and duly qualified.

This convention will sound the keynote for the fall and winter campaign in Illinois. Every local society desiring help, or willing to help others, should be fully represented and send in its per capita contribution of twenty-five cents per member.

This meeting may appoint as delegate to the N. S. A. convention in Washington, a member from every local society which sends, in addition to the annual dues, the sum of two dollars, which goes to the supreme body. ELLA JOHNSON BLOOM, Morse, accompanied by his accomplished wife and daughter, passed through Chicago last Sunday, direct from the Pacific Coast, and on his way Morse stands in the very front ranks as a speaker and medium, and he should receive a most cordial welcome from Spiritualists wherever he may happen to go in this country. His home is in London, Eng., to which he will go at no distant day, having completed the cirhusband. This is the natural result of a most excellent work in Australia.

A STORM GENTER

Ranks of Spiritualism.

The Great Psychological Crime? Ever since the first issue of The Proressive Thinker we have endeavored to keep our readers thoroughly posted in everything pertaining to the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism. The Roman Catholic church, in medieval days, steeped in ignorance, bigotry, superstition, intolerance, cruelty and crime (and not much improved at present), exercised the "most tender" care over its adherents, designating the books they might read, the political methods they should pursue, and in many other ways arbitrarily directing their course in life. Such a system narrowed the minds of Catholics until they became contracted into exceedingly small dimensions, but nevertheless greatly strengthening them in the austere faith of their church—the great object desired.

With Spiritualists the condition of affairs is widely different. It would be idiotic-at least exceedingly foolish-to advise Spiritualists NOT TO READ THIS OR THAT BOOK, as it might to a certain extent weaken their belief in Spiritualism, and thus be a great injury to them. Equally impolitic would it be to carefully conceal from an investigator any book that might in the least, as you think, militate against the tendency of his mind to investigate the claims of Spiritualism. Let him read both sides, for and against, and then act as his understanding dictates. This is fair; this is honorable; this is just. By this method error will be banished, the right triumph and Spiritualism be the gainer, for it is founded on the Rock of Truth, Nothing can success fully oppose it.

The author of "The Great Psychological Crime" comes boldly forth, and with the dash of one who believes he is right, assumes an entirely new attitude in reference to hypnotism, mesmerism and mediumship, thus placing himself in DIRECT CONFLICT WITH WHAT HAS BEEN BELIEVED TO BE THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF OUR PHILOSOPHY. He SEES spirits, TALKS with spirits, CURES the worst cases of obsession, and in an unassuming manner, he PRESENTS his views to many cultured minds in Chicago, and is making, we were greatly surprised to learn, a decidedly favorable impression thereon

This important fact came to our notice, and after having had the book. "The Great Psychological Crime," before us for several weeks unopened, we finally concluded at last to carefully read it, to thoroughly digest it, and see if we could discover the cause of the mental disturbance and unrest in the horizon of the minds of so many thinking, well-meaning persons in Chicago Briefly stated, the author claims that he has witnessed the various phenomena that occur among mediums, and he not only believes, but absolutely knows. the same to be produced by spirits, but he claims, putting it mildly, that the MEDIUMISTIC PROCESS IS SUB-JECTIVE, AND THEREFORE UN-HEALTHY, AND IN SOME RESPECTS DEMORALIZING, AND MORE OR LESS DANGEROUS, AND NOT CONchurches own educational institutions, DUCIVE TO THE SPIRITUAL WEL-FARE OF THE MEDIUMS, THE RE-SULT IN MANY CASES BEING FAR FROM BENEFICIAL TO THEM IN THIS LIFE OR THE NEXT. The author, as well as others among the cultured and professional class of Chicago, claims that there is an INDEPENDENT METHOD, not in any sense induced or developed by spirits, whereby a person can at will see and talk with spirits, as easily and as freely as with mortals. These remarkable statements, emanating from those of the highest intelligence, caused us to wonder if mediumship had "been at sea" these fifty long years, not exactly what it ought to be in all respects, yet instrumental in doing a WORLD OF GOOD IN BRINGING IM-MORTALITY TO LIGHT, and illuminating the world as never before, and causing joy, happiness, peace and satispast five, when an intermission will be faction to prevail with those who were in darkness and trouble. Glorious cause truly!

MEDIUMSHIP INJURIOUS, THE SUBJECTIVE PROCESS OF SPIRIT CONTROL DANGEROUS, AND IF PERSISTED IN, UNHEALTHY, LEAD-ING TO RESULTS' NOT PROMOTIVE to one's welfare in this world or the next. Certainly a position easily under stood, and very impressive, and quite alarming to those who have always believed directly the opposite, AND WHO WILL BE EXCEEDINGLY SLOW TO BELIEVE OTHERWISE. They will demand the proof, clear, open, convincing, and unless that comes in due time, THE STORM CENTER BOOK will be relegated to the attic, there to remain, while The Progressive Thinker will go on its way ,smiling serenely, and wondering, "What next" will be in order, in getting up an excitement among Spiritualists, and making them think. And as we carefully and critically pondered over the subjective process of spirit control and development, as comprehensively presented to-day by our HIGHLY HONORED AND REVERED LEADERS AND MEDIUMS, we thought -perhaps there may possibly be a better way, a far easier way, a less cumbersome way in some respects to utilize; and we were reminded of the old stage conch, of the scythe and sickle, the old loom and spinning wheel, the old tallow dip, and numerous other things that had been displaced, (all exceedingly useful at one time), and then we asked, is it possible that the method of communicating by aid of the Ouija Board, Planchette, Tabletipping and various other ways, can be superseded by a far better process as hinted at by the author of "The Great Psychological Crime," or HAVE WE valuable intellectual feast we have ARRIVED ON THE FIRST TRIAL AT promised. You can not afford to stand THE LITTLE HYDESVILLE COT. in the rear destitute of the knowledge

SHABLE IN MEDIUMSHIP? and then we reflected on our ride in the old stage coach at six miles an hour, and the express train at 45 miles an hour, and in our own mind, secretly of course—not intended for the public to know, or any one to hear-in the solitude of our own chamber, we prayed that the windows of heaven might be opened wider. and an improvement on the present methods of conversing with those who have passed to the spirit realms, be made, if possible, at an early day, and our glorious land much beloved cause, so dear to our heart, be advanced in all respects to a higher and more sublime altitude. IT IS ALWAYS IN ORDER, WE, ASSUME, FOR ANYONE TO FERVENTLY DESIRE TO IM-PROVE PRESENT CONDITIONS, WHATEVER THEIR NATURE OR KIND MAY BE IN ANY DEPART. MENT OF LIFE. From our inmos soul we want to see improvement made in every department of Spiritualism, in every method of communicating | it. with spirits, and in propagating our glorious truths, and we believe that every true and honest Spiritualist in the land is in hearty accord with us.

Now in view of these silent cogitations, reflections, aspirations, and with a fervent desire to PROMOTE SPIRIT-UALISM, we are willing-every well meaning Spiritualist can not be otherwise than willing-to have present-day mediumship superseded with some thing better, if that be possible.

In view of the prominence that "The Great Psychological Crime" has as sumed and the views presented in reference to present day mediumship, we concluded to open our columns to a discussion of the subject, and will devote sometime during October, one entire paper thereto, thus illuminating the minds of Spiritualists with both sides of this important question. For N. S. A. President.

There are many important things to be considered in the selection of a new president of the N. S. A. at the coming election soon to be held in the Capital city of this nation, as also in the selection of the other officers, including the board of directors.

Regarding the selection of a president, there should be, first, capability; second, enthusiastic interest in the cause; third, determination; fourth, broadness and right motives and a reserve of modest dignity. Locality should have some influence also. However much we may respect Mr.

Barrett, as a unit the Spiritualists know that there are those in the ranks who can as ably fill the position he has filled for so many years with as much credit to themselves as has been wor by him.

It is foolish to look upon any one as "the only," and no doubt Brother Bar-rett will agree with the assertion that there are many yet untried in our ranks who can fit right into the position that was molded around him at the incep-tion of the N. S. A. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, has been suggested and the suggestion seconded for the position. In the first place it would be well to consider the location and the accessibility to all other localities to which the president is liable to be called and have need of going. Some have accused Mr. Warne of being opposed to mediumship, but this is WHOLLY UNTRUE, AND WITHOUT FOUNDATION IN FACT. Mr. Warne never uttered a word in private or in genuine, and that of itself ought to recommend him more highly than any other characteristic to the foremost consideration of all the Spiritualists of the convention,

He is first, last and all the time A SPIRITUALIST and as to the other aforenamed qualifications there can be no question by those who know him Mr. Warne is not seeking the office.

B. Warne.

When considering candidates for pres ident of the N. S. A., I hope all delegates will give thoughtful consideration to the merits of Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, now president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association. He is not only thoroughly qualified by long experience and wide acquaintance among Spiritualists, but he has amply demonstrated that he possesses the nec essary qualities that fit him for that important executive office. He is calm, well noised, eminently judicial in temperament, broad-minded, progressive, considerate of others and energetic. Dr. Warne distinguished himself as a true, loyal and determined Spiritualist in his three years' fight for honesty, decency and respectability against the worst gang of fakers, tricksters and frauds that ever operated in the name of Spiritualism. Had it not been for Dr. Warne the state of Illinois and Spiritualism at large would have been disgraced and humiliated by these scalawags operating under the official name of the Illinois State Spiritualists Asso-

Forel Defends Hypnotism.

Just at this time, when "The Great Psychological Crime" is creating somewhat of a commotion among Spiritualists and students of occult science, it will be of interest to note that Professor Forel, the eminent Swiss physician, whose book on suggestion and hypnotism is so authoritative, has begun a tremendous attack on the Prussian comed on the abuses of this branch of medhe has. But he is as strongly set ical science. Forel contradicts the asbertion of the German commission that hysterical persons can only be injured by the practice of hypnotic suggestion. A properly qualified and conscientious physician can only do good to such a patient, he asserts. His action will not weaken the patient's will power, but strengthen it by suggesting work or Theo. Schirmer, Sector Theo. strengthen it by suggesting work or fresh ideals of life.

Forel says, in conclusion, that there is absolutely no ground for the German specialists' contention that the success of this method of treatment has de creased since the belief in its supernatural character has vanished. Exactly the reverse is the case. The German commission is up in arms and is prepar-ing a rejoinder to Professor Forel.

"The Religion of the Future." By S. Well. This is a work of far more than ordinary power and value, by a bold, untrammeled thinker. Spiritualists who love deep, clear thought, reverent for truth alone, will be pleased with it. and well repaid by its perusal. For sale at this office. Price, looth $1; paper, 50 cents.

QUARTERLY REPORT

Of the Editor-at-Large, National Spiritualists Association.

To the Executive Committee N. S. A.: I report for the quarter commencing June 1 and ending September 1, the following articles and replies contributed to the spiritual press and secular jour-

It will be seen that I have made more use of the former than in the preceding quarter, as many of the attacks on Spiritualism have been in papers and magazines which would not admit replies, and hence the spiritual press was the only resort. As a rule, however, the secular press has been generous, as it must be admitted that it requires a strong sense of justice for an editor to allow a correspondent to attack editorial matter. Yet this has not only been done, but requests for articles on Spirit-ualism and related subjects have been repeatedly made.

Important Notices to National Association Auxiliaries.

State associations—having individual members—as well as subordinate soci-eties—are entitled to one delegate to the N. S. A. convention on their charter, and to one delegate for every fifty individual members or major fraction thereof; also, to one additional delegate for each society in good standing with the state association, provided the sum of two dollars has been contributed to the N. S. A. by said local society.

Amendments for Convention of 1903. Unfinished Business.—Cons. Article 10, change the word "thirty" on the fifth line to "sixty."

Amend—That a quorum for the transaction of business shall consist of a majority vote of duly accredited delegates. Presidential Candidates. As there will be several candidates for the office of N. S. A. president, so-cieties are requested to refrain from pledging their delegates to vote for any special person, although a preference may be expressed to the delegates by their societies. The election hour may present matters that will demand the exercise of the best judgment of the delegates in casting their votes, that the business may not come to a standstill, or to worse confusion.

that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth."-Prophet Isalah.

"But speak thou the things that become sound doctrine."-Paul to Titus.

"And the ark.... rested upon the Mountains of Ararat."-Moses.

"The world is my country; my religion is to do good,"-Thomas Paine.

The above passages constitute a trinity of individualities, each acting upon a specific plane of psychic unfoldment, with the mythic ark as a symbol. Individualities are permanent, while personalities are variant. Man in his innermost is a unit-a conscious spirit manifesting through million forces and forms. Light is one; and yet the one white ray that goes into the spectroscope manifests outwardly the seven colors and more. The limits of the red and yieletthe extremes to our eyes, are not in the sun, but in the limited vision of the human eye. The invisibles are often the most potent reals. Strange and strong forces all unseen, are playing about us, ranging from the demoniac to the an-

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that brings good tidings," exclaimed the old Hebrew prophet. Mountains symbolize solidity and silent power. They voice aspiration, saying, "come up higher, upon to these summits and bathe in our first morning sunbeams."

Sanchoniathon of Berytus, Confucius, Socrates, Jesus, Joan of Arc, Lilian Whiting of a country farm hillside among the lilacs, honeysuckles and roses that beautify the gardens of the Empire State— these and other great inspired souls left and are leaving a mighty spiritual impress upon the agone and the coming centuries.

The basic foundation of the Roman church is the authority traccable, it is claimed, through successive popes to the "Head of the Church." The foundation of Calvinism is the Divine Sovereignty, of the Unitarians reason, of the Quakers, the inner voice of conscience, of the Theosophists, reincarnation and karma, and of the Spiritualists, Spirit-absolute, and immutable, the synonym of consciousness, of life, of purpose, of will, wisdom and love-in a word, God, personal and impersonal, immanent in and through all immensities and elements, the all-perfect life-giver, rightly denominated the Incomprehensible One. The human mind can comprehend only that which is inferior to itself.

THE ABIDING FOUNDATION.

Spirit being the foundation, of which substances, atoms, and molecules are the varying shadows and multi-shaped garments, all abiding things must necessarily be spiritual rather than materiol. There is the shell, the soul, and the spirit of things, of which the orange may be a fitting illustration, the outer peel representing the shell, the more refined, well-rounded pulp, the soul, and the life-embodying seed the spirit-the latter afire with germinal force, prophetically symbolizing the future orange tree. The above figure may also descriptionally symbolize triune man-body, soul (soulbody), and spirit.

All permanent realities, such as thoughts, ideas, principles, laws, forces, attraction, gravitation, cohesion, are absolutely invisible. Even the atom, upon which science predicates, the molecule and the lofty mountain, and the far-distant planet, is unseen even to the microscopic eye. Are atoms demonstrated realities, or are they working hypoth-

WHAT IS KNOWN OF ATOMS?

Will some materialist, or materialistic spiritist, tell us what they know about atoms? Are they points of force, fluidic whirls, vortex rings, or hypotheses? It is Lord Kelvin's theory that matter is one measureless, homogeneous fluid, the rotating parts filling all space, the diversity being due to the arrangement of component whirls and vortices But arrangement implies force, motion, purpose.

To say that matter is a combination of atoms is only saying that it is a combination of unknowables. The philosoaid by way of definition that matter is that which is, it only specifies what matter does; but what makes it do? Do you say force? Aye, but what is force? Is it causative or negative, intelligent or non-intelligent? To pronounce it perfect autonomy in the arrangement of their own ecclesiasintelligent is to come squarely on to Theistic grounds. To affirm that it is not intelligent thrusts the carping negationist into the pitiable arena of logically accounting for the knowable, such as consciousness, life, purpose, order, from two unknowables, matter and force. Again, force cannot appear in a dynamical sense till there are two substances in dynamical relation—and now what caused the relation? Was it purpose or chance?

WHAT IS LAW?

Law is not causative. Natural laws are not creative. They originate nothing. They are methods of operation, not the thinking, reasoning operators. They belong to man in the sphere of limitations. They are processes, not consclous powers. The law of gravitation is among the undiscovered forces. No one knows what gravitation is. Newton did not discover it. He only discovered its uniform process of action. No philosophic mind confounds the process-the action with the cause of the action. To do so would be the essence of stupidity. No scientist doubts the reality of Newton's law of gravitation, by which every atom, near or remote, seemingly acts instantaneously upon every other atom; but this invisible law does not pretend to act where matter is not. At best, all matter is but variously graded substance, visible or invisible. Its ubiquity in some state of being is unquestioned. Some savants, however, have unwisely questioned its reality. This is an extreme view. Manipulated and condensed, it becomes palpable. invisible steam converted into ice is an interesting example.

THE INFILLING ETHER.

F Science postulates the existence of an ethereal medium the ether of space, through which heat, light, and other forms of radiant energy are transmitted. This ether is said to be as pliable as air, infinitely elastic, frictionless, more rigid than steel, solid as adamantine—and yet, is absolutely invisible, invisible as are the intelligences that people the spaces above and around us. The five senses are not altogether illusive, as the Hindu Vedantists would say, neither are they infallible guides. They point toward, they assist. they are helps to the attainment of phenomenal facts and psychic truths.

While there is a corelation of physical forces; while heat light, chemical affinity, etc., may be converted into each other, they are never transformed into consciousness. Upon this fact scientists are in agreement. This would be as morally impossible as that abandoned theory, "spontaneous generation," which Huxley, Tyndall, Beale, Coues, Lodge, Virchow, Tonnebaum, and other authoritative scientists pronounced after a long series of crucial experiments, unproyen and more, an utter impossibility! An egg manufactured from wood, or stone, and one produced by a barnyard fowl. though in shape, color, and weight precisely alike, are not convertible into each other, neither are they equally productive.

SENSATION AND THE SENSES.

The physical senses have to do with the objective in nature, with the physical body, which is a microcosm of the I thly elements, and the auras from which it is composed mat evolved, and the constituents of which may be proximately determined by scientific analysis. The body does not feel; the eye does not see; but the conscious spirit feels through the body, sees through the eye, and hears clairaudi-. 138

Pure Spirit, in conscious activity, is the standard of truth, the advanced races. Though not the ultima thule—though erhood. not a finality, it is in harmony with the great law of evolution, and the perpetual ministry of angels. It is in agreement with pure reason. It is in accordance with the heart's sweetest hopes, and in consonance with the soul's highest belligerent spiritists who deny the existence of God and inspirations. Its higher, nobler thoughts are found in the inspired teachings of all religious books, whether of the Orient or of the Occident, and its sacred voice to each mortal is, "Live to-day for to-day, for to-morrow, for eternity!"

THE SUNNY SIDE OF THE CHURCHES.

So far we have dwelt upon the philosophy and sunny side of Spiritualism. But the churches have their sunny sides, and should not sunbeams mingle and work with sunbeams? In the aggregate, Christian churches are bulwarks of good said he would join any church whose essentials were love to morals, and reform. They have their uses. They are our brothers and their motives are good. Wisdom does not denounce. The builder is preferable to the waster. Demolish, then, neither church-edifice nor cathedral, but build the better, the more beautiful and spiritual by their sides. Invite them to come into our temples. It is not the rough winter winds that relieve the tempest-swept trees of their dry leaves, but the warm spring sunshine.

SEARCHING FOR THE GOOD.

In this age of search and research, people generally find what they hunt for. If they seek for roses and violets, they find them. Let us apply this principle to the churches. The Roman Catholic church testifies against wrong doing, honors the virgin mother, prays for the dead, teaches purgatorial progress, approved through Leo XIII., of the higher criticism, and encourages the ennobling work done by the Sisters of Charity.

The Episcopal church, in its four-fold forms of manifestation the ritualistic, high church, low church and broad church, functioning under different aspects in different countries, urges all men to live the upright, spiritual life, using forms, symbols, ceremonies and superior music for the accomplishment of such ends.

Methodism is a religious enthusiasm made practical. The Wesleys were ministered to from the intelligences of the the higher world. Methodism's devotion to freedom, to tempher Berkeley denied in toto the existence of matter. Is if perance, to reforms, with its organizations for specific work occupies space; but this does not aid in telling what matter clusive proof of their sincerity. I relish their enthusiastic hallelújahs!

Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Baptists exercise tical affairs, combining liberty with their religious convictions; their missionary movements, their benevolent work in erecting homes for the orphan and the aged are worthy of all commendation.

The Unitarians, cultured, clear-headed and ethical, invite us to their Sunday literary feasts. These are nutritive, classical, and comforting. They preach the Fatherhood, and extol the brotherhood of all races and colors.

The New Churchmen, pointing backwards to Swedenborg, who for twenty-seven years held converse with angels, spirits and demons, tenders the world the key of correspond- their victims into lunatic asylums. Though as sorrowfully ence, declaring that biblical passages, all external objects, in fact, relate to a spiritual state of consciousness, which if understood, inspires reverence and purity of life.

The Salvation Army, noisy, plain in dress, pure in purpose, well-organized, vigorous in moral battle against wrong, gathering in an outcast there, a reeling drunkard here, redeeming and training them for usefulness, is proof that the lowest of the erring may be reached and redeemed.

The Quakers, abiding by the inner light, emphasizing the promptings of the spirit and its superiority over books, beads and shrine-inviting pilgrimages, insist upon the principles of peace, brotherhood, personal veracity, self-control, punctuality in keeping promises, and living an orderly life.

The Shakers, harbingers of those epiphanous manifestations that supplanted a dim, half-hopeless, churchianic faith, with the knowledge of a future, conscious existence, have from the days of Mother Ann pronounced woman the equal of man. Their industry and exquisite neatness, their arbitration principles, their worshipful marching to music, their apostolic church in Jerusalem, solve the problem of equality and the long prophesied practicability of the golden rule. The Disciples, or Christians (now called), shine as bright, liberal cluster of stars in the constellation of religious denominations. They have no creed. They take the New Testament as their guide. They are broad-minded and devotional. Theosophists, Mr. Leadbeater being the Anglo-American expounder, are largely our co-workers, and constantly coming nearer to us. Already do our palms touch,

NOAH'S ARK.

These ecclesiastical denominations constitute a veritable twentieth century "Noah's Ark," full of all kinds of struggling life-and all life on whatever plane relates directly or remotely to the Divine Life. But where are the Mountains of Ararat for the life-laden Ark to rest? Human beings are wandering-where is the true path? They are heart-sickwhere is the physician? They are weary—where is the resting-place? Yes! they are pilgrims seeking a shrine, passengers sailing on the billowy ocean of time—who is the pilot? balm. Where is the port? Are the dark waters of materialism subsiding? Is there no sign-no voice from the abyss-no demonstration?

Why doubt? Why fear? See! from the anchored Ark in heaven above, the combined hierarchies of celestial angels in counsel, there comes a dove-a message-bearing dove, with an olive branch in its beak! It is a prophecy and a message, and this blessed, brilliant message is Immortality -the good tidings of a future life demonstrated; in brief Spiritual truth realized as rooted in God, who is Infinite Spirit, and in man, who is essentially a finite spirit,

OUR ENNOBLING AIM.

In'using the word "our," I have no reference to those few Christ, and who ridicule prayer and that religion whether Oriental or Occidental, which makes for righteousness. Ephraim is joined to his dols, negation and destructionpitying him, we pass on,

Speaking of "our," I refer to the consensus of the world's mind over matter, and function in the coronal rather than the basilar brain region. The religious sentiment is innate in human nature. It is reported of Abraham Lincoln that he God and love to man. And the patriotic and pronounced Theist, Thomas Paine, declared that his "religion was to do ing to crown with victory. good." What a grand sentiment!

As Christianity was an outgrowth from Judaism, so Spiritualism was an outgrowth from Christianity. Its birth-manger was in a Hydeaville family of Methodists. Not churchianity, but Christianity and Spiritualism constitute the old and new testaments which demonstrate a future life, and insist that holiness is essential to happiness in all worlds. Neither of them is a finality. The divine fountain is infinite. The wisest have but touched the edge of the broad-sweeping ocean of truth. W

If the genius of the Spirit be progress-if it be love and toleration and social equality of opportunities—if its purpose be to enlighten and spiritualize, then our attitude towards all religious denominations must be that of the tenderest brotherliness. We should meet them more than halfway, and then show forth the practical excellences of our angelic converse and fellowship.

To profess and not possess is hypocrisy. Are not all reigionists our fellow-citizens, and do they not have some truths? Are they not just as conscientious as we are? just as true to their convictions, just as honorable in their dealings, just as neighborly in their social life, just as benevolent, self-sacrificing and manly as ourselves?

These rude seances are all too often the manufacturers of frauds and physical wrecks, and worse, they are the dismal dens of obsessions, leading to, if not plunging as sincere, I say deliberately that in my opinion seven-tenths of the insane in mad-houses are the obsessed subjects of visible or invisible hypnotists.

Whether incarnate or discarnate, these hypnotists are often selfish, gross and unclean. Some of them are very vampires. The psychic aura enveloping them is gray and cloudy, or dark as the shadows of Erebus. Their hypnotic touch is spiritually poisonous.

No psychic experimentalist ever confounds hypnotism and nesmerism. They are as unlike as spiritism and Spiritualism, or as selfish commercialism and altruistic socialism.

Spiritualism is absolutely non-sectarian. Its grand purpose was, as I conceive it, to demonstrate the fact of a future existence, and substitute the "I know," for the "I believe,"-to differentiate religion from creed, and all church dogmas; to enjoin scientific and secular education, rather than theological training; to lay the axe at the root and lead in all needed reforms; to selze upon and assimilate every new thought that is a true thought; to put conduct and character in place all things in common after the principle of the primitive of class or caste, whether based on blood or gold; to quicken the innate moral nature, to inspire free thought and discov ery, to spiritualize humanity, and establish the wide world over the great principles of justice, mercy, equality of opportunity, and universal brotherhood.

THE SPIRIT WORD OF HEALING.

When the Syrian woman touched the "hem" of Christ's garment, it is reported that "he felt virtue (mesmeric force) go out of him," and the so felt, so consciously cognized this because he was the very soul of virtue, goodness and purity, Such great messengers, whether Christed of old, or the Christed of to-day, carry with them a health-giving force, not only in their garments but in their calm, materially untouched presence. They heal unconsciously by their per sonal magnetism. The also heal by suggestion, by faith and by will-power. "I will," said Jesus, "be thou clean." Writing to an invalid friend, Emerson said, "I beseech you to be well." These words werd as winged arrows. They sped on the other waves of vibration with a healing, harmonizing

"I have nothing new to tell about the phenomena of Spirityou what my Spiritualism has led me to. It has led me to a method of helping the struggling poor to help themselvestoilers upon the firm foundation of such altruistic principles, as when actualized, shall make daily home life a blessing

"Give us your help," writes the eloquent Willard J. Hull, editor of the Light of Truth, "so that the twentieth century may find Christ's gospel, Christ's economics, Christ's manliness, Christ's patience, for the first time, in the history of Spiritualism, the one working hypothesis of those who call themselves Spiritualists,"

Lillan Whiting, the brilliant writer and author, thus adds her testimony: "True Spiritualism is simply the result—the inevitable result of the full acceptance of the spiritual teachings of Jesus, of the love his presence inspired, of the authority of the inspirations of the Bible, and of the latter day revelations of science."

The erudite Dr. E. D. Babbitt, in his magnificent work, Religion as Revealed in the Material and Spiritual Universe," when afire with the spirit of truth, wrote:

"The Christ of Nazareth, standing upon that spiritual wave of old, baptizing with the Spirit and with magnetic fire, winnowed the chaff from the wheat, and laid the 'axe on the root of the tree' of Pharasaic pride, selfishness, and corruption Each of us should live out the golden rule in daily life, and lay up spiritual treasures in heaven.... There is an unsurpassed sweetness in these expressions of his, 'Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart. Blessed are the peace-makers; blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven, a heaven here and now.

In its infinite reach and broad, vibrating expanse, Spirit ualism means the manifesting God, the motherhood of na ture, and the brotherhood of man. It means this hour, this day and its duties-this day, and rightly making the most of it. It means the to-morrow-a future life-eternity. It means the energizing, overshadowing potency of the liberalillumined—to those who have achieved some mastery of the izing movements that gladden humanity under all skies. It means toleration, sympathy, brotherhood, temperance, anticapital punishment, woman's suffrage, equality of opportunity, co-operative socialism, arbitration and international peace, the higher Theosophy, the new thought, and every other grand, redemptive movement that the gods are wait-

Putting in the background all non-essentials, and Oriental speculations, our real needs are unity of purpose, concord of action in all constructive work and benevolent enterprises, whether initiated by ourselves or by the various religious denominations of the country. It is not dogma, but lovethe cement of love that unites. Every one's honest convictions should be respected. None are infallible. It was Franklin in those old colonial times who told the Americans that if "they did not hang together, they would hang separately." Certainly, in union there is strength, and temporal organizations for the dissemination of such great principles as the innate, infinite worth of man, and the grandeur of his destiny, are necessities. Forget the lines of the old hymn-

'Would he devote his sacred head for such a worm as I?"-

This is the withering, wormy philosophy of a pitiful pessimism. Man is not a worm, but an embryo angel, a royal prince, germinally a son of God. "It doth not yet appear," wrote the apostle, "what we shall be." Wayside weeds when cultivated by tender hands become garden flowers.

"MEDIUM" ABANDONED.

Setting aside just now the thought and knowledge of fakes and fraud infestations under the name of mediums, and forgetting the mediumistic wrecks that once posed decidedly praiseworthy. The zeal of Methodists is con- ualism? They are manifold. And among them the artifi- that the word "medium" is not the most appropriate word to cial scheme of "developing mediums," of "teaching slate apply to those who consciously, or unconsciously function bewriting," of believing the "thus saith" of every spirit, of tween the worlds visible and invisible. It is too coarse and opening the brain's doors to every wandering ghost, of hypmaterial. It is too devoid, by general usage, of sensitivenotizing one another for development, of giving up the en- ness. A door-hinge is a medium for a swinging door. A tire personality to the control of unseen entities behind the railway is a medium for freight and cattle conveyance. A

The more proper words and terms, considering the moral ment, are sensitives, seers, or psychic intermediaries. These words philologically considered, admit of the widest and deepest significance, and those worthy of them become spiritual kings and queens—the message bearers from an enzoning, overarching cloud of witnesses, the Olympian lindens gracing the mountain tops, catching the first rising sunbeams of inspiration and transmitting them downward to feed the hungering souls of humanity!

A VOICE FROM THE SILENCE.

To your tents, O Israel! the Israel of to-day, and listen. On a mossy line of marble pillars fronting Herod's temple off from the court of the Gentiles, was inscribed in Greek and Latin, "No foreigner may go farther under penalty of death." Sad is the reflection that the old Herodian era has not yet utterly perished. Walls of ancient, and fences of feudal times still exist. They exist between countries, religions and families. But thanks to the Supreme God, no mercenary aristocrat, no Oriental caste, nor soul-shriveled bigot can fence away God's summer showers, still the music of forest birds, nor bottle up the odors of the million flowers that heartless syndicates and multi-millionaires selfishly call "mine-mine."

The era of "ours-ours" is coming. The resurrection trumpet has sounded. Those that have rightly attuned ears to hear already hear.

The burden of the voice is silence—the Gospel of the Spirit to me, to you, to scientists, religionists and reformers, is—unfold and widen, or wither, grow or die Your feet may bleed in the march, but go on. Accept the good and the true from whatever source, and appropriate it. Call nothing in the field of uses common or unclean; under the crumbling skeleton the grasses are green. The sheeted snows of winter protect the soil-tillers' wheat. Temporary failures point to coming successes, and the tears of evening oft crystallize ere morning into purest diamonds.

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Nincty-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronis catarn of the throat and middle car. The inner car cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of surists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarn is demonstrated every day by the une of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarn. Actina is sent on trial, postpaid. Call or write us about your case. We give advice free and positive proof of cures. CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor sione responsible for any assertions or statements be may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. WRITE PLAINLY .- We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to in-sure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Juliet H. Severance, M. D., writes: 'On my return from Mt. Pleasant Park camp, I saw a poem I have known for years and that has been greatly admired where I have recited it. I sent it to your paper for publication as an anonymous poem, and was surprised to find mysname attached to it. I wish I could write such a poem." Mrs. Severance is correct. Her name was not signed to the poem. Being in her handwriting, the printer attached her name thereto, and is wholly responsible for the error. Mrs. Severance is entirely innocent of any intentional wrong.

Prayers were offered by previous arrangement in Texas churches that the farmers of the state may have their fields cleared of the boll weevil pest, which is destroying the cotton crop. The Texas people misunderstood the character of their delty. Jehovah is accredited with sending plagues on his children, but it is not recorded that he ever stayed one by request.

W. A. Smith writes from Warsaw, Ind.: "G. W. Kates and wife have been with us the past week and gave us some grand, good lectures and messages from the spirit side, which have set this orthodox town thinking. They were well received by the community. We hope to have them with us again."

Louis Cohen writes: "The Progressive Thinker of Sept. 5 contains a communication from Mr. Hudson Tuttle on the subject of 'Recent Exposures.' referring to two exposed by the Chicago newspapers he makes the following declaration: Like all sleight-of-hand performers, Homes and Fay dictate what these conditions shall be, and if not complied with the 'manifesta-tions' fail to appear." Am I justified in inferring from this that those mediums who fail in manifestations, in cases where the conditions they dictate are not complied with, are perpetrators of fraud? The inference seems a logical

Geo. Thomas writes: "The First Society of Spiritualists of Royersford, Pa., is still progressing. We re-opened our meetings September 6, after being closed for the summer months. Mrs. Stella Herbine, of Reading, Pa., delivered a very fine discourse on the Spiritual Philosophy. Mrs. Herbine is a refined young lady of great promise to the cause, as trance speaker and other-wise."

L. S. Burdick writes: "After a two weeks sojurn at Clinton (Iowa) camp, enjoying the beautiful scenery, the highly intellectual and instructive lectures, forming many pleasant acquaint-ances, and after visiting friends in Chicago we return to our rural home in Kalamazoo, Mich., greatly improved spiritually and mentally." The Theosophist is kind to Dr Peebles; and incidentally administers to us a caress and a caution. It says:

"The able exponent of Spiritualism, Dr. Peebles, has sent us his latest book on that subject. It is an effort to give Spiritualism a better place among the isms of the day; to establish its rights to have its theories looked upon as scientific. The author says: 'Spiritualism is the philosophy of life—and the direct antithesis of materialism...Spiritualism does not create truth, but is a living witness to the truth of a future existence.' Assuredly Spiritualism has done much for the advancement of spiritual knowledge, for the human mind is so constituted that it must have proofs of the existence of the soul after the death of the physical body had to be given before men could be so satisfied of that future life as to be willing to study its conditions and prepare themselves to meet them. This Spiritualism has done. Yet it is to be regretted that the very nature of the proofs and the ease with which fraud could be committed, has induced many persons to simulate the genuine phenomena by trickery, and thus to turn away and disgust so many who would otherwise have been glad to investigate its claims. Dr. Peebles quotes sentences from a number of well-known men who believe in the phenomena of Spiritualism, and who also believe that it is a power which will greatly aid in the regenera-tion of religious beliefs."—Light.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "Disappointments do not trouble the Hyde Park Occult Society in regard to speakers, for we have some of the finest talent that we can ask for connected with our society, and on last Sunday evening Mr. Smith gave us some nice thoughts in the poems he recited. Dr. Cross followed by a poem entitled Mr. Display, upon which he made some excellent remarks. Mr. Hearst's Daily American is now preaching to Christians a holy war against the Turk, who, the paper says, must be driven out of Europe. Nothing flercer than the American's utterances on this subject has been heard since the late Bishop Cox published his "Forward the Cross" poetry. Doubtless the sultan is conducting a merciless campaign, but it is against Christians whose joy is to practice barbarities on the Turk as fiendish as those they themselves suffer.-Truth Seeker.

Frank A. Nugent writes from Beaver Falls, Pa.: "On October 4, our society opens its hall once more. We expect reat things during the winter season. During the meetings last season we stirred up the people in general so that they are very anxious to know when our hall opens again. All our members have been very faithful in attending our socials held every two weeks at some member's home. Many of our members spent some time at the camps, and all have enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content. The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "Disregard of all superstition attached to the number '13' was shown by a convention of undertakers held at the Stratford Hotel. Thirteen manufacturing undertakers from thirteen states arrived at the hotel yesterday morning to hold their annual convention. They asked the clerk to direct them to the parlor for which they had telegraphed, and to their amazement, even the boldest turning pale, the clerk summoned a bellboy and said, 'Show these gentle-men to No. 13.' After a hurried consultation they conferred with the clerk only to learn that they were being given the one parlor vacant at the time, and that if they did not hold their convention in it, regardless of the number. they would be obliged to go elsewhere 'Who is afraid?' said one at last, and followed by the others, he led the way to the room. The Kansas City Journal says: "The remarkable typewriting achievements of pretty Mary Pretty, of Washington, which have recently attracted wide attention, are completely overshadowed by those of a Kansas shade. This highy accomplished spook is declared to be able to write 1,000 words a minute, more than sixteen a second. The typewriting wraith is, according to the story, a 'materialization' by W. W. Aber, a professional medium of Spring Hill, Kans., who has been conducting a series of sensational seances in his native village recently. During these seances, so the story goes, the spirit plies the typewriter keys at a marvelous rate, and turns off page after page of manuscript in a fashion that would give the spring poet a fit of envious rage. The object of all this rapid work by the ghosts is to produce some books which presumably disclose everything concerning the other world. It is stated that the spirits come right out into the light at the Aber seances, take a pencil and pad of paper, If they merely want to make notes, or otherwise sit at the machine and turn out 'copy' at a rate to make one's head swim. In the latter case the dictator stands inside the cabinet,' but the operator is in plain sight, the people present often hearing the two talking. If the machine gets out of order the spirit at once repairs it and goes on with his work. The spirits which frequent the Aber seances also paint pictures, which are considered marvels of art by believers, although to the dispassionate observer the reproductions seen of some of them look as few drawing lessons might evolve as good ones."

Some one writes from Massachusetts to us (cannot decipher his name), apol-gizing for the Catholic church. He "The late Pope Leo was a Spiritваув: ualist; not one of the kind that tips over tables and jugles with our dearest affections. He was a seer. He saw spirits and conversed with them. The Catholic church is doing a great work along the line of lifting men up. She may have some idiotic ideas, to be gotten rid of. We know some of them are moss-covered and outgrown, and yet she will live when all others go by the board, for she is founded on the love of humanity, and the preservation of the family. The family is the foundation of all governments; destroy it and you have anarchy. Bear in mind one thing, that Catholicism is the true discoverer of Spiritualism, and long ages before the Fox sisters were born. We do not fully endorse everything that is taught by our church, but we recognize that every system has its weak points."

The Republican of Marshalltown, lowa, says: "A fair day and pleasant temperature enabled the people of Marshalltown to enjoy an outing at the Spiritualists' camp-meeting on North Third street. In the forencon the platform was occupied by Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, of '1 exas, whose ability as an improvisationist of poetry has given her a national reputation. Mrs. Brown spoke on the laws and principles of mediumship. Mr. Stewart is a lawyer by profession and a close scientific student, and it is his aim to show that spiritual phenomena, so-cailed, are simply natural-phenomena governed by natural law, and hence separable to scientific classification and investigation. He claimed that the late developments in science, the discovery of wireless telegraphy, the X-ray, telephones and electric lights and electric power were in the line of spiritual phenomena, and that viewed from this standpoint a future life was a necessary corollary of this life and was no more remarkable than the facts of this present existence. Mr. Stewart repudiates the supernatural and claims that Spiritualism is not a religion but a science. He claims that science awakens in the soul a casinic emotion which lifts it to a higher altitude of spirituality than can any creed or doctrine, because all true religion must be based on fact. He showed that all such phenomena could be explained on the principles of vibration using the laws of heat, light, color and sound for his illustration. This lecture was followed by a test seance by Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, of Kentucky, who for more than an hour described spirits and gave full names and answers to questions while blindfolded. In the evening Mrs. Brown gave a fine address on 'Spirit and Matter,' and was followed by Mrs Eva McCoy with spirit messages and tests. Mrs. McCoy is a very fine platform medium and does excellent psychic work. The attendance at the camp was very good in the after-oon and evening.' Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, Sunday evening, special seats had to be provided to accommodate the crowd that came to hear Dr. Beteiro explain some of the mysteries of the Bible. Three special numbers of music were rendered by fine solists. The new pianist is from Canton, Ohio. young boy, he is a prodigy in his line. series of 'Chalk Talks' on Spiritual Science will be given afternoons, to lead the conference and instruct the classes being formed. One of the best trumpet mediums in the city has been secured to give a seance every Friday evening at the Doctor's office, 44 East 31st street, near Cottage Grove avenue. These manifestations are honest and yery wonderful."

To those who attended my meetings last winter I want to say that they will be welcome to do so again and I shall be glad if they will bring their friends with them." The Boston Post states that Mrs. Mary Livermore, the noted temperance worker, the famous advocate of women's rights, the authoress of a numberof books, and one of the best known lecturers on the American platform, is a spiritualist. The following are some of ductions seen of some of them look as the experiences which convinced Mrs. though any schoolboy who had taken a Livermore of the truth of Spiritualism: "My attention was turned toward Spiritualism many years ago, when the celebrated Fox sisters were making demonstrations. Since then I have been investigating this doctrine, and within the past few years I have had experiences enough to convince me of the truth of this belief. In 1891 I was on a lecturing tour in the West. When I went into the Sherman House, the proprietors, with whom I was well acquainted, told me there was a certain Mrs. Blake, of California, who wished to see me on a very important matter. I did not know her, and she had never seen me before She came to my room. Immediately the tables, even the large double bed began to twist and move. 'I see all these things are due to your influence,' said 1. 'Do not cause the spirits to break that mirror, as that would be a needless exponse to me. 'Do not fear that, she answered; but I want to tell you to cancel all your engagements for December 28, 29 and 30 of this year. There is death in sight.' 'Do you imagine that I shall be such a goose,' I re plied, and laughed at her. 'But tell me what you see?' Then she went into a trance and told me that an old lady of whom I was very fond would die. She said she saw a casket and an easel with a man's portrait close beside it, and a large box in which was a wreath with six roses lying upon the table. She went further and described a small child being lifted by its mother to look at the face of the dead woman, and recoiling after kissing the cold face. It all happened just as she described it. I at the dinner. She was taken sick during the evening and died on the 28th. The affair turned out as Mrs. Blake had said and I was obliged to cancel my engagements.' J. O. Stephens writes: "The Spiritual Science Church of St. Joseph, Mo., discontinued its hall meetings July 1. We have been holding weekly socials at the homes of different members during the hot weather, which have been well attended; will again open our hall meetings the first Sunday in October. I would like to correspond with some good medium with a view of arranging with them for their services for fall and winter meetings. Adress me at the Hotel Windsor, St. Joseph, Mo."

Dr. W. O. Knowles, of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes: "Our camp at Reed's Lake has just closed, and it was a successful venture spiritually and financially under the management of our good mediums, D. A. Herrick and wife. Sadie Herrick. It is an ideal spot over-hanging Reed's Lake. Our local mediums took part and did everything in their power to aid on the program. J. B. Hatch, Jr., gave us our instructions concerning the marching, etc. His wife acted as guardian, and Miss Susie Bicknell, of the Brockton lyceum was assistant. Mesdames Wyman Paige, Harris, Fuller, Smith, Kimball mer Onset lyceum, was planist for us, and filled the position in a quiet, faithful way that earned her the respect of all. Every one was kind. The children were lovely. Full of fun at times? Certainly! But they were loving and lov-

from his work on the platform, and ible world which is 'so near and yet so gave us the benefit of his singing—and we all rejoiced over his goodnes We had picnics and entertainments

The latter were made more interesting and pleasing, for we had the help of the Hatch Brothers, who have done so much for all good causes in and outside of Spiritualism. So when their entertainment came all went and gave them what they justly earned and deservedplause, and appreciation of their efforts to please. They are advancing in their chosen work rapidly.
Our picnic! It was a success. But we were much indebted to good Dr. Kimball and his earnest little wife. They worked hard and faithfully from beginning to end.

In behalf of the work, Mrs. Wyman, Mrs. Ring and Miss Ames offered rooms. Miss Walcott, of New York, and Mrs. Smith, of Sandwich, gave table board. I can only say thankfully, that if kings and queens want to be better served, they do not know how to appreciate the good things of this world. The efforts of the friends resulted in paying me financially as well as mentally. It will always remain a most pleasant memory with me. Before closing this lengthy report, let me say there is great need of lessons for the young. And I am going to write some, so that if I am ever again in a lyceum where it is needed, I shall have something that can be understood by the children under 12 years.
I find that new lyceums feel the same as I do. I am often asked for books that contain easy lessons. So I mean to arrange some that will be available, f I ever again need them. Greeting to all the lyceums. Persevere. Move on. Help the children and the future will bring reward.

Yours for the children. C. FANNIE ALLYN.

Wisconsin Spiritualists, Attention. To the Editor:-Will you permit me to use the columns of your valuable paper, in order that I may reach the many Spiritualists of Wisconsin, in the interest of Spiritualism in their state. The work this fall looks very encour aging, but it cannot be made as successful as we wish without the hearty co-operation of all who are intereste in the cause. I would like to hear from every Spiritualist or sympathizer who may happen to read these words. Spiritualists, will you not show your interest in the work of organization, by ing personal members, if you are not already one, or by renewing your membership, if you have not done so this year?

Furthermore, will you not write either to myself, or our worthy president, Rev. Nellie K. Baker, of Portage, Wis.? We want to hear from every locality where there are a few Spiritualists, or even one or two. If you want meetings, write and tell us what you think can be done in your vicinity. We are striving to place the missionary work upon a substantial basis, and if you as Spiritualists are willing to meet us half way, we will succeed in placing the work of this state in better condition than it has yet been.

We have the grandest philosophy in the world. Let us show that we appreciate it by placing it before the people in the proper light. We can do it, and with your help we will do it. No matter where you are, write me or Sister Baker, or better still, write both of us. If you want to know anything of the objects of the state association, we will be glad to give the information. Your state association desires to reach every community in the state. Cannot you aid us in doing so? Don't mind if you cannot do it all alone. Write and tell us what you can do. Let us join hands all over the state for the advancement of Spiritualism, and see how quickly we can rally to the work, and go forward. Every personal member gives financial and moral aid. It is but a small thing, but of small things great ones are evolved. Do you want to see Spiritualism grow in Wisconsin? If you do, write, and do it now. We are determined to push the work, to place it on a footing that will command the respect of those outside of the ranks as well as those within. How much are you interested in the philosophy that comes as a consoling element in your life in times of sorrow? Do you care for it enough to spend one dollar a year in its support? If you do, will you not begin by sending in your applications for membership NOW?

You are not ashamed of the fact that you are a Spiritualist are you? Then why stand back when you can do some-thing to help the good work along? If you want a visit from the secretary, or president, or any of the representatives of the state association. write us at once, as we are arranging our itinerary, and you will save time by writing soon.

Let us be up and doing, for there is work that we must do. We have confidence in the Spiritualists of Wisconsin, and believe they will come forward in the good work. It is not tomorrow, but NOW is the time for cooperation.

Awaiting your co-operation and applications for membership, your donations to the good cause, and your application for meetings, I am, Yours for Spiritualism, WILL J. ERWOOD, Secretary W. S. S. A.

CAMPS AND CONVENTION

Notes of Interest From Will J. Erwood

Some time has elapsed since the read ers of The Progressive Thinker have had a report from me, so will try now and keep up my reputation by submit-ting one, even at this late day. You have already had quite an extensive re-port of the Waukesha camp, hence there is little need for me to dwell upon it very much. Though not largely at-tended, it certainly was one of the most harmonious camps I have ever attended and I believe the influence for good was much larger than that which came from

At this camp meeting, steps were taken for the formation of a camp association, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the eastern camp. This divorces the state association from camp-meetings, in so far as its responsibility to me seems so important a step in the right direction, that I have come as near praying a prayer of thanks, as I have in the past tell years. In my opin-ion state associations and camp-meet-

From Waukeslia I went to Wonewoc, to meet with the friends of that town, and with those who had come from the distance. Here also the keynote was harmony, as in spite of the elements, which seemed continually in revolt, the attendance at the meetings was good, and the enthusiasm marked. During the first week of this camp, Mrs. Georworker, and to say she acquitted herself with credit to self and the cause, would be putting it too mildly. Her work was excellent, and many friends

The success of this camp-meeting can be judged, when I say, that in spite of the inclemency of the weather, it paid expenses and left something in the

Addison Wood. Q. What is the value of the life of Jesus by Alexander

A. It rests on the basis of all spirit communications, and can only judged of by it own internal evidence. Because claiming to be from a spirit intelligence, should not prejudice the mind, causing the book to be given more value than if written by a mortal man. Its story of Jesus is quite new, plausible and startling, yet it must be admitted that beyond its own words there is no correlative evidence that it is true. All communications must be confirmed by their own merits, and the fact that they are from a spirit source does not confer infallibility. It is evident to prove the narrative contained in this "Life of Jesus," is quite impossible from this side, and the testimony of spirits would be of the same quality as that of the spirit writer. In other words the evidence, however, valuable, of such nature that is not allowable

H. E. Pomeroy: Q. Is Dr. Dowie a prophet? Have his followers made a mistake in giving up their wealth to him, or have they made a good bargain by unloading their sins, diseases, by giving up their wealth?

Were it not for the notoriety Dowle has gained, and his success in drawing in the credulous and foolish, he would be beneath consideration. As it it, he is a startling example of the forces and means by which religions are started. The present age is too enlightened for the full success of such men, but there are always people, su-perstitious and falsely educated, who are unable to go on without leaders. These blindly follow, and their reason appears to be completely dominated by the will of their leaders.

Dowie has a low-bred, and sensual isce, and all his claims of supernatural assistance are false, his sermons are fargons of doctrines.

Wm. Frost:Q. What is painters' colic, and the remedy?

A. It is simply lead-poisoning, caused by absorption of lead in the come soiled and the pores absorb, or the lead is conveyed to the mouth. Lead is one of the cumulative and constitutional poisons. When it enters the system it stays, and however slow the process by which addition is made, there comes a time when its full force is experienced. In the past when painters procured the dry lead and prepared the paint, the danger of poisoning was much greater than at present, when the paints are ready for use. If ordinary cleanliness served, lead-poisoning will not trouble the painter. There is no anti-dote, and the treatment of physicians is a temporary makeshift and experiment: Opiates to control the pain, cathartics iodides and sulphuric acid, given with the forlorn hope to reduce the lead soluble form and thus eliminate it through the secretions. A diet of acid fruits, and hygienic living, if persevered will alleviate, and cure, unless the disease develops at the decline of life In view of the obstinacy of this poison, the greatest care should be taken not to introduce it into the sys-

What works did he publish? A. (1) D. D. Home was born near Edinburgh (Scotland) March, 1833. He was a medium from infancy. At four he had visions and at eighteen came before the public with his wonderful manifestations.

At the age of 22 years he went to England. He was unknown, except as reports of his mediumistic faculties had gone before him. When his arrival was known, Lord Brougham was among the first to crave a seance. He soon after visited France, giving repeated se-ances to Louis Napoleon and before the court at the Tuilleries; and in Naples and Rome before the most distinguished and learned. INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

To Be Held in the World's Fair City is 1903-Are You in Favor of Same, and Will You Endorse It?

The following call for a World's International Convention of Spiritualists, to be held at St. Louis during the World's Fair in 1903, was issued by the executive board of the State Progressive Spiritualist Association of Missouri at a meeting held at the Zoo Spiritualist Camp-meeting, Springfield, July 21, 1901, and most heartily endorsed by all ssembled.

Be it resolved, that in order to best advance the true interests of the cause throughout the world, and especially in the United States, and by this means making its real power and latent strength known to the millions of citizens and strangers who will visit the World's Fair in 1903, we, the officers and members of the State Progressive Spiritualist Association of Missouri, hereby desire to make known to the National Spiritual Association, local, or other liberal and Spiritual organizations throughout the United States and the Spiritual and liberal press everywhere, our sense of the imperative necessity and truly magnificent opportunity for a unified effort to arrange suitable methods and devise means for the holding of said great International Convention during the World's Fair at St. Louis ln 1903.

It is therefore unanimously resolved to draw the earnest, thoughtful attention of all Spiritualists and delegates at the National Spiritual Association's convention, soon to be held at Washing ton, D. C., to this supreme and most opportune time and place whereat to unfurl our most glorious banner of libertygiving truth and progress. So that the assembled representatives of all races and conditions of men who come to see and learn at America's greatest exposition what this young giant among nations has to show them, may also see how America's Spiritualists value and are able to show forth to all a reason for and their power to demonstrate the continuity of life.

Surely, brothers and sisters, whom Spiritual proof of the life beyond the grave has freed from death"s cold iread, you will not fail, one and all, to assert your rights to the World's recognition of your faith founded upon actual demonstrated proof, by taking advantage of this glorious opportunity to prove by unitedaction your love for and well-earned gratitude to your risen friends, whom you so often have intercourse with, by heartily aiding in all ways possible this great undertaking and urgent desire of the angel world. Spiritualists everywhere, and especially in the United States, in the name of your spirit friends, rouse up from your apathy, and as you value the price-less gift of free communion through your mediums with your risen dead, rally at once under the banner of true, loyal, brotherly and sisterly unity. You can thus show to the Whole world your really immense strength, that venal legislatures, corrupt political leaders and fanatical creedists may consider well and count the probable future cost before passing, or attempting to pass, more illiberal and restrictive laws, thus limiting your right to worship and the pursuit of happiness under that sacred liberty guaranteed to every citizen by the constitution of the United States, and through which your country holds consideration and respect. Listen, therefore, to the voice and carnest desire of your spirit friends. A Trip to the Harmony Grove Camp-Meeting.

We left San Diego about 8:30 a. m for a drive of thirty-five or more miles to Harmony Grove, preferring this mode of travel to the ears which run to Encidido, three miles from the camp. We were a jolly party, looked more like a band of gypsies with our bag and baggage, than like "brethren and sisgoing to a Spiritualistic camp-

It is impossible to do full justice in describing the grandeur of the scenery on that ride—the mighty mountains, the beautiful valleys, the deep, yawning canyons.

Soon after leaving San Diego we began to descend, going down, down, until we began to think we were on the road to the bottomless pit. The road is cut right out of the side of the mountain, winding around, in and out, like a serpent, here and there turn-ins and outs provided by kind nature, where one team can stop to let another pass.

After several hours ride we reached the valley-Mission Valley. The cool breeze kissed our cheeks, and the green gave pleasure to our eyes. The cedar, pine and the beautiful eucalyptus and pepper trees live and thrive in defiance of the dust and heat. The ripe wheat, the somber flowers and plants with here and there a bright flower peeping out to help enhance the beauty of the

The scarlet castor bean tree, so gorgeously arrayed, occasionally came to our view and completed the beautiful, never-to-be-forgotten picture.

After leaving Mission Valley we began to ascend, winding in and out as before, traveling three or four miles to make one; looking beneath us, above and beyond, marveling at the freaks of nature. On top of the mountain, a broad expanse covered with small greens, greeted our eyes.

Eight or ten miles across fine road delightful breeze. How we did enjoy the invigorating air, and the sight of the beautiful mountain peaks in the distance, some so far away that they looked like shadows against the blue sky.

Now we began to descend again. For awhile we crept along the crest of the mountain, straining our eyes to reach the bottom of the deep, yawning, beautiful canyons, then casting our eyes to the gigantic mountain peaks above and beyond. Could not find words to express our emotions, were awed into silence by the beauty, the grandeur before us. It was fearfully, awfully grand, sublime! We nervously peered down and beyond to the zigzag, almost perpendicuar road so narrow that it seemed almost impossible to keep from going over the precipice. Then we looked back at the steep, narrow road we had traveled and wondered how we did it. Surely the spirits must have helped us. Finally we reached safe ground again.

All drew a long breath and said we would not have missed such grandeur, such greatness of the divine Power, but were satisfied to think of it in the past instead of the present or future tense. Then we journeyed through a beautiful rolling country, lined on either side by high, rugged mountains. Here and there along the road and in the fields great piles of rocks greeted our astonished gaze. Rocks, rocks! all sizes and shapes, some immense boul-ders, grotesque in shape, some resembling animals. We could not help ex-claiming, wondering how they; came there, so far away from their companions. Many of the hillsides were sprinkled with the white sand-stones which at a distance, had the appearance of cemeteries. One of the party said "let us draw on our imagination, imagine these stones are the ancient Aztecs turned to stone in punishment for looken the fearful upheaval of the earth took place, and old Father Time has changed them into these gro tesque shapes This would be no more miraculous than the turning of Lot's wife into a pillar of salt for looking backwards.

After leaving the rolling country, we drove for several miles through a beautiful valley, following the course of a pretty little brook hidden from our view by the cool, green foliage.

Near the terminus of this valley lay the "Promised Land"—Harmony Grove, which we reached about 7:30 p. m. Harmony Grovel How appropriate the name! All was quiet, peaceful, beauti

President Lowman and his good wife and other friends gave us a warm welcome, and at once we felt at home. We were tired, dusty and hungry as coyotes, and were soon enjoying the good supper awaiting us.

Harmony Grove is an ideal place for camp-situated in a beautiful fertile valley, sheltered by the mountains, on one side a pretty little winding brook plays and laughs in the sunlight. The grove is well shaded by grand old oaks stretching out their giant arms in vain effort to touch the mountains on either side—and the white tents scattered throughout this shaded dell added to the beauty of the scene. I almost im wind, carried over seas and continents and set down in old Egypt, as I gazed upon the near mountain peaks so much like the pyramids of Egypt. Thos pyramid mountains, no doubt, are rich in many kinds of ore. One mountain evidently contains gold. I examined a piece of rock and found minute particles of gold embedded. We climbed one of those mountains, two hours' climb, and a climb it certainly was, some places almost perpendicular, pulled ourselves up by the rocks and bushes, sometimes went on ill fours. We reached the summit of the mountain, panting for breath and perspiring in every pore. We turned gazed upon the scene before us and felt fully paid for our efforts. High rugged mountain peaks stretching their heads upwards, each trying to peep over the head of the other in vain effort to reach the deep blue heavens above. The beautiful fertile valleys dotted with picturesque little villager the pretty little brooks winding in and out, the white-tented camp beneath us all spread out before us like a beautiful panorama. It did not take us long to descend the mountain. Several times we attempted a toboggan slide, but the rocks and the bramble bushes, some of them rather thorny, interfered with our toboggan

I must not fail to speak of the nights at Harmony Grove Camp. Glorious nights for sleeping. Away from the noise and bustle of the city; the air pure and cool, all quiet and peaceful not a sound save the cry of the whippoor-will, the chirp of the cricket, to ceep one from getting lonesome, and an occasional hoot of the owl. About eight years ago, Mr. S. D. Melton, the owner of the grounds, gave a fifty-year lease of the grounds for a Spiritualistic camp ground. The name —Harmony Grove Spiritualistic Association—was suggested by angel friends

One of the most beautiful characters The services this year were of the hat ever visited Lily Dale, is Mrs. C. L. Stevens, of Pittsburg, Pa. She is a typical representative of the best side of Next year, 1904, thor valley should Spiritualism. Col. Dryden, an excellent with any degree of clearness and impressive force. But when she is lighted by the heavenly glow she rises to the plane of power and her voice rings with eloquent earnestness, and her sentences are smooth, poetic and eloquent. August 28 was Pennsylvania Day at

Lily Dale, and C. L. Stevens was master of ceremonles, and Mrs. Stevens was the orator of the day. Her dis-course was along the lines of spiritual evolution, and savored a little of the Theosophic order of thought, though far superior to any I have heard from that school. It was highly spiritual and aglow with the practical application of her thought. She began with symbols, as the shadows of thought, traced the expression to the source grasped the supreme significance the universe, as measured by spiritual uses, and emphasized the individual life as the center and climax of all. To do is to be; and to be is all. Doing is the language of being, and to do our own work faithfully and cheerfully ever mindful of the eternal value pure purposes and devotion to truth, is the secret of power and success.

I can give no adequate idea of this masterly discourse, in a few touches of its special points, for it bristled with points like the bayonets of an army gleaming in the morning sunlight, and held the audience in rapt, if not astonished, attention from the moment she opened her lips to the close of her eloquent address.

But the best part of it was the fine delicate, but forcible expression of the sweet, spiritual and affectional emotions that adorned her logic and ideal ism, and carried her words warmly into the hearts of her audience And the realization that her life is a perpetual sermon, representing in practical com-pleteness all the high ideals of her speech made the whole a glad and glorious benediction of love, wisdom and truth.

The workers at this camp all did well, in fact they went ahead of that Mrs. Stevens is not a professional public speaker. She speaks at funerals frequently, and is a favorite with all classes who hear and know her; but she does not go far from home, except on such occasions as this one at Lily Dale. Spiritualism needs more like her. Lily Dale was highly honored by her presence and her work. Pennsyl-vania may well be proud of its representatives at Lily Dale in 1903.

Prof. Lockwood strikes a very differ ent set of keys when he brings out the rhythm of molecular action and reaction, and seeks to solve the riddle of the universe with his spiritual wand in the hand of science. But he makes the molecules tremble with the echoes of the spiritual cosmos.

Some call him a materialist, and so he is, but not of the kind that worships an infinite corpse. To him all matter is alive, and all phenomena are referable to the spirit that animates every atom and every world. It seems to m that he is far more spiritual in his concepts, than those Christians who can find no promise of immortality in nature, without a divine miracle that is to raise the dead bodies of the world's countless millions; and establish a carnal paradise for the saints, in defiance of law or reason. And more spiritual, too, it seems to me, than the ideas of those metaphysical mystics who assume that all progress must have an eternal basis in crude matter, on primitive planets, maintained by an eternal round endless series of rein carnations. But this may be the fault of my limitations, and incomplete knowledge, and undeveloped reasoning powers. We are all children, and a best, can see but a narrow range of the limitless arcana that ever invite our intellects, and challenge our efforts to Whitwell, Mrs. John Sauer, Mrs. Pease. know. Miss Pease, Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Follett, and the Misses Whitwell. ONCE A PROMINENT FACTOR IN SPIRITUALISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

Now Very Wealthy, She Resides in England, and is Prominent There.

One of the most notable motor tours ever accomplished by ladies has just been made by Mrs. Victoria Woodhull Martin and her daughter, Miss Zula Woodhull. Mrs. Martin, who as Victoria Woodhull was famous as a pioneer of Woman's Rights, and a social reformer in America a quarter of a century since, married, on her arrival in England, the eminent London banker Mr. John Biddulph Martin. This gentleman, who died a few years ago, left his large fortune entirely to his wife, including the beautiful estate of Norton Park, Worcestershire, one of the "state ly homes of England."

Mrs. Martin, who now resides largely at Norton Park, with occasional so journs in London and on the Continen of Europe, has become famous in the motor world as one of the most enthusiastic lady motorists in England, and Miss Woodhull shares, equally with her mother, a devotion to the wonderful invention which has lately found its laureate in the English poet, Mr. Henley. Both ladies are expert drivers and thoroughly versed in the complicated mechanism of the motor car. They be lieve that its advent will completely revolutionize modern life, and it is characteristic that Mrs. Martin, who was ever a pioneer, should, with her daughter, have been the first lady to make an extended tour in England on a motor car just as she had now again led the way across Europe. The English tour was some years ago, when motoring was in its infancy, and the route taken ran through England from east to west. Motors were then a curiosity, and the appearance of these two intrepid ladies guiding the then unfamiliar car through the rural districts excited an unusual amount of public interest. Now many ladies have taken to the road, and lady motorists, including Mrs. Martin, are forming a fashionable motor club in London. The Queen has given her cachet to this mode of locomotion for ladies, and has lately purchased several new cars. But it may be doubted whether the Royal garage at Sandringham and Windsor has anything to equal the beautiful 20-horse power Mercedes Simplex, wherewith Mrs. Martin and her daughter glide over England and Europe.

At Norton Park Mrs. Martin has quite a little "flotilla" of motor cars, but the 20-horse power Mercedes Simplex is her car par excellence. It is a marvel of workmanship, and breasts hill and dale with the greatest ease. It was on this incomparable car that Mrs. Martin and Miss Woodhull have recently accomplished a notoble tour. Just as they were the first ladies to motor through England, so now they have been the first ladies to motor from England through France and back again.

On a cold but bracing day in the middle of March last, Mrs. Martin and Miss Woodhull left the door of the beautiful country mansion of Norton Park en route for Paris and the Riviera on their 'Mercedes" before mentioned.

We may notice in passing that the car is so conveniently constructed that all the luggage they wanted for the extended journey was strapped on the top, and they therefore had no worries on that score.

First they motored to London, a distance of over 100 miles, from their Worcestershire home: The next day they proceeded to Dover, passing through some of the most beautiful country in England. At Dover again they rested a night, and the next day motored to Folkestone, shipped their car and vovaged across Boulogne. Here the car was unshipped and all the French formalities settled without difficulty. After a few hours' sojourn in the quaint old seaport town, the ladies again mounted their car and motored to Paris. In la ville lumiere they rested some days, visiting and shopping, and then set out on the longest part of their tour and drove their car down the route of the French Automobile Club (of which they are members) to Cannes. This route, though admirably adapted for motoring and with every convenience for care at the towns and villages along the road, is not perhaps very picturesque until the South of France is reached, and then in that land of sunshine, of blue sky and sea, of grey-green olive groves and the feathery gold of the mimosa trees, one seems to motor through an earthly paradise. Cannes was our lady motorists' first stopping place for any time, and then, the car being in beautiful order, they proceeded along the Mediterranean coast, breaking their journey at such places as Nice, Beaulieu, Monte Carlo, Mentone, and so on. The delightful sense of freedom experienced by this mode of traveling, the exhibaration caused by the rush through the air and sunshine, and the beautiful and everchanging panorama of shore and sea, can be better imagined than described After exhausting the beauties of the Riviera, Mrs. Martin and Miss Wood hull faced North, and set out on their homeward way. But in this case they varied the route, and avoiding the beat en track, passed through some of the most beautiful country in Europe. The 20-horse power Mercedes Simplex climbed the Alpes Maritimes like a bird, only unlike a bird it was never tired, and always ready to plume its wings afresh for another flight.

After passing through most picturesque regions, but little known to the ordinary traveler, our voyagers reached the main road and motored on via Dijon to Paris. Here they remained some litle time, using their motor car for excursions to the beautiful environs, but finally they motored back to the coast, put their car on board and crossed the channel.

Arriving in England, the car was unshipped again and the return journey made to London. Here, after a night's rest, the untiring motorists set forth again, and after an easy run found themselves once more gliding up the avenue of Norton Park, Worcestershire, after an absence of some six weeks. Thus concluded one of the most no table motor expeditions ever undertaken by ladies. It was performed from first to last without a hitch, thanks to the perfect mechanism of the car and the admirable foresight and arrange ment of the two famous ladies who planned and carried out this remarkable tour.

Once more Mrs. Woodhull Martin has demonstrated the independence of women, and has shown what her sex can do, if they have only the necessary energy and ability. NORTON PARK.

Near Tewkesbury, England.

A study of this woman's remarkable career will reveal the curious freaks of 'Destiny." As a Spiritualist in this country she was the constant "bone of contention," and intemperate language was hurled against her from all sides. Now, surrounded by wealth, she is en-gaged in humanitarian work which counts for good.

LILY DALE CAMP.

Aftermath of a Successful Season of Work.

After the storm comes the calm; after activity rest, and so after all the bright cheer, sweet music, and glad merriment of the past two months, the quiet that reigns now is almost oppressiye, for of all the thousands of animated interrogation points that have so re-recently and incessantly roamed through these sylvan haunts and sunlit ways, but few remain to wake the echoes among the hemlocks and maples or intercept the slanting sun-beams that pall athwart the grassy ways. The sun so chary of his favors during the season is making amends for past neglect; and warmth and brightness have prevailed during the past week, as a counterbalance to the rainy days of the closing week. There were not so many rainy days this season as there were last, but the frequency of the showers, and the attendant dampness made visitors think there was much more rains than shine. But notwithstanding the frequent rains and low temperature, the general attendance was very good, the special Sunday attendance better than for years, while the dances were never so well patronized, over 50 couples being present at the last one of closing night, and 120 couples the previous Saturday night, though the evening was very rainy.

A visitor from two leading summer resorts brought word in August that there was no reason to complain of the patronage here in comparison with the ruinously small attendance at both those resorts. It is proverbial that no one ever comes to a Lily Dale assembly, but leaves with a desire-usually fulfilled sooner or later—to come again, for nowhere, at the usual summer resorts, can be found such a combination of scenic beauty, pleasure, recreation. good sanitation, wholesome food fresh from adjacent farms, excellent water, and above all, such special courses of instruction, as here.

There were classes of various kinds in session from the opening to the clos-ing weeks, and the gamut of ideas from A to Z exploited. Discussions, and often emotions, ran high at conference thought exchange, and Forest Temple, but when we remember that Spiritualism has been defined as the "religion of the emotions," we do not wonder that those who can feel most, can often say most, and therefore will attract the most attention. It is a noteworthy fact that Spiritualism produces more easy, off-hand speakers than any other cult, because from the exuberance of emotion flows spontaneity of expression; and besides, a real Spiritualist always has an opinion of his own, which he very rarely hesitates to give; and the mere matter of grammatical correcness or rhetorical construction; is often of little moment in comparison with what he feels to be the "truth within" him, bubbling up and bursting into ut-terance.

Truly Lily Dale is a Mecca of Spiritualistic freethought, whose every porch and street corner is liable at any moment to become a forensic forum for the discussion, and final settlement-in the mind of the speaker at least-of the most knotty and bewlidering esoteric problems. Odipus with his riddle of the Sphinx, "isn't in it;" and Aeschylus with his lofty grandiloquence concerning impossible heroes, Titans and deities is "out of sight."

True, one occasionally runs up against a captions disputant who forgets for the time that the other fellow may have done some thinking for himself, and has a right to differ, and if called to order this very disputant will insist the glorious prerogative of "free thought and speech," never realizing that he is critically binding up that "other fellow" in the very chain from which he demands freedom for himself. But these differences are only momentary, for the next speaker usually pours oil on the troubled waters, by pleading for concord in the light and knowledge of the spiritual philosophy; and again the shuttle of argument speeds on with a merry "click-clack" through the web of discussion, and all goes merry as a marriage bell.

Surely Spiritualism, when properly understood and lived, is a subtle al chemist than can transmute discord into harmony, and differences of opinion into a pleasing mental mosaic, whose varying patterns, each exactly fitting its own place, may combine to form a beautiful fabric whose glinting, changing lights and shadows each vibrates a responsive chord in some throbbing, yearning human heart. Charity is indeed the greatest virtue, and patience and forbearance are her dutiful hand-maids of divine service.

Visitors have expressed great satisfaction with the Northwestern orchestra, whose selections throughout the season have been ungrudgingly rendered, and of a harmonizing, inspiring

It is generally conceded that the educational features of the assembly have been of a more pronounced and progressive order than ever before, the general trend among the thinkers—there have been many such here this year-being toward a higher line of intellectual and spiritual development. The mad craze for phenomena only, is gradually abating; and in its stead is being instituted a deeper search for inner light. Man is making more effort to "know himself by himself," the only true method by which lasting knowledge can be gained and retained and in the light of which Spiritualism becomes a reality to every searching soul.

The Young People's sessions, three of which were held toward the close of the assembly, were full of interest, showing minds alert to the needs and progress of the times. The children's lyceum held its number to the close, being excellently managed by its corps of teachers, with Mrs. Peterson and Miss Green of Grand Rapids, at their head.

The public platform mediums, seven in number during the season, were all well received. They gave numerous tests which were eagerly accepted by the many who are ever "thirsty for a sip of life's well amid the waste," or a ray of light from the "mystic stient

Oregon Spiritualists.

The annual convention of the State Spiritualists Association of Oregon opened on the evening of Sept. 3, in the beautiful parlors of the World's Advance Thought, with President McIntyre in the chair. The session was interesting and harmonious. Two amendments to the constitution were adopted-one authorizing the board of directors to appoint a vice-president for each county in the state; and the other of 47th street and Cottage Grove aveprovides that no president shall occupy | nue, every Sunday. Conference at & p.

the chair two consecutive terms. The last day of the convention (Sunday, Sept. 6), was an all-day meeting, and a grand rally of the Spiritualists A splendid program was provided, and the meeting was held in the home of the First Spiritualist Society-Artisans' Hall-and the newly-elected president,

Rev. G. C. Love, presided.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are, Rev. G. C. Love, president; E. de Yongh, vice-president; Ludwig B. Larsen, secretary; Capt. J. H. McMillen, treasurer; C. C. Affalter, Geo. Lazelle H. W. Boehnke, J. S. Greenfield, J. E. Trigg, directors.

Rev. G. C. Love is doing good missionary work. Twenty-five citizens of the town of Grant's Pass, Oregon, have, through him, applied for a charter from the state association. LUDWIG B. LARSEN, Secretary State Spiritualists Association of Oregon.

Unity Camp, Lynn, Mass.

The meetings held under the auspices in Spiritualists Association, at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, Mass., have been very largely attended during the past month. Many prominent speakers have addressed the meetings, among whom have been Rev. W. T. Hutchins, of Springfield, Mr. Thomas Cross, Mrs. Sarah Byrnes, Mrs. Ida Whitlock, Mrs. Katie Ham, Mr. J. S. Scarlett and others. Dr. George A. Fuller will be present September 29, and Mr. Thomas Cross the 28th, on which date the meetings will close for this

The Ladies' Social Union, Mrs. Dr. Caird, president, has held seances in the grove every Wednesday afternoon, which have attracted a large number. The association has recently held a bazaar, or "out of doors" fair. A large tent was erected in the grove, under which tables were placed for the sale of fancy and useful articles, which were very readily disposed of. In connection with the bazaar was a symposium under the direction of President Caird, general manager, at which lectures were given by popular speakers on different lines of thought, one day being devoted to Mental Science, with J. Woodbury Sawyer lecturer; one day to Woman's Suffrage, Judge Berry, of the Lynn courts, speaker, and one day the Socialists took charge of the exercises, with Dr. Gibbs, of Worcester as lecturer. The lecture on Labor Day, by Rev. W. T. Hutchins, on "Self Ownership." Harry Stiles and other members of his orchestra, gave an hour's concert each afternoon, and Wednesday and Saturday evenings when the grove was lighted with Japanese lanterns and presented a very beautiful appearance. The regular winter course of lectures will open in Cadet Hall the first Sunday in October, May S. Pepper being the speaker for the month. MRS. A. A. AVERILL. Lynn, Mass.

At the Mercy of Mother Sleep.

I wonder how many of us ever stopped to think that we are at the mercy of Mother Sleep? When we are tired at night and go to bed thoughtless of all else but sleep, we are under the influence of floating impressions according to our susceptibility of them. How necessary it is for us to make ourselves positive to all conditions. I am sure we do not want in the sleeping state that which we put out in the waking hours. How many times we hear some one say: "I went to bed early last night, but yet I feel as if I had not slept all night."

Let me illustrate in which way this is Children, Cruelty to Animals, Tyranny, made possible. Suppose you are out of Intolerance, Conclusion, Appendix, employment and sincerely wish to be The book makes some five hun and the next morning you will surely be $1.25.

EVIDENCES THAT ANIMALS HAVE SOULS

"Have wild animals a soul?" Conklin, the famous animal expert. It of the big female elephants and take was to him the query was put.

swer with positive conviction," he replied. "But," added Mr. Conklin, "if are proofs of a psychological side to the history must be forced to the conclusion that animals have something very hear akin to a soul. No man who has ever spent any time around a menagerie can doubt it for a moment. We see evidences of it every day. Many a time I have caught myself looking into a tiger's eyes and wondering whose soul was imprisoned in that sinuous body, and struggling for expression.

'All animals have a distinctly human side; but there is a striking difference in the mentality of animals of the same species, just as there is among men of drove her nearly frantic. As the little the same race. To use a common term some animals of the same family are 'smarter' than others. All, however, give evidence that they not only think but also show that they have their likes and dislikes, their hopes and fears, their pleasures and pains, just the same as human creatures.

Are Capable of Affection.

"No one who is at all familiar with animals questions the fact that they are capable of genuine affection and, at the same time, can hate with a vindictive ness not surpassed by men or women. I have seen lions and tigers manifest the greatest amount of uneasiness over the absence of a familiar keeper, and exhibit the most apparent evidences of pleasure on his return-purring, licking his hand, and in other ways evidencing their pleasure and affection. Within an hour I have seen these same animals iurn upon a keeper they didn't like and nearly tear him to pieces.

year the Barnum & Bailey circus was in London we had an elephant man who had an exceptionally violent temper, and when out of humor he was inclined to be unpleasantly rough with the 'bulls.' I had noticed the elephants looking at this fellow and following his movements with their little beady eyes, and I never doubted but that at the first opportunity they would get even with him. The animal man's name was Cooper, and at Olympia he was usually on the night watch.

Attacked Wrong Man.

"One night, shortly after the show was out, I heard a commotion in the el- patience. On a bright, sunshiny day, phant pen, and, running down the line these animals fairly beam with pleasure of 'bulls,' I found Jack Mooney, one of along the route of parade, and show our best elephant men, lying on the equal evidences of regret when the paground, with old Babe, the mother of the first baby elephant ever born in America, standing over him. Without a moment's thought of the possible conse quences, I ran up to Babe and commanded her to move back, pulling Mooney out of the way.

"It was evident that the elephant had attacked him and knocked him down, but what I could not understand was why, after getting the man at her mer cy, Babe did not crush the life out of him. Mooney, who was only partially stunned, gave the only plausible expla nation of it. Cooper had asked him as a favor to remain on watch and had gone away. Mooney, who was a favor ite with the elephants, and always careless in passing them, approached Babe

"The elephant, undoubtedly thinking it was Cooper, and delighted to find the hated keeper off his guard, suddenly swung her trunk around and felled Mooney to the ground. The next moment the elephant man would have been crushed under the feet of the feet of the brute, but in some way Babe discovered her mistake, and, instead of further injuring the favorite keeper gently turned him over with her trunk and sought to revive him in her dumb

Mooney was only half conscious of all this, and the theory was probably evolved to some extent from his know edge of the elephant and her character but, a few minutes later, when he had sufficiently recovered from the blow he had received, he walked up to Babe, spoke soothingly to her, and put his arms around her trunk. And the way that old elephant responded to his caresses was something beautiful to see She was all contrition for what she had done—any one with half an eye could see that-while the genuine affection she had for Mooney and the delight she felt over his providential escape was evident in every movement of her great body.

"Just a week from that night Babe actually caught Cooper in the same way, knocked him down, and nearly crushed out his life under the weight of her body. Here you have the entire gamut of human passions and emotions —love, hate, memory, calculation, regret, contrition, atonement—revenge! Absolutely nothing lacking but speech and who ever claimed that the power to articulate was a prerequisite to the possession of a soul?

Sometimes Die of Broken Heart,

"Everyone knows how dogs will grieve for a dead master, and sometimes will even worry themselves to church within the bounds of the Northdeath. The same thing occurs among wild animals. To take cubs from a lioness will almost break her heart. That is why the lion mother so frequently devours her cubs, for fear they will be taken from her. Elephants taken from their mother at an immature age will sometimes fret themselves into a veritable decline. "We have a little Asiatic elephant that is in that condition now. She lost her mother just before the herd of war elephants was shipped from Singapore last fall, and although she has passed the suckling perolod, she has grieved constantly for the old elephant, and even the other elephants have in a way tried to arouse her from her condition of lethargy; but she keeps drooping bear upon it.

and getting thinner and thinner all the There is no man in the United States time, and it is only a question of a few better ualified to express an opinion on this absorbing subject than George can induce her to attach herself to one

Old Elephant Fell Dead.

"Several years ago, while visiting a the possession of faculties and charac-little town near Calcutta, I was greatly teristics like those of the human race interested by the affection that existed between an elephant mother and her wild beast, then the student of natural baby. The old animal never took her elephant was an exceptionally clever animal, and as the baby impeded her in er work, it was determined to separate them during the day.

"After a great deal of difficulty the little elephant was secured and taken o a corral several hundred yards away. for some reason the old elephant jumped to the conclusion that the separation was to be permanent, and it one was being led away he softly trumpeted and the mother replied, until distance made the cries of the little elephant almost inaudible.

"Up to this time the baby elephant did not seem to be afraid, but suddenly he seemed to appreciate the situation, and the tears rained down his broad face like a sorrowing child. Stopping short, he turned around and gave a loud trumpet call that was so full of terror that even the coolies who were leading him were astonished.

"The old elephant, who had been listening attentively, gave one answering cry, shuddered, and fell to the ground. When the superintendent reached her she was dead. She had undoubtedly died of a broken heart.

"These instances all evidence the psychological side of the animal nature. Another illustration of it is the instinctive respect wild animals have for children. Nearly all wild animals realize the helplessness of children and their "Elephants are even more pronounced inability to do injury, and it is a very in their likes and dislikes. The first rare thing, indeed, to hear of a child be ing attacked by animals that are accustomed to seeing human beings. They undoubtedly know and appreciate the harmlessness and innocence. "Nearly all animals are vain, and all without exception, so far as I have been able to discover, are jealous. Even the most ferocious among them resent attention given to other animals, and I have known elephants, particularly, to forcibly resent a slight of this kind. Cat animals in the menagerie learn to enjoy the tours in open dens through the streets of the city, and as the hour for the parade approaches they will give the most apparent evidences of imrade is over and the cages have been returned to the menagerie pavilion. Like the elephants and horses, they positively enjoy the crowds and excite-

These are only a few instances; but a book would not begin to exhaust the interesting evidences of animal psychology and thoughtful student of natural listory could discuss by a few hours' observation in a menagerie."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

From a letter dated September 10, 1903, written by a Methodist preacher, who is also a Spiritualist. I take the following extract: "Things spiritual are quiet. I see that last year the M. DEFENSE OF THE BIBLE.

Spiritual Interpretations of Mooted Passages.

In The Progressive Thinker of July 11, I see J. S. Loveland thinks we need no explanation of the old, antiquated fabulous book called the Bible. Now if that was a fact, and everybody knew it. or believed it, it would need no explanation, but the fact is, most people do not believe that. All the evangelical Christian denominations believe the Bible is infallible, or profess so to be lieve, and they believe it is the only guide that points to heaven.

All religious bodies, Spiritualists included, believe in some of the teachings of the Bible. Spiritualist, Universalist, Unitarian and many other denominations believe there are errors in the Bible, they also believe there are great and important truths in it, some of which are not understood, and these need explanation.

Take for instance, what Christ told Nicodemus about the new birth. The Calvinistic churches have always taught that Christ meant conversion when he told Nicodemus "except you are born again you cannot see the kingdom of God. Now with a little explanation I think any one can see that Christ meant to tell Nicodemus that he and everybody else had to be born again. Had to be born into the spirit life to see the kingdom of God. For he said, "marvel not that I said you must be born again." He did not say you ought, or that you will be damned, or eternally punished if you are not; but he said you must. Nicodemus it seems did not understand, for he said "How can these things be?" etc. Christ said the wind bloweth where it listeth, you cannot tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the spirit, or born again. Still Nicodemus seemed to doubt it (as it reads.) Christ said, if I have told you of earthly things and you believe not. neither would you believe if I tell you of heavenly things. Now Christ could not have told Nicodemus that he did not believe about the wind blowing, etc., and tell the truth. There is an error there which should be corrected. Christ said if I have told you of earthly things and you do not understand, neither would you understand if I tell you of heavenly things. I am now telling you of heavenly things. I am telling you what I have seen and what I know, and he tells how he knows, for he says, No man hath ascended to heaven but the son of man that came down from heaven, and we testify what we have seen and what we

I cannot agree with Brother Love land's ideas in regard to the Bible story of the handwriting on the wall, at the feast of Belshazzar. He says no Daniel ever wrote the book at the time of the alleged events. Suppose he did not, somebody wrote it. I do not regard the time of the writing as very important, the facts in the case are the things of importance. Did such a thing occur at any time, in any place? Whether it was at Belshazzar's or not, makes but little difference. I believe something from the fact that such things take place at the present day. Again, I think there is great need of an explanation of eternal punishment, most of the churches believe a part of mankind are eternally punished, if they repent not of their sins before they die. Some Spiritualists believe and teach that God is too good to punish anyone. Therefore all must be happy on the things. When he said the second comspirit side of life. Now the truth lies between them as I understand it. There is an eternal punishment or an eternal law that punishes all who transgress. You cannot clear the guilty. His law is unchangeable yesterday, today and forever. We all know it is so in natural things. We will find it so in spiritual things, and the sooner we find it out the better. The difference between the Spiritual and the orthodox is, the orthodox believe the impenitent or wicked are eternally punshed, while the Spiritualists believe just as long as they transgress God's laws they will be punished, but they believe eternity is long enough to teach s to obey God's laws and consequently all in time will be saved. Now is it not important that some one should explain the Bible on this point? Now, Brother Loveland, would you throw away the Bible because there are errors in it? The Bible has a great many important truths. It gives many accounts of spirit manifestations and messages. Take the account of Moses and Elias upon the mount. Of the woman of Endor and Samuel coming and talking to Saul, Christ appearing and talking to Saul as he was on his way to Damascus, Christ's resurrection, and Christ's materialization and dematerialization. Take the cause of Paul and Silas being let out of prison by spirit, also Peter having his shackles taken off of him while he was bound in jail and led by the spirit out into the city. Take the case at Pentecost where men were controlled by the spirit so that they talked with other tongues just as many do now. Take the case of healing by laying on of hands, and by the discerning of spirits as the Bible tells of, also what John says about his talk with the angels upon the Isle of Pat-

There are a great many important truths taught in the Bible which are not understood without a little explanaion. Take for instance what Christ told the lawyer when he asked him which is the greatest commandment. Christ told him the first and greatest commandment is to love your God with all your soul, mind and strength, and the second is like unto it, to love your neighbor as yourself. Now without an explanation that statement seems un true, and it is, as it is generally taught by Bible teachers. Christ could have meant God the creator of all

MARSHALLTOWN CAMP.

Close of a asful Camp Season.

Since my last report of the above camp meeting we have had fairly successful meetings despite the fact that a good deal of the time the weather has been execrable. On last Monday evening your scribe was billed for a lecture on Socialism, it being Labor Day, but instead of a meet ing we were treated to a storm of wind, rain, thunder and lightning, in the midst of which my tent blew down, and everything in it was soaked with water. But good comes out of every evil, so sympathy of friends and the ridiculous ness of the situation helped me to turn the whole thing into comedy

Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, Mrs. Bliss Green and husband, Max Hoff-mann, Mrs, McCoy, Mrs. Folsom, Stewart and Folsom, Harry J. Moore and T. W. Woodrow were present at the close of the camp. I wish to call especial attention to the lectures of Mr. Moore, which were of a very high order. If nothing happens this young man has a brilliant future before him. Mrs. Brown has a most wonderful genius in the line of poetical improvisation, and Mrs. McCoy and Max Hoff-mann both do excellent platform test work. Brother Woodrow is a strong, vigorous, argumentative speaker, who clinches his points like wire nails in an oak board. Stewart does for filling and makes a passable talk now and then when he is not out of patience with the effort to Christianize Spiritual ism and make it a sideshow to the church. In this connection I wish to speak of the little "Spirit Postmistress" Josie K. Folsom, and her wonderful mediumship. Her work has been the marvel of all the camps she has attended this year, and the beauty of it is that she is as much the favorite of other me diums as of the general public. Much of her work is done while in a conscious state, especially the Feading of ques-tions when blindfolded. But when some one in the audience has sealed or secreted questions on their person, Mrs. Folsom passes under control and the questions are read verbatim and the answer given by spirit Carson, often with the medium standing with her back to the audience. Again she varies her work by permitting little Effie Shook or other spirits to control her, and passing through the audience giving names and messages. On last Sunday evening in the space of twenty minutes, she thus gave thirty two names, all of which were recognized, with not a single mistake. Mr. Folsom's trumpet seances are equally wonderful and it is safe to say that during the past eight months at least five hundred persons have been convinced beyond a doubt of spirit reurn. Two Moines were present last Sunday evening, who claimed that they had investigated in vain for years, but on that evening they both received name after name of spirit relatives, and shed tears of joy over what they had received, and declared themselves fully convinced. Another lady said she had had mediums in her house for weeks, but never had her mother's name given

Altogether, the camp has been a success, and the friends bade each other good-bye with pleasant anticipations of next year's meeting.

I shall remain here during the com ing month and hold meetings in the Universalist church, by request of the Marshalltown Spiritualists. My friends can address me at 304 North First avenue, Marshalltown, Iowa, until further C. W. STEWART.

mand is like unto the first, because they are not alike in that sense: but if he meant he should love the God principle that was in himself and his neighbor alike then the two commands are alike and certainly that was what he meant. For he said on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets, and that is a great truth, for all the law and prophecies are for our-selves and our neighbors. They can be made for nothing else as that compre-hends all of mankind. Take another case and we see by adding one word and correcting the punctuation in the story of the man who went on a journey and called his servants together before he left and gave them talents To one he gave five, to another two, to another, one; he told them to use them and at his coming he would reward them for their labor, as the story reads. The one that received five and the one that received two doubled the amount he gave them and he rewarded them but the one that received one came and said, I knew you were a hard master, reaping where you sowed motiand gathering where you had not strewed; and was afraid of you, so I hid the talent in the earth. Lo! thou hast that which is thine. This is the way it reads: Thou knowest that I was a hard master, reaping where I sowed not and gathering where I had not strewed, assuming just what the unprofitable servan accused him of hoing. If it had been punctuated right it would have shower his great astonishment at being called a hard master: It should read thus: Thou knowest I was a hard master! Reaping where I sowed not! and gathering where I had not strewed! Thou oughtest therefore to have put the talent to use, then at my coming I should have received my own. Take therefore the talent that he has and give to him that has ten for to him that hath used shall be given, but to him that hath not used, even the talent that he hath shall be taken away. By adding the word used it makes good sense and is strictly true in every sense of the word, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually, cI think I have said enough to show the Bill does need some explanation to have it rightly understood. THE WITNESSES.

Their infallibility, Not Their Sincerity, A Prevalent Disease Among Spiritual is Questioned.

Mr. Howe remarks: "When Dr. Sweringen says he knows, it is a question of veracity, or intellectual ability." It is neither. As I showed Mr. Hull in the debate, this is a common mistake of Spiritualists in their logic. They reason as if one of two propositions must be true; whereas, neither may be. There is a third element, the trilemma. Many persons say they know. They are sincere. I do not call in question their 'veracity." nor their "ability." may have both in abundance; but I do doubt their infallibility; they are liable o err.

Robert Dale Owen was as honest, as intellectually great as Dr. Sweringen; but Owen was deceived, was mistaken after he, too, said, "I know." Mr. Howe adds, "it is said" he was deceived; but he "is not sure that he was deceived in the facts he observed when ne was acting as a critical investiga-

I have Robert Dale Owen's word for t; and a more sincere and learned investigator of Spiritualism never exist ed. Spiritualists almost unanimously agree with me in this opinion.

He wrote a letter to the Banner of light, Boston, from Philadelphia, Nov. 2, 1874, published five days later, in which he stated that he had attended forty sittings for materialization.

Mr. Owen said: "No one who saw Katie King walk about, and heard her speak, and touched her, ever doubted for a moment that she was a living. thinking being. Either, then, she was what she professed to be-a spirit from another world--or else she was a confederate, secretly introduced by the Holmeses for purposes of deception."

He was as certain then as Sweringen s now that a man who says he "knows' really does know. Josh Billings said Td rather not know anything than to know something that aint so." ' Robert Dale Owen declared that it was a "physical impossibility" for a confederate to do the Katie King act, as impossible, he said, as for a human being to pass through a brick wall!

Said Mr. Owen: "But if human bengs cannot pass and repass at pleasure trance to or exit from the cabinet exwe sat, was a physical impossibility."

That does not apply to the forty sit- to review the matter. Prof. Andrews That does not apply to the forty sittings, because Mr. Owen declared that "these materializations" were obtained think that "the primary reference was classed with the above-mentioned, I am

There is a new disease prevalent mostly with Spiritualists, which may be termed Ecclesia-Phobia. The victims of this peculiar rabies commence to rave and froth at the mouth every time a term which happened to get into use among religious people is used. I believe it was Dean Swift who said the interesting thing about a monkey was one never knew what he was going to do next. In some respects the ecclesiaphobian is like the monkey, only one never knows what he is going to say next, after he has exhausted his usual list of platitudes; but we know he is going to manifest a tremendous hatred against the unfortunate victims of his malediction.

One of the objects of their hatred is the word "church." If one uses the word "church," the patient goes into a spasm immediately, simply because the word is used by the evangelicals, and they have a holy horror of anything religious, because religion means to them only the thing called Christianity.

The words "church" and "ecclesia" are never in their primary signification religious. They always referred to a gathering of people, or a body of people of any kind without reference to re-ligious belief and practice. It is true that during the dark ages it seemed to be monopolized by the Catholic church, but it was not so done when it was referred to in early history of the Christian church. It may be that past associations have given the two words, "ecelesia" and "church" bad reputations, but the characters should attach to the people using them, not to the words hemselves. This thing of driving words out of existence on account of disagreeable associations is carrying bigotry to the extreme. The word "religion" also produces a ike effect upon the more severely afflicted of this malady. Sometimes they quote an old definition of "relegere, and then they tell us it means "to bind back." They have thus settled it that religion prohibits them from ever learning anything new. Some thirty years ago Mr. F. Abbott in the Index settled that question beyond dispute. He gave through the substance of a brick wall Cleero's definition of "relegerie," which or of a stout walnut partition, then, under the conditions we obtained, enter the conditions were conditionally conditions which is in the sense of "going over again." cept by the door into the parlor where thought." Mrs. Prior is to appear for trial on Sept. 17, 1903. The Spiritualists and Liberals of the city are rallying to the rescue, and it is posed to make a broad-gauge, open fight against this system of petty persecu-tion. word "doctor." O, consistency! Again, objection is urged against ceremonies of any kind in Spiritualism. I believe the matter is often overdone in our secret orders, to which many of our objectors pay most reverent homage. At the same time, I believe that he or she who assumes to become a public teacher should be a pattern of virtue and morality. A man who goes through the streets with an old pipe or a cigar in his mouth, or using coarse or vulgar, language, is hardly the person to elevate people, whatever his language in the public may be, and should not be authorized as a public lecturer. What is there wrong in setting such people apart, as fit representatives of our faith? In all our public schools we have ceremonies for the graduates to signify to the public that that have finished their course of instruction, and alas! too many of them have finished their education with their school-room lessons. It is hoped that those who graduate in the Pratt School, which seems to inspire so many Spiritualists with a holy terror, as a sacrilege that will cause cows to give bloody milk, and fill the land with vermin if permitted, will not drop back as many do who go into our schools. I can see no wrong in ordination and the laying on of hands to those who aspire to be teachers. Probably it is because as a healer, I insist on laying hands on the sick, that I believe in the virtue of the imposition of hands or ordination.

I also believe in consecration. We may consecrate a house by our united thought as a Spiritualist church, or we may consecrate a dwelling to our ideal by a "house warming," and a child may be and often is consecrated to a certain purpose before its birth. Away with this bigotry that fears to touch a word or an institution just because somebody we have formed a prejudice against, has been in the habit of using it. Let us get out of this petty sectarianism, and broaden in our manhood to accept the good wherever DANIEL W. HULL.

MESSAGES AND VISITS FROM THE BEYOND.

Lebanon, Pa.-Messages from the dead, in the guise of dreams, inspired Mrs. J. Marshall Funck and her husband's closest friend, Eli Atwood, to institute the investigation into the death of Funck, which climaxed yesterday in the arrest of Constable John L. Fisher, on a charge of murdering the lawyer in his private office on Cumberland street,

Mr. Atwood shares burden of both dreams was that Mr. Funck did not kill himself, but that John Fisher had a hand in his death. When this thought was suggested to Mr. Atwood he coincided.

'I could see Mr. Funck as plainly as I see you," continued Mrs. Funck. "Our ways something between us-something that prevented us from conversing. He would look at me so pleadingly, as though he wanted to tell me something.

"At last, one night, Mr. Funck appeared. 'Why,' he said to me, 'what are you doing here?' He clasped me in his arms and kissed me. I was so happy that I cried. I knew he was dead, but was so pleasant to be with him again. He asked me about various things, business affairs. I told him I had done the

Mr. Atwood acknowledged to-day that his dreams concerning the fate of Funck had coincided with those of Mrs. Funck in all important particulars His attitude in discussing the matter Mrs. Funck. "I have faith in dreams," said he, "and I am not reluctant to admit that I am so thoroughly convinced by my dreams that Marshall Funck was murdered that I have spared no exertion to bring within the reach of the law the man whom I think did the deed.

"When Marshall Funck was killed I was in Atlantic City. That night I dreamed that he and I had together killed a man. This chain of incidents was repeated three times. Each time I woke up, then fell asleep and dreamed again. I mentioned the occurrence to my family, and so impressed was I that it was the forerunner of some evil tidings or accident that I would not remain in the surf or allow my family to. That day I was called from the dinner table to the telephone and was told that "It was a physical impossibility for a man, drunk or sober, to hang himself with a belt in the manner that they say Funck did. I wear the same size belt I have tried to noose it about my neck and fasten one end to the catch in the office window. It was beyond my power. But it was possible for someone else to noose the belt, tie it to the catch and then put my neck through the noose. The belt was not drawn around his neck tight enough to indent the flesh. His mouth, eyes and tongue showed none of the typical evidences of strangulation.

"The blow at the nape of the neck ended his life. Nothing else did. We should have had a confession from Fisher before this had not our plans miscarried. He was placed in a cell last night. Fisher's attorney heard of what was going on, and warned him not to talk."-Pittsburg (Pa.) Leader.

Apparitions of the Living.

This is a typical case illustrating a of living persons become visible. bears directly upon the problem of sleep and the separability of personality and body. It was completely verified in all particulars by members of the Society of Psychical Research. Frances Reddell, an intelligent young woman in the employ of Mrs. Post-Carew, in her country place at Antony, Torpoint, England, testified as follows: "Helen Alexander, the maid of Lady Waldegrave, was lying very ill of ty phoid fever and was attended by me, At 4 o'clock in the morning I heard the call bell ring and saw the door of the room open and saw a person come in. At the time I was standing by Helen Alexander's bedside giving her medicine. I felt that the person who had come in was her mother. She was a short, dark woman, very stout. She had a brass candlestick in her hand, a red shawl over her shoulders, and wore flannel petticoat, which had a hole in the front. I looked at her as much as to say, 'I'm glad you've come.' She looked at me sternly as much as to say, 'Why wasn't I sent for before?' I gave the medicine to Helen Alexander and then turned to speak to the woman, but no one was there. About 6 o'clock that morning Helen Alexander died. Two days afterward her parents and sister came to Antony, arriving between 1 and 2 in the morning, and I let them in. It gave me quite a turn when I saw her mother, the living likeness of the woman I had seen come into the room two nights before.' Mrs. Pole-Carew verifies this fully, saying that Reddell's description of the mother, whom Reddell had never seen or heard of, was perfectly accurate, and was given before the mother arrived. There was not the slightest resemblance between mother and daughter. The sister stated that they had brass candlesticks at home like the one seen by Reddell, and that at the time her mother was in the habit of wearing a red shawl as described and a flanne petticoat with a hole in the front. The dying girl did not see the apparition, and the mother knew nothing of t, saying she was asleep at the time. She knew of her daughter's illness and

Meeting of the State Spiritualist Association.

To the Editor:-You will no doubt be pleased to know that away out in the state of Oregon the cause of Spiritualism, the grandest of all truths, still flourishes, and that grand results from earnest endeavor have been accom-

The state association has just begur to arouse itself to the fact that a mighty work was awaiting its efforts, and in consequence of this fact they, the members as well as officers, have put themselves on record in a way that if continued from this time on will make them worthy of the support of every Spiritualist in the state.

The state association is chartered by the N. S. A., and is incorporated under the laws of Oregon.

Last Thursday night it closed its first fiscal year, which under good and effi-cient officers, but adverse conditions, was a quite successful year for the assoclation. On that evening the following officers were elected for the term of one year: President, Rev. G. C Love; vice-president, E. DeYongh; secretary, L. B. Larsen; treasurer, Capt. J. H. Mc-

A vote of thanks was given to the re-tiring officers, Dr. D. A. McIntyre, L. B. Larsen, and Capt James H. McMillen. After which, Grants Pass, in the county of Josephine was heard from with a pe-tition containing 23 names asking for a charter from the state association. Rev. G. C. Love had been in Grant Pass as a missionary under the last administration and he secured the names to the petition, and the society is known as the First Spiritual Association of Grants Pass, with the following officers: President, Mrs. John W. Belcher; vice-president, Ernest G. Binder; sec-retary, Col. W. Johnson; treasurer, Mrs. Mary Taylor.

There is good reason to believe the society will increase in numbers and usefulness and become a power for great good in behalf of humanity and the world of truth, and it is also hoped that in the near future other charters will be issued until many towns and communities will be united with the state association in help of the cause we so dearly love. The retiring board arranged a program for an all-day meeting on Sunday the 6th of September, together with a lunch, and the meeting was a grand success, resulting in the addition of 16 names to roll as contributing lay members, while the collections were a total of $15.60. Rev. G. C. Love, at the morning meetng was in a happy frame of mind, and had the secretary busy taking names, and receipting for cash for some minutes as the good friends responded to his call for their assistance with their names and cash.

Speakers for the morning service, Dr. McIntyre, J. S. Greenfield, president of the First Society of Portland, Ore.; Mrs. Nora Armstrong, Mr. Ed F. Kling, Mr. J. C. Farrell, Capt. J. H. McMillen, C. Affolter and Rev. G. E. Beeson.

Col Reed, grand old man, opened the morning service with an invocation. After lunch, there was a meeting of the official board and a charter voted to the First Spiritual Association of Grant's Pass. Rev. J. H. Lucas requested the state association to dorse his ordination certificate which request was granted by a unanimous vote, and an ordination certificate was granted to Col. C. A. Reed, who has spent many years in searching for truth and lecturing in behalf of Spiritualism.

At two o'clock the services were opened by an invocation, and Col. Reed delivered the opening address, being followed by Mrs. Sophia Seip, Mrs. C. Cornelius, Mrs. M. A. Shore under control of Horace G. Manning, Mrs. Ladd-Finnican, and Mr. Ira Taylor. During this service, solos were nicely rendered by Mrs. Campbell, little Charlie Hanna and Mrs. Hanna. At 7:45 the service was opened by invocation, Mr. Joseph N. Dolph recited a poem, and was followed by the opening address delivered by the new president of the state association, Rev. G. C. Love. The congregation sang "I Have was no whit less sincere than that of class of cases in which the apparitions an Assurance," afer which a poem was read by Mrs. Dr. McIntyre. Dr. Wigg gave an address full of deep thought and was listened to attentively, and at the close of his address, Mr. C. Piggott read a poem.

The poems read by Mrs. McIntyre and Mr. Piggott were of their own composition and were well received by the audience. A stirring closing address was delivered by Dr. Charles F. Good, and the meetings of the state spiritualist association remain only in memory and the good they have accomplished Truly it was good to be there; and we hope for greater success in the year to come. REV. G. C. LOVE. Portland, Oregon.

Address of Dr. D. A. McIntyre at the Oregon State Convention.

Gentlemen of the convention, and friends:—The element in all movements, that gives strength and victory is not so much in the chief, as it is in the loyal support of its subordinates and members. When one year ago, you elected me as your president, I accept ed your confidence in my honor, for the good, not so much of individuals, but as in my estimation, it seemed best for the advancement of our beautiful knowledge, Spiritualism.

I am not an organizer; I am not an orator, but I do not think the president of a bank, nor even of the nation, is the one that does the pioneer work, in either case, and, as the office you honored me with was devoid of sentiment, and called for business ability only, I do not see how I could have done any better, than I have in the past.

Some think the state president should go out in the field as a missionary. I do not agree with them in this, as according to our belief only mediums can do this work. So, as I see the conditions surrounding our sensitives, and knowing what a medium is, and how they must, in order to be gifted with the divine gift or power, be swayed by every passing emotion or influence, this, in my opinion, unfits them for holding office; as I think the ones holding this power should be men who are not sensitives, not easily swayed, men who can look at any matter coolly, and dispassionately, and as a matter of business alone, utterly devoid of sentiment, capable of providing the necessary sinews of war for the ones that are by their very fitness for the work of organizing, unfitted, for the cold financial business, which belongs to a board of managers. I say again, that the very fitness for organizers unfits them for contact with the malicious and envious shafts. ways aimed at business organizations of any nature, especially if it be suc-

Again, here is a stronger proof of the unfitness of sensitives being on the boards in a business capacity. If you will look over the list of workers, you vill find the mediums that are in easy circumstances financially, are not ones that have themselves created their bettical persons, not easily swayed in any way, especially by sentiment.

When we fill our executive offices with business filen of recognized ability, we will be able to provide and care for our mediums, take our place and be accorded the same respectable recognition that is given other organizations at the present timen.

Now do not think that I am not in sympathy with mediums, but these are the hard gold facts we have to face, if we as an organization would succeed and we had belter look them in the face before it is too, tate, than allow the present effort in follow its predecessors of the past. 21:

If we will only pull together, and work for the good of the cause, talk over the work, advise calmly and coolly, as all religious organizations do, leave all personal feelings out of it, and instead of laying petty plans to defeat whatever good some one may do, or try to do; to encourage such effort, and cling the more closely together, we will have far more to our credit, than we have.

The business of the executive board, as I understand it, is for business alone We are supposed to collect and disburse all moneys, to issue all ordination papers to ministers of Spiritualism, after ascertaining the fitness of the applicant for the duties named.

In regard to the first, I think the secretary can give you an account of all moneys received and expended, that will be entirely satisfactory to you. As to the second, I think the one great reason we are looked upon as a combina-tion of fakirs and tricksters is because we have allowed a lot of barnacles or fortune tellers, to attach themselves to our ship, that should now be floating along the ocean of life unimpeded by any such obstacle to our progress.

We should have spiritual messages, most assuredly, but they should be given as a thing sacred, and never be brought down to the filthy level of a commercial commodity. I will asknowledge that in the past the negligence of the mass of Spiritualists to protect and care for their sensitives, has forced the mediums, in order to se cure their daily bread, to turn their divine gifts, at times, into this same commercial commodity.

This in turn has brought upon us the present disgraceful state of affairs, by causing persons not fitted for the work, because of their undeveloped psychic condition, and lack of principle, to pose as teachers, as a means of livelihood, thus casting reproach upon our sacred cause.

By the ones ignorant of our methods they are all classed together, and the innocent must bear the calumny and opprobrium which justly belongs to the trickster, of whom I have spoken.

I say we must protect our workers and in order to do this we must accumulate the funds necessary to support our workers, and thus place them above the necessity of earning their daily bread, by competing with the trickster and fakir, which have brought upon us this stigma, and made our beautiful religion a by-word and a reproach.

We must purify our platforms, and teach the truth of our philosophy, and the only way to purify it is to protect the innocent. Strange Story of Three Lights. "The most peculiar case I ever heard of," said a telegraph operator to the Richmond Times man, "occurred in our

"My father was an engineer on the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad, running into Richmond. One night, while quite a distance from the latter city and near-ing the end of his run, he saw a bright red light on the track several hundred yards ahead. The signal was also seen by his fireman and the front brakeman. The train was at once stopped, but not a trace of the signalman or light could be found and the track was all right. Father looked at his watch and noted that the time was 8 o'clock. "The train pulled out, proceeding cautiously for some distance without meeting any obstruction. Several miles farther the light was seen again. Once more stopping, another search was made, with no more success than before. This happened at 8:28. Father was never superstitious but this was inexplicable. Much mystified, he proeeded on the way, only to be stopped a third time by the red light at 8:51. Another search by the crew failed to disclose the slightest trace of the mysterious signalman. Finally, giving up the search, the men returned to their posts and the train at last pulled into Richmond without further mishap. "When father alighted from the cab a telegram was handed to him announcing the death of his mother. Without delay he went to her home, which was several miles out of the city, on the railroad. Scomafter his arrival he learned that a telegram had been sent to him while he was con duty, summoning him to grandmother's bedside. The time at which father had been the mysterious red lights was indelibly impressed on his memory hind upon inquiry he learned that at precisely the minute the first light was seen she had asked if he had come. Sharorepeated the question at the time he saw the second light and the appearance of the third light was simultaneousiwith her death."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A DREAM FULFILLED.

Albert Merfiman, 41 years old, was killed this morning about 2:30, by a north-bound freight train near the Main street crossing in Plantsville, Ct. A peculiar circumstance is a dream of the dead man's mother two weeks ago that Albert would be killed by the cars. At the time she told of her dream. Yesterday she told a caller of the dream and her confidence that it would prove true. When she was awakened by Patrolman Andrews this morning, who called with the news of he son's death, she went to the room of her son Sylvester and awakening him, said, "Ab has been killed by the cars." -Hartford (Ct.) LIFE'S CRUSADE.

The Building of Upright, Helpful Character.

Summer has come and its last glim mer is about to disappear over the hillsides, as the landscape is fast taking on the brilliant hue of autumn, whose golden sheaves remind us of the fast receding years-of the passing of our deeds and chattels-of our life energies. to the incoming-the succeeding generations. Not that we are ready to, or are laying down the staff of life to take it up no more. Not at all. But we are laying down each day the golden sheaves of our gleanings, for the incom ing generations to feed upon, laying down each day great principles of right or wrong, which are silently but surely threading their way into the intricate lives of human beings. Mankind is feeding every day upon the lives of men and women. Character is being builded unconsciously. Our lives are reflected in other lives as indelibly and as sure as in the bit of scenery, the glimpse of a park, or the physical man or woman reflected upon the glass or sheet of a photographic camera when they come in range therewith. So what is our reflection upon the great camera of life? What is the subtle influence that goes out from our being unto the world, doing for mankind? What are we giving to humanity? What of the harvest? Is it rich with the element that will add to the brain and brawn of American citizenship? Will it add to the virtue of the race? Is there! oh, is there, something within our lives—something within our harvest that will free from slavery our American people? Slaves are born sometimes, sometimes reared. Sometimes like a fungus growth—self willed. Prenatal conditions often hamper a child in his ability to acquire knowledge-hamper him in many ways, but a tree that comes up crooked may be made straight; a garden may come up full of weeds, but a thrifty gardener is not going to let them remain there just because conditions brought them-oh, no; they are carefully removed that the beautiful flowers or fruit may not be choked in their existence—that they may not be dwarfed.

And so, methinks the training of the young tendrils in a child's life, or perhaps I should say the utter lack of training, has as much to do with man's slavery, if not more, than prenatal conditions. For the very lack of this training and pruning of the young life, the man and the woman become powerless to overcome-for the lack of it, they become blind to their own iniquities, and then sit enthroned in their blindness, slaves to things the human race should

Man wails about his lack of freedom, and clamors over another man's inhumanity to man, when he himself has not given birth to the first principles of freedom, and can if he will in many cases, trace the other man's inhumanity to his own door. Freedom hunts no man. If you would be free, then cease nursing the very thing that makes of you a slave. We need a broader-minded people—a people who can look their own imperfections square in the face and become master, a people who can overcome. We need men and women at the front, in the rear, all through the ranks of life, who can climb the heights and live superior to the animal man; we need them-the world needs them. Pity 'tis 'tis true, men and women figure in the world's great drama, whose acme of existence is to drag through the mires of earth the silks, sating and fine linen in which they are clothed—to sit in high places, and yet their whole life is centered in the squalor of sensual indulgence, which saps from them the manhood, saps from them the womanhood, that should go out into the great annals of life pure and unpolluted, add ing their momentum toward moving the race on to a victorious sweep.

Everything that saps our vital pow ers-that makes us less manly-less womanly, robs the human race of just so much vital energy—just so much power, which is the world's just due from every man-from every woman. Are we makers of the people, and are they being enriched by the manner of our life? Are we giving them the best, and nothing short of the best there is in us? Are we so mastering the great problems that come up for man to solve, and making the solution thereof practical in our lives, that our posterity may find in us and in our building a refuge, in our pathway a surer and safer footing for our having preceded them on life's journey? When life's drama is ended, and we have responded to the bugle call of the angel, "Come up high-er," can we look back into the lives of men and women and find them better and stronger for our struggles—find that we have been builders of a noble purpose in the human race? How wonderful is life and how much we ought to make of it! Gold is naught compared to the great principles of right in human life. It be comes as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, unless it have back of it moral and vital worth. Its glitter is spurious unless a spirit that is true and loyal lies beneath its surface. Legal tender t may be, but what a pity it is bartered for things that dwarf and degrade the human soul. Man needs all of his faculties alert and alive, yet he deliberately bays and imbibes that which dulls and debauches his sense of right. Buys his own iniquity, and pays for it with -what a price! If it were only the money it cost him, but nay, the cost beggars description. Does it pay a man to do well? Does it pay him to live right? Does it pay a man to struggle for freedom? loves it, it does. If he is no traitor to the human race, he surely will. He will leave no stone unturned in his own life nor count any struggle lost, that ushers into existence a nobler, more virtuous or worthy life.

Place your stakes far out at sea, What though the billows surge and What of the struggles that come to attention in the scientific world than that made by K. Leo Minges, of Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Minges is to short men and women what the great wizard, Edison, is to electricity. He has gathered more information relative to bone, muscle and sinew than any one else in existence. Making people grow tall has been a hobby with Mr. Minges for years, and the results he has accomplished are startling to a high degree. By his method every man or woman not over fifty years of age can be made to grow from two to eight inches in height, and any one older than that may increase his height perceptibly. His method has the indorsement of leading physicians, and several prominent educational institutions have adopted it for the better physical development of their pupils. If you would like to increase your height you should read the book which tells how this remarkable discovery was made and reveals to you the secrets of how to grow tall. It is free. You are not asked to spend a single cent and if you desire it we will send you the statements of hundreds who have grown from two to eight inches in height by following this method. The results are quickly accomplished. Many have grown as much as three inches in two months. There is no inconvenience, no drugs or medicines, no operation. Mere ly the application of a scientific principle in a perfectly hygienic and harmless way. Your most intimate friends need not know what you are doing. All communications will be sent in plain envelopes. The book "The Secrets of How to Grow Tall," contains illustrations that will interest and instruct any one. One thousand of these books will be given away absolutely free, postage prepaid, while the present edition lasts. If you want to grow tall write to-day, in strictest confidence, for a free copy. SPIRITUAL MESSAGES.

They Come to Us by the Hand of Spirit Messengers.

Has God ever sent a message or made a revelation to man? No, not immediately.

He does nothing immediately. He governs the whole universe, not imme diately, but mediately. That is, he gov erns by law, by immutable and eternal

He does all things by unalterable

Since God is immanent in nature, he never did, he never can, do anything above, beyond or contrary to nature. In the very nature of things, there fore, no special revelations, no special providences, no supernatural or mirac alous interference with the operation of natural law, ever occurred. Therefore, he never did reveal anything to man immediately. Men and women who imagine that God speaks to them audibly, or by a still small voice in their inner consciousness, or by certain definite impressions, are but the dupes of their own stupid idiosyncrasies Such people are haunted by the old crude theological idea of a personal

God outside of nature. Whenever we fully grasp the idea of God as being immanent in nature, they must of necessity abandon their childish notions of the supernatural and realize that any revelation coming from God to man must be through the operations of nature's laws. But, if human testimony is worth anything, in all ages of the world's history, and among all peoples, in strict accordance with nature's laws, persons from the spirit world have been coming to mortals on the earth with messages of love, comfort, instruction and warning whenever conditions have been favor

In the history of Babylonia, Assyria, Egypt, India, Greece and Rome, numerous accounts of such visitations of denizens of the spirit world to persons in the flesh are recorded. Socrates than whom Greece in her grandest civilization, never produced a wiser or better man, was guided and controlled by his attendant spirit during his whole life.

In Newish history, we have the most numerous accounts of such visitations. "Three men" appeared to Abraham to warn him of the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah. Mark you, these were not gods or devils, but "men," spirit men in a materialized form. "Two men" visited Lot at his home in Sodom and delivered a message of warning to him. One that reads this account must see that these "two men" were materialized spirit forms.

At Peniel, Jacob had a wonderful visitation by a materialized spirit. "And there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."

Note you, this was not a god or a devil or some superhuman being, but "a. man."

Daniel's visions were interpreted to him by "a man clothed in linen whose loins were girded with pure gold of Uphaz." Belshazzar and a thousand of his nobles were regaling themselves in the king's palace, and, "in the same hour came forth the fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candle stick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace, and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote." In the delivery of this message of warning, it was not something resembling the fingers of a man's hand, but "the fingers of a man's hand," that wrote the message and which the king saw. Here is a clear example of a materialized hand and of independent spirit writing, strange, exceedingly strange, that ministers who believe this account to be infallibly correct, denounce the idea that spirits can and do write messages on slates or tablets? scance under a cloud that covered the mountain. And there appeared two men, Moses and Elijah, and "they were talking with Jesus." To one that be-lieves this to be a divine record, could there possibly be stronger proof that man lives on after death, that he can under favorable conditions, materialize so as to be seen by persons in the flesh, and that he can talk to them?

Jesus, after his crucifixion, appeared to his chosen friends in materialized form. John received the contents of the Book of Revelation, in a trumpet seance, on the Isle of Patmos, from the hand of a spirit. John says: "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and I heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet, saying, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches." And he says, further, "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things and he saith unto me, see thou do it not. "I am a fellow-servant with thee and with thy brethren, the prophets, and with them which keep the words of this book, worship God." Isn't it wondrous strange that ministers who implicitly believe all of these accounts of spiritual phenomena recorded in the Bible, persist in denunciation of Spiritualism? If men and women of culture, of refinement, of truthfulness, are to be believed, the spirits of loved ones who have crossed over the divide, do frequently come to mortals in the flesh. bringing messages of love and comfort. Are these messages or revelations that come to us from the spirit world, to be. always accepted as infallible truth? No. infallibility is a quality never found in humanity. The only infallible is the

The finite is always fallible. These messages come from human beings, on the other side of life, who are finite and, consequently, fallible. The greatest calamity that has ever afflicted mankind is the theological assumption that we have absolute infallible truth revealed to us, that we have an infallible standard of truth in the church, in the priesthood, in the pope, or in the Bible. Men who thoroughly believe that they have the absolute truth, an infallible standard of faith and practice, are of ecessity, dangerous men. In the very nature of things they must needs be proscriptive, intolerant and tyrannical. t is just as natural as that the night collows the day, that they should seek, by persuasion if they can and by force if they must, to make all others conform to their standard.

It was not the inherent wickedness of John Calvin which caused him to have Servetus burned with a slow fire made of green wood. No, the order grew out of the very benevolence of his nature. He hoped and prayed that, by prolonging the doctor's physical torture, he might be induced to recant his heresy and go to heaven from the holocaust. What were a few fleeting agonies from the green wood fire compared to the sulphurous flames of eternal hell fire? Are not such men exceedingly Torquemada, the inquisitor general of the Inquisition, was a devout, plous man, filled with religious zeal to excel all others in the suppression of heresy. The flerce Duke of Alva, who laid waste the Netherlands and deluged that fair land with human brood, was but an executor of the diabolical dogma of infallibility. Simon Montford, who was commis Price $1.

And because they could not convince some of their neighbors, the Quakers, that they had the infallible truth, they

Witt Talmage stood up in the Brooklyn Tabernacle and demanded that the police be turned loose upon Col. Ingersoll for criticising and denouncing his assumed infallible standard of faith and practice. If these men's premises were true, their reasoning was good. In the 15th century a great plague was prevalent in Italy. Hundreds of thousands of people died. It was commonly believed there that the plague was caused by wholesale poisoning of the waters by miscreants who sought to depopulate the country. Now, if such an idle fancy had been true, would not the authorities have been justified in have been their sacred duty to have done so. Well, then, if the church knows that she has the infallible truth, can she afford to let scotling skeptics sow broadcast the poison of infidelity and send a very large part of every generation to eternal hell fire? Were not the Albigenses and the Waldenses exterminated to prevent them from poisoning the religious atmosphere? After the massacre of St. Bartholo mew, were there not sixty thousand Huguenots who could no longer poison the eligious atmosphere of Paris? But why pursue this matter further? Whole nations and continents have time and again been baptised with human blood on account of this assumed infallible standard of faith and practice from the spirit world, come from human beings who are possessed of the limitations common to humanity, and consequently, fallible. Besides in the spirit world (especially on the planes near the earth), there are all kinds of spirits. Some are intelligent and some very ignorant; some are good, honest, truthful spirits, and some are bad, dishonest, untruthful spirits: and others range in all states between these extremes. The ignorant or the wicked can come with their messages, just as well as the wise and the good. You can never tell from whom the message comes unless the spirit tells you Jesus took with him Peter, John and something or does something to prove James up into the mountain and held a his or her identity. And it is not to be supposed that our more about the things of this earth life than they did while living in the flesh. To consult them, therefore, about such things is idle nonsense. Whenever a medium hangs out his or her sign, advertising that for a cash consideration. he or she will tell your fortune, tell the kind of woman or man that you are to marry, tell you how to make a fortune. or how to discomfit your enemies, shun him or her as a loathsome, leprous

And when spirits undertake to tell you where to find gold mines, oil wells, or of some scheme to make money, you may know that they are lying spirits or that the medium is a flagrant fraud Well, then, how are we to determine whether the messages which come to us are true or false? Just as we determine all things in the ordinary course of life, by the due exercise of our God-given reason.

But if there be such uncertainty about spirit messages, of what good are

Well, now, if your mother, wife, sister, or daughter comes to you and tells you something or does something to unmistakably prove to you her identity, and hen tells you that there is no death. that she lives on in the spirit world. hat she is happy and that she is patiently waiting to meet and greet you when you cross over, would the message be of no good to you? Or if your father, husband, brother or son, whom you knew in the earth life to be selfish and wayward, comes to you and tells you something or does something to conclusively establish his identity, and then tells you that he is still living, that he has not been cast into an eternal hell fire, that he is not happy on account of his selfishness and waywardness in the earth life, that he has spirit teachers of a very high order, that he is beginning to see the light of truth and feel its uplifting power, and that he is told by his spirit teachers that he can and will evolve, develop and grow into a state in which he shall enter the higher planes of the spirit world, and that his condition is slowly, but steadily growing better, would such a message be of no value to you?

Yes, such messages come to us, tell ing us that, though our ignorance and our misdeeds have caused us much trouble in this life and will surely cause us much more in the spirit life, yet the door of mercy and of hone is never shut in our faces, but that we can and shall develop and grow into a higher and better life. They tell us that eternal progress is in store for each of us. Not that man, by sudden leaps and bounds, or by instantaneous conversion, attains to a heavenly state, but by persistence in seeking the light and endeavoring to walk in it.

The heights by great men reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight, But they, while their companions slept, Were tolling upward in the night."

MINERAL PARK CAMP.

Closing of the Camp at Los Angeles, California. in the Mayslower, imagined that they

Ere this communication reaches you the Mineral Park camp-meeting will be among the things of the past. In many respects the element of newness pre dominated in this camp. There was a new official board, a few new workers, and decidedly new grounds. These last were not only new in camp-meeting uses, having previously been occupied by only one little camp-meeting, that of the Free Methodists, but they were also new in their almost native wildness, a wildness that has continued because in the midst of the stir and bustle of human life that is surging all around the spot, its peculiar location and condition have hitherto prevented it from being disturbed by the iconoclastic hands of man, and so, while on the brow that overlooks the canyon or gorge are reared almost palatial residences, and all the modern accessories of a rapidly growing community are plainly in evidence, this one spot has been shot through with comparatively little of the works of man. By a poetic nature it might be designated a bosky dell; Mattle Hull called it a weird spot; and Mrs. Lillie, in writing to the Philosophical Journal, said:

running down and exterminating all such miscreants? In fact, it would 'For myself, I am agreeably surprised with the new grounds. There are bubbling springs of pure water and running brooks under the shade of trees and running vines. There are half cottage and half tents built by the proprietors for camping and they are very comfortable and inviting."

The grounds are located in a kind of gorge called by the Spaniards an arroyo (Arroyo Seeo I believe is the name given this particular gorge by the early Spanish settlers), and are wooded by alders, willows and sycamores, inter-woven and festooned here and there by heavy networks of wild vines. They are reached from the electric car, by a zigzag path down the hillside, and thence a long rustic bridge leads the way over stream number one, through a wilderness of vines and alders, and over stream number two to the lower level upon which are built the public auditorium, dining-hall and refreshment stand. Electric lights are strung through the grounds wherever needed, from tree to tree, and a gas factory in the vicinity throbs through the nights while manufacturing gas to light the dining-room and "cottages." The "cottages" spoken of by Mrs. Lillie, are built upon frameworks several feet above the uneven ground along on both sides of the rustic bridge, and those who were fortunate enough to be assigned a place in them or to secure one, as the case may be, were lifted above the dirt and stony, uneven ground upon which others must pitch their tents. The line of demarkation between the comfort and cleanliness of the two conditions was sharp and pronounced-as is too much the case in the world generally.

Mrs. Hull told me that the conditions compared favorably with those of the beginning of some of the old camps, as she remembers them, and she said she attended the beginning of several of So, if Mineral Park continues to be the meeting-place of future camps, no ful and desirable place throughout. 1 suppose it is called-Mineral Park because its waters are said to contain mineral elements. Delicious, is what many people declare the drinking water to be, although upon many it produced some unpleasant effects at first. The Los Angeles and tadena electric line the air above our heads; and the trains of the Santa Fe and Salt Lake systems hand. The South Pasadena ostrich farm is located not far from the grounds, and the peculiar cry of this monster bird—part boom and part roar—could be nightly heard by the camp-The first time I heard it I wondered whether it were possible that a mountain lion or some other ravenous beast of prey could have found a hidden lair in some secluded corner of the gorge.

Sunday, Sept. 6. (I am writing this before the close of the camp), saw a larger concourse of people upon the grounds than upon any previous day. Moses and Mattie Hull, and W. C. Bowman were the speakers of the day; Mrs. Nickless-Cobb gave the message of the afternoon, and J. W. Henley and Maud L. Von Freitag those of the evening followed as a finale to the proceedings of the day, by the fire test given by Mrs. Suydam-Green.

I have heard many compliments for Mrs. Cobb's work, and it seems to be the prevailing opinion that she does better than ever before. As is well known, there is a great diversity in the work done through the different mediums, and gathering up family groups of the departed ones seems to Cobb's specialty. She seems to trace up all the departed ones that are of near kin to the one she reads for.

Moses Hull seemed to have retained the popularity gained by his last year's work, and Mattie Hull, whom many of s had never seen before, made a place at once in the hearts of her hearers by her beautiful and spiritual lectures, as well as by her lyceum work.

Mrs. Kibby, an old worker from Cincinnati, did very acceptable work as a message bearer, and also as far as opportunity presented itself, in dispensing the philosophy of Spiritualism. Mrs. Florence Robson, a young worker and a new light, gave three very fine inspirational discourses. Aside from the those mentioned in my previous letter, other mediums helping in the work, as far as circumstances permitted, were Mrs, Mary C. Vlasek, Mrs. Millie Horder, Mrs. Mary P. Morrell, Mrs. Phebe Cooper, Mrs. Alice Mc-Comb. Mrs. Daily, Mr. Connely, Mrs. Wright and others, and all these should have their due meed of credit, for, as one of them said in a morning conference, their work-taking the Spiritualistic field in general-makes possible the more noticed and more noticeable the front at these great conclaves. On the 10th of eptember came the election of officers, and the following were selected, viz.: Edwin P. Cobb. president; Mrs, Augusta Armstrong, vice-president; Mrs. E. Ashby, corresponding secretary; Mr. L. LaGrill, financial secretary, and Helen Gardner

In justice to Mr W. J. Black, the faithful and efficient retiring financial secretary, I wish to state that he was a strong candidate both for the presidency and for treasurer (he having de-crared he would not again take the office from which he is retiring), and his friends, many of whom have been made by daily witnessing his steady and and pleasant adherence to his onerous duties of gate-keeper etc., during this camp, expressed great disappointment because he had seemed—through the force of circumstances-to fail of receiving the appreciation he has de-

OBSESSION.

The interesting Experiences of an investigator.

Through the kindness of the editor of The Progressive Thinker, I have been granted space to give my experience on he above subject. For several years I had desired to investigate the phenomena of Spiritualism, but living remote from any organization or medium an opportunity did not occur until I had moved to the town of Joneshoro, Ind., and had made the acquaintance of a number of Spiritualists. At this time my wife was quite sick and in order that she might share in the investigation, I induced Mr. A. Stevens, of Marion, Ind... to give a trumpet seance at my house. This was Mr. Stevens' first effort away from home, and consequently not very good results were obtained. agreed to continue my investigation. In a short time Charles Barnes, of Marion, Ind., gave a trumpet seance in our town, and I attended the same, and was pretty well convinced that Spiritualism s not all a fake. In the following evening Mr. Barnes gave a seance in the light, and a note was thrown from the cabinet addressed to me, stating that I could become a good medium, and advised me to develop. Accordingly I commenced sitting for development. At this time, December, 1894, it was well understood that my wife could not live long, and of this she was fully aware. At my fifth sitting the spirits made their presence manifest; at this I was greatly pleased, and so was my wire.

From this time on I had a number of seances at my house, and as my wife was a bright woman and kept an unclouded mind until death, she had a very good opportunity to learn much of the philosophy of Spiritualism. Moreover we held a number of developing circles in which she participated, and at one time she felt the spirit presence quite forcibly; it was understood between us that, if possible, she was to be one of my controls. She died in June, 1895. At this time I had developed so far as to receive communications by means of a planchette; table tippings and rappings soon followed.

I continued to have seances and developing circles at my home but there was no marked change till August, about sixty days after my wife's death. While sitting alone in the dark she spoke in an independent voice, she being about five feet to the left of me. About this time I got the following advice by means of the planchette: would advise you to develop for an impressional speaker. We will give you Daniel Webster for a control, a man of whom you well might be proud. You are a caution, boy."

The spirit in control gave no evidence as to who he was. I thanked the spirit intelligence for his kindness and said I was willing to do whatever was best. but I did not feel that I could ever be a public speaker, but thought that I would like to be a trumpet medium very well.

At this juncture I must mention the conduct of a cat, the only animal of any kind my wife and I possessed. Shortly after her death I noticed his strange them. For instance, at Cassadaga, she said it was like walking through piles of ashes the first year. could, see-saw them, and work his toes and at the same time champ his jaws doubt in time it can be made a beauti- until his mouth would be covered with foam. At times he would grab an article in his teeth and shake it and make a strange noise.

One evening when I was sitting in the dark for development, he seemed to be greatly excited and capered about the room, jumped upon the table in front of me, and on to the dresser. When I of cars clatter at a over the verge succeeded in getting the door open, he of the camp on a long bridge high up in dashed out. On another evening he acted in a similar manner, and soon of the Santa Fe and Salt Lake systems skirt or cross the arroyo on either that he had been killed, but there was room for doubt as to the truth of it. We will now return to the independent voice. When my wife spoke to me I could not hear what she said, but recognized her voice. It was not long, however, before I could hear my name as well as hers spoken quite distinctly I now began to hear other voices than that of my wife, and they were nearer to me than hers, and I could hear them in the daylight and I could at times get a part of a sentence, but never anything complete and satisfactory. voices were strictly independent and clear, and in no sense clairaudient. While I was anxious that others than myself might hear them, yet they would never occur only when I was alone. In a few weeks these voices began to die away, and I could feel that some one was gradually getting control of my body. This development had been done while I was engaged with my daily affairs as much or more than while I was sitting, and I soon ceased to sit gether. I had now been investigating not far from one year, and although the time was short, I had read diligently The Progressive Thinker and the Light of Truth, and had gleaned what I could from those who had been long in the ranks of Spiritualism, so that I was fairly well informed as towhat is taught concerning the development of mediums as well as what should be done in cases of obsession. (To be continued.) H. L. DAILEY. Jonesboro, Ind.

Goodness Lives Forever. "The evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones!" This quotation emphasizes the pervasiveness and power of evil; but it is misleading if it be not taken in a limited sense. A very little knowledge of history leads to the conclusion that there has been a tremendous advance in the moral condition of the world compared with the past. Is not this unimpeachable proof that evil brings its own destruction, while goodness lives forever? What is evil but disease? It may taint and destroy; but those who survive will either have found a cure, or else will have escaped serious contamination. That is the physical point of view. From the spiritual side the more degraded one is the greater the suffering and the more diffi-cult it is to reach the heights of true iberty and happiness. Evil plants the seeds of death Despite all care; Ever doth its tainted breath Pollute the air.

Strongest minds—should evil grasp— Disease shall bear: Painful wounds—from fervid clasp— Recruits all share.

Mental ills and fleshly pain Result from wrong; Knowledge sound shall keep from stain-Refined and strong. Virtue gives the purest health

Throughout the years-Priceless boon that greatest wealth Implores with tears, Evil dies—its fairest slaves Proclaim its doom;

Goodness lives—in endless waves—

PAST AND FUTURE.

Read Before the California State Spirit ualists Association.

We as Spiritualists, our mediums and speakers, have in the last fifty-five years accomplished a great work, far greater than many of us realize, cause it is a leaven working secretly and silently in the divine human soul, lifting the mental and spiritual desires of men and women far above the super-ficial, spectacular and frivolous affairs of material life. We have by the aid and guidance of those in celestial life torn away the pall of doubt and hopelessness which crushed and almost paralyzed the life and consciousness of many millions of our fellow men, and given cause for trillions of our glorified race in the higher spheres to sing songs of eternal love and praise. Our work has been a peculiar one, manifesting largely in individual life, often opposed by social friends and unaided, or perecuted, by our nearest and dearest relatives. Such a work has required firmness, patience, a worshipful love of truth, an untiring devotion to the interests of humanity on earth, and filial obedience to our arisen helpers and guides. What of the future?

Progress is eternal. We are spirits now. There is no stopping-place in the divine life. Our cause will proceed and expand until its vital principles shall enlighten and spiritualize all mankind; yet we "must not sleep on guard." have only cleared away the brush and demolished the outworks of the enemy. The main fortress with its gloomy walls and truth-defying embattlements mains almost unscathed, and the hosts of mammon and theology are straining every nerve to obstruct our divine work, and to retain their influence and rule over the uncultured masses. I will not say that another step forward is essential to our continued growth, but I do assert that those vital doctrines announced by the angel world in the beginning of the new dispensation, namely, "We have come to redeem the world from the thralldom of ignorance, poverty and crime, and to lestroy the prestige and power of a commercial and paganistic religion, should be placed in the foreground of the spiritual field and accentuated as the present and immediate future sphere and character of Spiritualistic effort.

A theistic, idolatrous idealism has cursed the world for ages. Man's central thought has been kept upon the unknown and the unknowable, thus incul cating almost a total ignorance and disregard of human rights and of his own divine life and natural immortality.

Humanity is silently sighing for a religion of facts, of reality. Sick, weary, confused and destroying each other by thousands, how gladly it would, if it only could, cast off a theistic religion of cold and heartless formality and joyfully accept a warm, living, magnetic religion of nature and of man. When the divinity of man is recognized by the governing element in society, there will be no sweatshops. The lives of little children, and helpless females will not be allowed to be coined into gold by capitalism through the agency of an effete and unjust industrial system; then every child of earth will be looked upon as sacred, his or her life and rights as divine.

When the idea of divinity is removed from the unknown, the mythical and unreal, and placed where it belongs in man, the living, the real, the highest immortal, the only known divinity, then our earth will blossom as the rose, and an affirmative answer to the prayer so often felt and expressed, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven," will be at our door. I have brought to view a mere glimpse of the future field of labor for the vanguard of our ranks. Should they fail to occupy the field, then the mighty hosts in ce lestial life, which are leading this movement and conquest, will give the vineyard to those who will do their will and bidding. B. F. FRENCH. San Francisco, Cal.

Spiritual Music.

It does seem as though nothing is actially needed in life that is not some time supplied. Since man came upon the earth his necessities have been supplied through some law by man himself "Supply and Demand." This has certainly been true with regard to Spiritualism. When it has needed leaders the world seemed to say, "Here is the world of man, take your choice." In no greater respect has this law of supply and demand been manifest in Spiritualism than in the demand for appropriate music. Away back in the early days, J. O. Barrett, Dr. J. M. Peebles and others arranged appropriate words to familiar music and compiled a song-book called the Spiritual Harp, by the way, a very useful book still. There have been others, but none has come upon the scene with any more beautiful harmony and appropriate words than those of C. Payson Longley. "Echoes From the World of Song," in two volumes of 50 songs each gave a sweet inspiration to Spiritualism, like the dew of heaven gives to the thirsty flower, and everybody sang those songs.

Now comes another book of 76 songs. entitled "Longley's Choice Collection of Beautiful Songs," and in every particular they hold an advantage over his other books-style, size and shape, if not in the harmony. True, there is an "ear mark" about Brother Longley's music by which a critic might detect the author without the name, but that does not lessen the harmony.

I have used all of his previous books in public and I know they are eminently satisfactory to spiritual audiences. call his last his best. DR. T. WILKINS.

Constinution Needs a Cure. A simple remedy only is not sufficient. specially if the relief is brought about by the use of salts, aloes, rhubarb, or ome similar purgative or cathartic. They temporarily relieve but they weaken the bowels and make the condi tion worse. In constipation the bowels require strengthening, toning, and something that will assist them to do their work naturally and healthfullyin short a tonic laxative of the highest order. That is what Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is. It both relieves and permanently cures by removing the cause of the difficulty. It positively cures dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, headache and all other diseases which grow out of sick and ologged bowels. One small dose a day will cure any case, light or bad. It is not a patent medicine. The full list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It costs nothing to try it. Wine, Women and Cards.

By the following from the secular press we are again reminded of the Gar den of Eden story:

"After obtaining nearly $30,000 forged checks from William Green, the local candidate for county commission er, William E. Welcome of New York whose relatives are among the wealthiest and most exclusive families in that city, pleaded guilty yesterday before Judge Neely and within a few days will be sentenced. Wine, women and cards are responsible for his downfall, he says.

"His people in New York gave him everything an unlimited purse could provide. He began to associate with a fast set, and was a frequent and heavy plunger on the Metropolitan tracks. Finally the crash came. The young fellow's family found that he was under arrest on a charge of bigamy.

"He was guilty, confessed and was sentenced to the penitentiary, but the political influence of his people soon secured him a pardon. Then he came to Chicago to begin life anew.

"For several months he kept in the narrow path of honesty. Then his old lust for gambling overcame him, and he began to forge checks. Within a few days, by means of his family's name, he had induced William Green to cash $29,-000 worth of valueless paper.

"When confronted with the evidence of his guilt, Welcome confessed, and yesterday pleaded guilty.

I am guilty, and am willing to take any penalty you give me," he declared to Judge Neely. "I tried to be honest, but the old love for the tenderloin life

To say there is no hope for a person who tries, against an inborn disposition to control his vicious nature, would be unphilosophical, unspiritual, unnatural. There is hope while there is life, but some natures require more suffering to awaken the soul, which is always good in man, to the knowledge of its supremacy, its predominance in man.

There is a pathetic side to the story as reported for the press. The pathetic side reflects the unsuccessful struggle between the good and bad, and the victory of the bad over the good.

There is a ridiculous side in putting up the old target of man's intellectual, (?) manly (?) supremacy; bringing women into the case as the devil, the tempter and the pack-horse for all of man's vices.

He who falls should be helped to rise, and if he again falls he should again be helped; he should be helped in some way more impressive and encouraging than by confinement and being made to labor in a penitentiary, unless he is found to be incorrigible and irresponsible. In this case it is well to place him where he can harm no one and be of use to his fellow-man by the labor he performs for the state whose laws he disregards.

We do not believe in harshness or brutality to even a hopeless criminal, and know that drastic measures must often be used upon stubborn convicts.

Our laws should be respected for the peace and safety of law-abiding citizens but in fixing a penalty for crime reform should be the prime motive, which often requires some kind of pun ishment, but never vengeance.

The ludicrous side of this special case was making women shoulder the blame.

"Wine, women and cards!"

What a sandwich for the most sensitive part of our humanity to lie be tween. Could we not amend the assertion by striking out "women," and leaving wine and cards and the contracted habit for both upon which to place the blame for this young man's downfall and hard lot? Let us drop the women out of the case for the sake of our allegiance to our own mothers, sisters, wives, daughters and sweethearts...

Let us go into the home of the boy and if there we find not the cause of his fall and hopeless struggle for right, for sobriety and for noble manhood, let us follow him through his childhood and , his youth and examine his environments and see if the opposite sex would not have been his angel of peace and his guide to virtue if he had struggled then for the good and the beautiful.

Our jails and penitentiaries seem more apt to have a degrading instead of a reformatory effect upon a young man who never took such institutions into account until incarcerated, and as a rule when the iron door of a prison shuts upon a real criminal his future of church needed the money.

earth-life is marked for the downward course. The stigma is often too indelible for erasure. If a young man is backed by a strong moral power and indomitable will, he may recover and reach the high mark of respectability to which his soul might aspire, but as a rule the prison doors, especially of the penitentiary, cast a permanent obstacle in the road of progress and success of our young men When our prisons become institutions of reform; when our young married people and those contemplating marriage school themselves upon the subject of prenatal influences and let their schooling govern in the matter of progeny we can hope for less criminality and less use for penitentiaries.

Discrediting History. That the Romish priests, etc., are still up to their old tricks is evident from the fact, as stated in the Truth Seeker, that they are seeking to pervert and discredit historical facts, in order to make the church appear in a better light before the world. Says the Truth Seeker:

The Catholic church is in these days trying to reconstruct its history in such manner as to remove some of the stigma attached to the doings of the popes. Not long ago a Paulist preacher gave us an entirely new version of the Galileo incident, from which it appeared that the astronomer, far from being persecuted for maintaining the motion of the earth, was merely disciplined for insisting that the church should adopt the view that the motion of the earth was distinctly taught in the holy scriptures! Another instance of reconstructed history comes from a Protestant source, the University of Chicago, but concerns the Catholic church. Prof. Oliver Josenh Thatcher of that institution of learning declares that the papal bull known as Laudabiliter, reputed to have been issued by Pone Adrian IV., giving to Henry II. of England a grant of Ireland in fief, is no more than a "Latin exercise of some twelfth century student writen in imitation of a papal

The genuineness of this bull has been frequently denied of late years by Catholic controvertists, but it is asserted, on the other hand, that no document of equal age is better authenticated. his pamphlet on "Ireland and the Pope" Judge Jas. G. Maguire of California, gives a full translation of Adrian's bull, taken from O'Halloran's "History of Ireland," where it appears in Latin. Adrian, who is the only English pope in the list of Roman pontiffs, addresses King Henry as his "dearest son in Christ," and having thrown him a profuse verbal bouquet, proceeds to say that there being "no doubt but that Ire-land and all the islands on which Christ the sun of righteousness hath shone and which have received the doctrine of the Christian faith, do belong to the jurisdiction of St. Peter and the holy Roman church, as your excellency also doth acknowledge; therefore we are the more solicitous to propagate the righteous plantation of faith in this land, etc. "You, then, my dear son in Christ, his holiness continues, "have signified to us your desire to enter into the island of Ireland, in order to reduce the people to obedience under the laws and to extirpate the plants of vice; and that you are willing to pay from each [house] a yearly pension of one penny to St. Peter and that you will preserve the rights of the churches of the land whole and inviolate. We, therefore with that grace and acceptance suited to your pious and laudable design, and favorably assenting to your petition, do hold it good and acceptable, that for extending the borders of the church, restraining the progress of vice, for the correction of manners, the planting of virtue, and the increase of religion, you whatever shall pertain to the honor of God and the welfare of the land; and that the people of this island receive you honorably and reverence you as their lord; the rights of the churches still remaining sacred and inviolate, and saving to St. Peter the annual pension of one penny for every house ... Given at Rome, in the year of salvation The authenticity of this bull, Judge Maguire asserts, is attested by all Irish historians with the exception of a certain Abbe MacGeoghegan and one

Thomas Mooney, "from Geraldus Cambrensis in 1178 to the Nun of Kenmare in 1876, and the last edition of Haverty by Thomas Kelly in 1885." A mass of testimony is given as to the genuineness of the document, and those who would dispute it must discredit Irish Catholic torians who are accepted as authority in everything else they wrote. Years after the date of its issue Pope Alexander III. confirmed it in another bull, and no record is produced to show that either bull is recalled. Pope Alexander

"Forasmuch as these things which have been on good reasons granted by our predecessors deserve to be confirmed in the fullest manner, and considering the grant of the dominion of the realm of Ireland by the venerable Pope Adrian, we, pursuing his foot-steps, do ratify and confirm the same (reserving to St. Peter and to the holy Roman church, as well in England as in Ireland, the yearly pension of one penny from every house), provided that the abominations of the land being removed, that barbarous people, Christians only in name, may, by your means, be reformed, and their lives and conversation mended, so that their disordered church being thus reduced to regular discipline, that nation may, with the name of Christians, be so in act and deed. Given at Rome, in the ear of salvation 1172." In Johnson's Cyclopedia, edited by President Barnard of Columbia Colege, we find the confirmatory statement that "in 1155 Pope Adrian IV, aupossession of Ireland on condition of paying an annual tribute. In 1172 Henry made his firist descent upon Ireland." On the whole, the fact in dispute appears to be as well attested as anything else in the history of the

We are informed by Judge Maguire that "in the year 1152 Ireland was a prosperous and independent nation, holding her place among the nations of the earth"; that "argosies, laden with ensigns to her banner;" that "the Irish people were noted for their bravery, chivalry, and generosity," and were "learned and respected." The description does not tally with that contained in Alexander's bull above quoted, but our author explains that the decline of Ireland began with the English invasion. Instead of "that barbarous people," as Alexander termed them, being reformed and their lives and conversation mended," they became worse than ever. The survivors of the Spanish

Ireland four hundred years later, describe the people as "savages." What could be more likely and credible than that Pope Adrian should sell out the island to the English king? He was himself an Englishman, Henry was a Catholic monarch, and the tolligence, or God is all, and, therefore, that matter is but a of nature, makes anthems of praise unto God. From the manifestation of God; or whether we accept that which song of birds to the sweet whisperings of the night, and all seems to be the conclusion of science; that matter, in its the breezes man can imitate, and can transcend, for he gives primal and original estate includes all and therefore is eternal, the Ego which is in man must, either belong to one or ture of religion, the loftler passion of the spiritual affections, the other, which ever is ultimate and eternal, and if immortal must be immortal from the past as well as immortal in the future.

The knowledge of the future existence brought to the consciousness of man by inspiration and revelation, and espea tendency in this direction, but do not establish immortality. They only establish that which can be taken as a sufficient of the physical body as an intelligent spiritual being. Then tality can only be proven by its experience. Eternity is not of the mathematician the knowledge of what the whole circle is, if his solution is correct, so the segment of the circle in which man finds himself as an intelligent being on the earth and in the spirit states that follow the earthly existence is sufficient to prove the circle of immortality.

The past existence you are liable to ignore, yet even if you are a materialist, a scientist and believe in evolution, the traced through all the stages of its unfoldment to the present time, and back to the primal molecule and the primal atom. If in that investigation the man of science fails to discover the source from which the soul has had its being; if science in its experimentum crucis has failed to declare 7 the particular period or juncture where the spirit of man appears; if science is totally inadequate, while showing the general unfoldment in the physical man, and in the physical possibilities of what the mind may present, to declare what spirit is, whence it came and whither it is going, or to reyeal any portion of that spiritual realm which is within and than the brain that it vivifies; greater than the body, which without man, then we say, whatever does reveal, whatever is its temporary, transient machinery of manifest can declare it, whatever more fully and completely explains the complete human being, must be the larger knowledge. So where science pauses the knowledge of the spirit begins; where the materialist ceases to know the Spiritualist has knowledge, and where the external methods of deduction are baffled, inspiration and all that realm of intuition in which inspiration is found, must have its beginning. Therefore, we include inspiration and revelation as a portion of man's knowledge, and the source of all information concerning the spirit, without which and its added duductions science would utterly fail to establish the existence of the soul over time and sense, and this is added testimony. But if it

But science meeting this half-way, and in venturing beyond its own realm, is perfectly willing to draw the analogy perceive distant or minute objects if it is not aided, any which we have pictured; perfectly willing to extend the simple activities of the mind into a domain where it has never been able to reach without spirit aid, and accept that other realm which is within and above man, and which by revelation and through intuition has come to the consciousness of man to-day.

Therefore, epitomizing the knowledge of the past in the realm of nature, man is the expression of the aggregation and the perfection, through processes of evolution, of all that has preceded him. But as nothing can be evolved that has not previously been involved, the intelligence that is manifested by man must sometime and somewhere have been introduced into the physical or material life, whether whether in that a priori consciousness that takes charge of the germ of life when the mother first becomes aware of its o'er brooding consciousness, we leave for your intelligence to decide. Ours is the thought, and for us the knowledge, that this a priori consciousness is greater than the germ that involves it; more perfect than the form which is unfolded to partially express its power. Because there is no human being who is not aware of having greater possessions than the body can express or the brain fashion into thought. There is no human being that does not look upon a luminous background of a priori consciousness from which it seems to draw the capability of knowing all that it knows; that there is another intelligence, the ego, that uses the body and the brain for its expression, and is dependent for clearness in human life largely upon the perfection of the instrument that

Nevertheless, it may stand aside and may criticise the organism that it uses, may assist in unfolding the muscles, the the benign influences of the realm above and of earthly symnerves and all the attributes of the physical body, to better express its purpose; and may question also of its intellectual power. If a man of business, to get greater power no Ego; the I is but a combination of substances which will and gain millions; if a man of battle, to do greater destrucbe disintegrated and pass again to the dust, to the sources tion among your fellow-men; if a man of science, to make his body do what he wishes and to skill his vision to conform There can be but one answer to this question from the to the observations that he desires to take, and to fashion That plano did not make itself; it did not make the musi-

But the knowledge that enables the man to fashion the instrument and make drawn either from science, philosophy or religion, that is, that instrument more and more perfect in order to conform that this Ego, if existent at all, must be co-existent with the to his requirements is evidence of an a priori musical consclousness. When Pan plucked a reed, and from that reed drew strains of music that enthralled every form of nature around; all insects, birds and beasts, and men as well, it was peared in the groves to sing the sweet songs of the winds. So man, responding to this great harmony, constructs a vast Whether we accept the Berkeleyan theory, that soul, or in- organ whose mighty peal, like the thunder and the songs into his music the added voice of the soul, the greater rapand this thrills and throbs, until the birds become silent and the voices of nature hush themselves in the groves and canons to listen to this harmony.

Let us remember that this which knows that it is; this that knows that it understands, and that struggles dimly at cially by the manifestations known as Spiritualism, all have first, but more perfectly afterward to find expression, separates itself at last from the dust, and that the body, which neither thinks, nor feels, nor acts, nor becomes more perbasis for the legitimate conclusion that man exists after the fect, nor makes blunders and conquers them, but silently distinct separation of the spirit from and the disintegration passes back unto the substance from whence it came, possibly beautified by the breath that has come to it from the the conclusion is that he may continue to exist, but still that soul; for it would seem that above the graves of those you continued existence does not prove immortality, for immor- love, where you water the sod with your tears, and where the blossoms are tenderly cared for, something is transdeclared by a future existence which is only another step in muted from the dust beneath that makes them beautiful. life. But as the segment of a circle may convey to the mind Or is it because you are in communion with the spirits that have passed on and the beauty of that added life is conveyed to your vision and your perception? Nature would be blind and deaf in such an hour if it were not for the voice that comes from within and above; your ego can solve that. When these leaves shall turn their beautiful green to a flame of gold and red there will be another springtime, your ego can solve that. When the golden sun at eventide seems past is the eternal precursor of the present. There is no to sink behind the hills there will be another morning; your portion of man's existence here that physically cannot be intelligence can measure the length of the days and the great steps between you and the distant worlds. But while the worlds respond to the law of their creation, they do not know about it, they do not know about you, they do not understand you, they do not question about you.

Being less than the world seemingly, but greater in this understanding, we declare that this intelligence which can measure the process of light, that can declare the distances between planets, that can mount on the wings of mathematics to the loftiest mountains and the most distant planets is superior to any laws of nature. That the soul is greater greater than the world, which for the time being it occupies or inhabits, and which one day will be under the complete control of human souls.

We declare that this soul considers a life that is endless: has a priori longing and prophecy of that life, and the greatest evidence of eternity of this ego is that longing, that consciousness and that prophecy. Corelated to this is the evidence that comes from departed spirits, from those seemingly superior intelligences whom you denominate angels, from those who have been in spirit after the great conquest were not for the perception from within the soul you could not have that added testimony any more than the eye can more than the mind can understand though the vision is clear, and the hearing is clear, unless the perception is awakened. You have heard of those who, "having ears do not hear, having eyes do not see, and having minds do not understand."

It is the soul that fulfills the understanding; it is the soul that quickens the vision in this life, that quickens every sense, and the senses would be valueless without it. When the senses fail the soul finds other ways of expresion. The blind Mollie Fancher could do more than many who could see. With fingers and body, in which disease had taken such hold that her form was almost helpless, she still, by the gifts of the spirit and because of her soul, could penetrate in the primal atom, as the materialist might maintain, or through all that shadow. You may know of instances where the nature has to contend with blindness and deafness and dumbness, where speech is not possible and hearing and sight do not exist and yet the ego under the quickening influence of sympathy will find an avenue of expression.

Idiots, we do not mean the ordinary kind that are ground out of the schools and universities, and theological and other institutions, we mean those that simply have no avenues of expression, which Dr. Howe of Boston, clearly illustrated had as much difference between them as other people who had the opportunity of expression through education. That the ego behind the idiot, beyond the imperfect brain and organism was just as capable of feeling and just as anxious to find an outlook of expression as others. You could not make much of a demonstration to the outer world if you were in a dwelling that was barred and bolted, and shut out from the light and from communion with the outer world. Yet such is sometimes the seeming position of the soul. But under pathy that soul can find at last the avenue of expression and reveal its surpassing power. Therefore, the testimony which the great and wonderful opportunities which eternity will It is well known that the student of art unfolds from with- provide that ego will manifest the power that shall equal its insists upon forcing itself into and through the human organism may only stamp upon the human organism the smallest portion of that consciousness. You know every day that forever in thoughts concerning it, and tries to force upon the dull human organism the great "forever," the iuminous knowledge of that impartal life. It is this that quickens the pulse; it is this that singles the eye; it is this that makes the cheeks to glow; it is this that, even when age is creeping on, still persists in shining beautifully and perfectly through the organism that is being slowly gathered back to the dust, greater possession, one lingering glance, one soft smile sits upon the face, of supreme, calm repose, as if the spirit, showing the light into which the life is awakening, flings a glance questioned why? The answer was that "they which are of nature, while with its surpassing powers it takes up the great problem of life in its new found existence, and passes on and on through other ways and forms of life, through other means of expression unto the eternity of its fulfillment. This must be true, or that annihilation which the materialist seems to dread; that Nirvana which the Theosophist speaks of and of which Buddha taught, (the blotting out of the consciousness), must be the individual's fate. We do not believe that Buddha taught it. We believe that he taught the separation from time and sense to be absolute, But time and sense are not the consciousness of the soul. In that Nirvana, as in the perfect Kingdom of Heaven of the Christian, or the higher states of the Spiritualists, or in absolute state of the soul, the soul is conscious of its eternity and of the knowledge of all experiences in time and sense. You know that the experiences of your childhood are valuable, but you do not find it necessary that they shall go on and on in their external form forever. You gather up the knowledge that childhood has taught you, and the soul, in its surpassing estate, needs not that external form, nor the manifestations of life with which it has come in contact, but only that which is experienced and that which it has gained in its expression of knowledge here and now.

We are speaking to your immortal souls, we are calling to you from the depths of your nature, from that life that time and sense and care and external life seem to have stultified and suppressed. But the clouds are lifting from the great shadow of human selfishness; people are growing more and more to realize this inner and higher realm, and the soul, filled with its own surpassing knowledge, is more and more thrilling and pervading the substances of earth, until at last the sunshine will be fairer, the leaves and trees more beautiful, the flowers will give more perfect fragrance, the birds of the air will be more beautiful in plumage and song, the lightning will only yield beneficence instead of its destructive force, and the sun's rays, instead of making arid wastes and deserts will be imprisoned to warm and light your dwellings, and every force in nature and every element of earth will at last bend to this control of the magic power of the soul, allied unto God in its creative power.

So the earth itself, ancient with sorrow and destructive forces, will rise again unto the perfect Eden time, and war and destruction will not be known among the children of earth. No nation will rise up in force against another and weaker people, all will forget their warfare, and their striving; and mad ambition will cease to dominate; the treachery of men that love gain and power, and that greater tyranny that shapes the destiny of nations to the voice or person of a king will pass unto the kingly voice of the people, unto the souls of men. Then all will enjoy the sunshine; all will breathe the fresh air of heaven; all will behold the glad. green Earth. Death will no longer be looked at in terror, but as a beneficent angel, standing between you and the portals of that realm that opens wide the immortal vistas of the

Oh! the Soul is supreme in its finite and eternal possession, and you and we, and all who have sojourned here but for a day, who clasp hands upon this human plane, or who in spirit life have thrown off the simple habiliments of the dust and the shadows of time and sense, will in some surpassing state meet, when it is not only "face to face." but soul to soul, and you will stand upon those heights of light and majesty saying with Him, who forgetful of those who persecuted and crucified Him, "Behold, I have overcome the

THE MOUNTAIN OF SIGHS.

Delivered at the First Church of Psychology, Detroit, Mich., through Mrs. M. C. LaGrange.

A little shadow, a little space of unconsciousness, and then a sweet awakening. I felt the presence of some dear loved one, neither plain nor clear to my vision, but a feeling of perfect bliss that shook my soul and thrilled me through and through, a knowledge gained all unconsciously, impossible to put in human utterance.

Little by little all these beautiful influences grew stronger, until finally I felt the touch of a dear hand, and then plainer and nearer to me came the presence of those I had known, and loved, and seemingly lost.

I seemed to hear the echoing of the moans and sorrows of those who were left behind, a great chasm seemed to intervene between that condition and the one in which I found myself, and still it was so near that I might see all things clearly that I might perceive the well known forms of those who had been my friends, those who had been my enemies: those who had surrounded me by conditions that had drawn me near to them and those who had repelled me and placed within my heart the first seed of anger and of hatred.

Hesitating for a moment with the question in my mind "what had occurred," there flashed across me the remembrance that I had entered into that great ship of state, that is known to all, and had crossed the tiny stream called Death; that stream so narrow, that the mere closing of the eye, a moment's space, completes the journey.

Filled with a slight curiosity as to what was beyond and above me, I sought to enter into closer touch with those who had come to welcome me to this better and broader home. Leading me gently by the hand, they seemed to bring me into a state of clear light, that made my understanding more sensitive to receive the thoughts that enveloped me, and looking over and above this place, this plane of existence, I spied beauty that seemed familiar and yet strange, even as you in this beautiful land may travel from one city to another and see there homes that are similar, and still distinct and different in shape and building.

Strange did it seem to me who had thought of this beautiful home as a place far removed from the environments and thoughts of to-day. 30 - 1 h

Further and away there was a great mountain over which my dear friends said we must needs travel ere we should. gain that perfect type of ecstasy for which my soul had yearned and prayed.

We started on our journey, myself filled with great pleasure and anticipation, Beautiful did the mountain seem, although steep was its ascent. I saw green places here and there, where vegetation seemed to be abundant. Ragged rocks were interblended in the scene, but they seemed to be nothing else but part of the great picture that went to make up a beautiful whole.

Little by little there dawned upon me a feeling of unrest and later there came to me the doleful minor thoughts, such as the plaintive notes of an organ may give out when it gives to us a peal of beautiful sounds and woeful misery. Little by little did it permeate my soul, until I felt the heart throbs of those who were behind me, until I came in touch with the miseries and woes of earth, until I felt their pain, until I knew their anguish, until I realized their sorrow. I asked my guide why need I realize this. Is this a punishment that must go through for some misdemeanor? Have I, by my walk in life, necessitated this form of punishment to fit me for the higher conditions?

Hastily did they check my exclamations of regret, and speak in this wise unto me:

"Only he who suffers, who has loved and lost, he who has passed through the lower conditions of life, he who has left the sting of a painful misery, he who has suffered the bitter sorrow of a darkened past, may appreciate the brightness and the sunshine of the glorious future."

With these words impressing themselves upon my mind, we proceeded. Soon I reached that place where we paused to rest once more. Here I found that buildings were estab-It is this that sits in triumpli upon the brow and lips of the lished that seemed to my eye similar to those that I had friend in the supreme moment of the separation of the soul known, and still as I viewed them more closely, the familand body; the body is passing to dust and the soul taking larity faded away, and as I assumed my material thought, its flight, even as if the spirit was already aware of its my physical mind, (that skeptical thought that surrounds each and all of you in these earthly environments), they seemed to fade from my vision and naught remained. I across the countenance and makes it beautful even in death | material may see only material things; they which are spiritual may see the spiritual conditions. He who places his mind in material environments may realize and know naught else but that which dwells therein, but he who raises his thought into that better vibratory action of spiritual desire shall thereby gain the realities of the inner and hidden world." Once more did they appear, but they did not appeal to me as the dwellings of the higher places would have done in the material world. There was a nothingness about them, a feeling of poverty that surrounded me, a conception that all was not plentiful, a realization that a something was lacking to complete the picture of a perfectly heavenly existence. Again did I question why, and I was told this:

"He who seeks in the land of the living to so surround himself by material conditions that the temporal body and the temporal soul shall be improved thereby, builds for that condition only. A millionaire though he may be, when he gains this other side of life may find himself destitute, in poverty, and in need of friends. Such is the condition that abides here. These have been improvident in the condition that they left behind. They have been creatures that have thought only of the day as it had come, dwelling in luxury perchance, believing in material things always; feeling that to-day was the day in which they lived, and that to-morrow would be capable of taking care of itself."

I had gained a lesson which I trust will appeal to each and every one. If you desire beautiful homes in this great hereafter, choose your words, choose your thoughts, use caution in your actions and in your sudden utterances. They are the materials which you are laying in store to-day from which your homes in the great to-morrow shall be builded.

Once more we journeyed forward, and as I progressed along this road, I saw a great gulf before me. I stopped in wonderment and asked: In this land of spiritual realities, why should this be so? I was answered in this way:

"Even as in earthly life there must be a little pain in order to make us appreciate the sunshine, even so does the mourning and the lamentation of those who suffer from this pain cause these great woes of misery to be transcribed upon the ether of the great hereafter."

Then I realized that the thought that we extend, the force which we squander in our worriments and in our lamentations for our lost ones in our sorrows of to-day become a great waste of force that left in this great beyond a gulf over which we all needs travel ere we may again reach that road that may lead us on high. I had learned another mighty lesson that it would be well if all the great world could grasp and understand. Life is far too short, far too earnest, far too full of purpose for us to be the weak creatures that we are. We need to control this mighty force of mind material that is ever extending upon this great ether that surrounds us, that it may there imprint only the pictures that are startling realities, that we will be pleased to see and know when we shall have reached that better land.

Once more, my mind more fully imbued with the realities of this beautiful land, we started forward. We next gained a condition where modest homes were abundant, where cleanliness and perfect serenity was around and about us. I felt a release of all my sorrow and pain. I felt an inspiration that seemed to bring to me the breathing of a perfect love. I felt surrounded by that calm that only those who live in harmony may realize. I asked if I might know the condition in which I stood. They answered, "it is to this condition that those who strive, those who have battled in life's great tournament, have sometimes lost and have some times won, have sometimes struggled with distress, have sometimes suffered bitter loss, have sometime carried upon themselves the imprint of a heavy cross and then have taken up their burden cheerfully with understanding and an inner onsciousness of the divinity of themselves, with a feeling that life was full of purpose, that which evolves to some better condition, and have fulfilled each day so nearly as they were capable, the duties of that day. It is here that when the bright angel of death shall liberate them from their conditions that have become too cramped for their purpose, it is to this place that they ascend." Ah, happy thought! I could not help but wonder which of these conditions should be my lot. I could not help but feel that I would be pleased to enter into that perfect state, for here I saw one whom I knew to be a mother of a large, happy family, surrounded by each and every member. I saw them laughing, I saw them realizing the perfect harmony of unity. more filled with love and trust. Here and there I saw great trees sending forth their branches. Thereon was luscious fruit which I saw these people partaking of. One of them in satisfying her desire was seen to bite from this luscious pear, and upon her garment that which in our condition would have been a stain was made, but as I looked again, I saw that naught was there. I could not help but wonder. My guide, no doubt realizing the questionings that were passing through my find, answered me in this way:

"In this condition which you have reached there is naught of corruption enters here. In this state toward which we have journeyed, this place which we now have found, there is naught that shall leave an earthly stain or mar the perfect serenity of our surroundings."

Once more had there come a thought to me. Not of material things did these spiritual creatures partake, but they which had cast off corruption lived in incorruption; they which had been one day material were now spiritual.

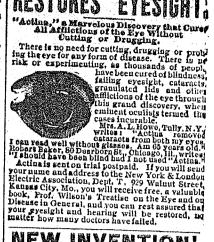

Once more did a lesson become clear to me. He who strives to strengthen his soul; he who seeks to develop that inner understanding, must depart from material things, must give up many of those conditions that constitute the daily existence and dwell more perfectly in the perfect thought of incorruption and spirituality, and thereby gain the food by which his soul may prosper.

I saw above and beyond me a beautiful condition upon which the sun seemed ever shining. I asked that I might iourney there. At first my guide paused and seemed to question the advisability of taking me thither, but finally 1 was allowed to advance and when I came to this place it was a bosom of beautiful roses that seemed to flourish and give unto every creature that was brought into contact with it a fuller realization of the artistic hand of a perfect nature, that developed through the natural laws the many manifestations of her skill. I sank down to rest, feeling a satisfaction that connot be described. My soul was enthralled with the beauties that were about me. I did not care to go further; I wanted to remain, but soon my guide said to me, "We have work that we must do; we must away upon it at once."

It brought me back to the realization that I had been visiting only, that I had been taking a beautiful day dream in which I had seen these wendrous things, and I wondered whether or no it would take long for me to reach that state of perfection that I, even in my darkened state, knew the creatures that dwelled therein must have. They were invisible to my sight, for I was of too material environments. even as you to-day are intermingling with throngs of spiritual beings that you never see, even so was I in this state of illumination mingling with unseen souls that were too refined for my vision to behold.

We passed from without this beautiful garden, and with one look back upon it, I gave a sigh that I know must have reached the ear of my dear friend, for he turned to me and said; "When thou shall have completed the work there is for thee to do, then shall ye have developed the standard of

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

CONTRIBUTORS.-Each contributor is slone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, lieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to in-sure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

The Marysville (Ohio) Tribune says: "The lectures on Spiritualism by E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, . Y., on Tues Wednesday evenings, in the Partridge Building, were fairly well attended by local believers and a goodly sprinkling of outsiders who were attracted through curiosity to hear what this prominent missionary of Spiritualism had to say on the subject. Mr Sprague is thoroughly posted on his weird belief and was assisted in his exemplification by his wife who is alleged to have special gifts in clairvoy-

Wm. Cardwell writes from St. Joseph, Mo.: "Mrs. Hattie Tiffany has been holding some very interesting seances at my home in St. Joseph, Mo. We have had some of the finest manifestations ever produced in this section. Her address is 2906 Patee street, St. Joseph, Mo."

Mrs. Colleen writes: "You are doing a grander work than you think, and remember that Spiritualism is truth and will never down, but will come to the top every time, like oil on the surface of water, and why? Because the spirit world holds the reins."

N. P. Nelson writes from Canada: "Your paper is very interesting indeed, and it seems as if I could not do without it. I often wish that I could get the people to take hold of Spiritualism here, but they seem to have no use for any thing spiritual; even preachers do not want to follow the truth even if they

E. R. Kidd writes from Canton, Ohio: "Mrs. Hattle Tiffany, the noted trumpet medium, has recently moved from Alliance to Saint Joseph, Missouri, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates are holding a series of meetings in Burd's Opera House, Massillon. Mrs. St. Omer Briggs, of Canton, has resumed her weekly Sunday evening lectures in Red Men's hall and on Sunday last she spoke to a large and appreciative audience. As a result of a written proposition made by Judge J. W. Underhill, veteran Spiritualist, to A. B. Miller and Charles Brown and their associates in Canton, to donate $3,000 with which to build a church, provided a suitable lot is purchased and the foundation put down, has aroused quite an interest among the Spiritualists of Canton, and it is to be hoped the necessary funds with which to purchase the lot and put down the foundation will soon be raised. At a meeting recently held by the members of the Church of Psychic Research, of which the writer is a member and Mrs. Briggs pastor, a unanimous vote was taken to assist in every possible way to bring about the desired result, and if the Oc cult Society, of which Messrs, Miller and Brown are members, will affiliate with the Church of Psychic Research, success is assured." E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries are making engagements for the camp-meetings of next season. They are both speakers and platform test mediums, and their services may be secured to work separately or together as desired. Address them at 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

W. A. Wilson writes from Elwood, "The Spiritualists of Elwood are progressing nicely. There are about 40 different developing circles in the city. We have Mr. Frank T. Ripley with us. He gave a good lecture on last Sunday evening; also the Sunday before. He gave splendid spirit messages after each lecture. He will be with us the rest of the month. Mr. W. C. Jessup, the trumpet medium, is with us also. His circles are large, and his work is very convincing."

R. P. Hanson, M. D. writes: "The Progressive Thinker is a feast every week. It is to my mind the greatest journal for developing new ideas, both in the social, religious on occult lines of thought, as its pages are open (so far as space will permit) to all sides of belief and argument on these subject."
Dr. Noyes writes from Utica, N. Y.:

'Mrs. Noyes and myself will open spiritual services at Cornwath Hall, Sharn Building, Washington and Columbia streets; the first meeting, 2:45 on Sunday, Sept. 20, only; thereafter Sundays at 7:45 p. m. We are located at 4 West street, Utica, N. Y.'

Mrs. C. C. Bacon writes: "We are no pessimistic. for we are certain that the truth goes marching on steadily and surely, because the cause doesn't depend wholly on mortals for its success. The good angels are our invisible workers. with the honest and true on this side of the line, which makes a host. I can name many in this life who make it a study to find ways and means of their individual selves to help on the good work, without money or price. I think D. C. Montgomery is one of these. He has originated a plan for getting Spiritualist literature before the reading and thinking people. He has secured a place in the Free Library of Akron, O., for Spiritualist and Liberal literature. through the kindness of the management, and any one who has books of by sending them to him. The world moves on progressive lines in religion and literature, as well as in other matters that are a benefit to the mortals here. Perhaps there are other free li-braries that will, if asked, give a corner to literature of this kind. Our country is full of good literature that is lying unused that could be made beneficial to many hungry souls if only put within their reach. The San Diego (Cal.) Union has the following: "Formal opening of the new Temple on Seventh street, north of B street school, was celebrated by First Spiritual Society yesterday.

Three services were held, at each of which enthusiasm prevailed. The first began at 10: ... a. m., when Mrs. Lily M. Thielmud invoked the divine blessing. An address of welcome was then given by the president of the society, C. A. Buss. Mrs. Dr. Longshore of National City, responded to the welcome, after which short addresses were given by J. L. Dryden, Mrs. Jane Mullen, of National City, and Will C. Hodge of Chicago. Mrs. Thiebaud delivered the closing address, taking for her subject, 'God's First Temples.' The musical programme of the morning was excellent. Master Bernard Lydick, aged nine, who plays like a master, gave a violin solo, the first instrumental music in the new temple. The quartette and congregational singing were also features. In the afternoon the children of the lyceum gave a programme of recitations and songs. The evening session was characterized by the largeness and attentiveness of the audience, the fine instrumental music by the Misses Beck and the Messrs. Duncan, a vocal solo by Mrs. Mabel Woodward, an accomplished singer, and an aggressively frank lecture by Mrs. Thiebaud. Her subject was in the nature of an inquiry

'Who are these Spiritualists?' Her style was decisive, incisive and impressive. She undertook to prove that the morality and intellectuality of the cult are above reproach. She sought to show that those who had come into the ranks-no inconsiderable numberwere progressive and law-abiding peo-ple, striving to follow the teachings of the man of Nazareth. The opening was pronounced a complete success. temple is ready for occupancy so far as the lower floor is concerned, only the trimmings being necessary. The upper floor is unfinished, but will be ready for the dedication next March." E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A missionaries, are working in Illinois. They will soon be making their way toward Washington, D. C., where they will attend the N. S. A. convention from October 20 to 24 inclusive. Parties wishing their services along the route please address them at once at 618 Newland avenue Jamestown, N. Y.

Maggie Waite writes: "I will open my meetings, September 27, at George's Hall, 3337 State street, to be continued every Sunday evening, at 8 p. m., until next June. This is a lovely new hall. In the future as in the past my aim will be to present both the philosophy and phenomena in a manner that may lead skeptics to investigation and the upbuilding of the cause of Spiritualism.

Mrs. A. E. Wood writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "It is not necessary for me to write a word of commendation for that grand paper, The Progressive Thinker, yet my simple expression of its balm to me may be as much to you as some beautifully written article from an abler pen. You ought to be a very happy man, as the love-thoughts of your readers for you and the grand work you are accomplishing must be a power unto yourself. May the best the spirit of truth can bestow be thine now and evermore."

Alexander Macy writes: "The Progressive Thinker and the condensed thoughts are text books of history, astronomy and the philosophy of life on this planet and its continuance when we leave here in the broad illimitable universe our spirit home. They are the only source of clear intelligent light in our country. For several years my path has been illumined by their rays. Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall we have a treat in store for our people. Mrs. Dr. See has been engaged to give a series of lessons every Sunday afternoon, on the line of the 'High er Thought.' She is co-editor of this magazine; is a refined lady and as a teacher has no superior. Spiritual science is the highest teaching revealed to man to-day. Come out and hear this able exponent and demonstrator of the new life." Mrs. Harry J. Moore writes from No 323 Willamette avenue, Colorado Springs, Col.: "I am improving in health each day. I have been sick since April 1, with walking typhold fever, but in July I was taken down sick (have bronchial and throat trouble), and never walked (only through the house) until I came here. I had to be carried and wheeled to the trains and cabs when I came here. Now I can walk a square and have been here only two weeks. I will be so thankful when I am well again. I would like for some of the friends to write me. It seems lonely here, not knowing anyone I would like to have the friends of this city call on me. My mother, Mrs. Alice Gehring, who has cared for me through all my sickness, is with me, and her health has greatly improved also." J. M. Kennedy writes from Marysville, Ohio: "We had with us on the 8th and 9th of this month, the Rev. E. W. Sprague and wife. Mr. Sprague gave us two very fine lectures, and Mrs. Sprague gave some very good readings. Our people are just beginning to peep through the shell of superstition, bigotry and ignorance that surrounds them. Our audiences were fairly good. Those who were there went away well pleased. One of our newspapers pubished the notice of our meeting, but took especial pains to inject into the notice that there would be a small col-lection at the door which was wholly unauthorized, evidently to keep people away. But the seed has been sown and time will demonstrate what the harvest that kind will find them put to good use will be. All who heard the speakers, tained them while here, and was pleased with their work. I found them to be educated and refined, and I believe them to be doing a good work for the cause." Miss Eugenia Balfour writes from Sturgis, Mich.: "Allow me a brief space in your valuable paper to express a few words in commendation of a very worthy medium, Dr. E. H. Denslow, of Sturgis, Mich. He commenced his work over thirty years ago, a time when it cost much to be known as a Spiritualist, and has stood bravely in the foremost ranks as a progressive and broadminded expounder of the fact that death is but the gateway to a broader and grander sphere of existence, and that this life is one stage of existence preparatory to that which awaits us farther on. He has ever been the friend of true mediumship, and his home was for many years a resting-place for tired mediums who ever found in him a true friend and wise counselor and many, some now the foremost speakers in our ranks, can point to him as the one who first encouraged and directed the unfoldment of their psychic powers. Ever since entering the work he has held weekly circles in his home, free of charge, to which the public is cordially nvited, and the inspired teachings there given through his organism from the unseen side of life, would fill volumes. The doctor is a living demonstration of the truthfulness of the assertion that spiritualized humanity never grow old, for although now past the meridian of life he is as buoyant in spirit and supple in body as in youth. It is the prayer of his many friends that he may remain on this earth plane for many years to carry on the grand work which nature and the spirit world have so well adapted him to do." Vine H. Hickox writes from Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "I had the pleasure of listening to an able discourse delivered in the Spiritual Temple, September 13, in Buffalo, by B. F. Austin, of Toronto. Canada. He was formerly a Methodist minister. The temple was filled with a large and appreciative audience to hear him tell the story of his life, and why he became a Spiritualist. In the crowd I saw three ministers; one sat behind me. with a friend. Just before the meeting commenced I overheard this minister say to his friend, 'This is an intelligentlooking audience.'—a good compliment I thought.'Yes,' replied his friend, 'far he expected to see a crowd of lunatics. wish all the ministers and priests in Buffalo could have heard Mr. Austin recite his story. I know it made a lasting mpression on his hearers. For over two hours he held his audience spellbound by his earnest words. He told briefly of his collegiate studies for the ministry, and of his twenty years' work in the Methodist church. It was as interesting as the best story ever told; it was his life-story. He had been a preacher and a teacher in the orthodox Methodist church, yet he was not satisfled on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul according to his church teachings. As I sat there and listened to Mr. Austin's earnest words, his face seemed to be illuminated with a spiritheresy, resulting in his expulsion from the Methodist church. 'Then,' says he, 'I launched out into the world of Liberalism free to work out my own salvation; free to think for myself; free from orthodox creeds; free to search for the truth. Still I did not feel satisfied until I saw a materialization of spirit forms. I began to attend seances, and visited clairvoyants and mediums. I finally saw the spirit of a little girl that had passed out of the body; this little girl was once a dear playmate to my little daughter, now living in Toronto. Eva L. Stewart writes: "To show the progress of the Hyde Park Occult Society, I will say that on the 4th of September, at a membership meeting, it was unanimously voted by those present to make application for a charter under the Illinois State Spiritualist Association; also adopted a constitution and by-laws and are now a fully organized society, working for the development of Spiritualism. We have an election of officers the 1st of October. Our members are very harmonious and spiritual, and we have had and are yet to have some of the best speakers and mediums that can be obtained. By good speakers and mediums our mempership has increased greatly. People who knew nothing of Spiritualism have listened to the explanation by speakers and messages given by mediums, have been convinced that we are on the right road. Our picnics in place of conference meetings this summer have been well attended and successful socially as well as financially. We will not hold any more this season. We were highly entertained last Sunday evening by a talk from Mrs. Mary Cochonour's guide. Her address is 759 West 63rd street. Our little friend, Hazel Silberhorn entextained us by vocal and instrumental music which pleased the audience. Mrs. Kline's guide was on hand and all who received a message recognized it. Mrs. Nellie Kusserow is to be with us on next Sunday evening. The ladies will meet next week to plan for a bazaar to be held the first week in December. We expect this to be one of the big attrac-

The church was decorated with foliage, plants, palms, cut flowers, golden rod, and the national colors, and never looked better. The platform was graced with our best talent, Willard J. Hull, Wm. V. Mrs. Margaret Skeels lectured in this church to a large audience Sunday evening, Sept. 13 and will speak next Sunday evening also. Mrs. Skeels is from Illinois and is an excellent trance speaker, Mr. W. V. Nicum will speak Sept. 27. Mr. Nicum is an earnest, logical lecturer, and a general favorite with the West Side Spiritualists.'

Arzelia C. Clay writes: "Mrs. John Lindsey has been holding some fine meetings in the Ladies' Building of the Soldiers' Home in Grand Rapids, Mich. Success and good will to this cheerful, earnest worker in the cause of Spiritualism.'

Mrs. Emma Nutt Moore passed through Chicago last week, just having completed a three months' engagement at Beaver Falls. Mrs. Moore gives excellent satisfaction wherever employed as a lecturer. She and Mr. Moore were on their way to Mitchell, S. D., where she has an engagement.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, mission aries for the N. S. A., are now in this state. They are doing an excellent work for Spiritualism. They will visit Dana, Walnut and other places in the Their Home address is 618 Newland, Ave., Jamestown, N. Y. Mrs. N. L. Pierce writes: "We have returned to the city, having spent three weeks at Pistaqua Bay, boating, bath ing, fishing and resting from our year's labors in our line of spiritual work. We will continue our circles on Tuesday and Friday evenings. We had a de-lightful vacation, and resume our spiritual work with renewed vigor and new strength. Will be pleased to meet our friends again at 115 South Paulina street."

Julia E. Hyde writes from Lily Dale N. Y.: "The many friends of Mrs. J. A. Duff, who was Dr. E. C. Hyde's care during a several weeks' illness with nervous prostration and left side paralywill, will be glad to learn that she sufficiently recovered to comfortably go to her home in Baltimore, on the 14th inst., and word is received that she is still gaining rapidly."

Arzelia C. Clay writes: "We wish The Progressive Thinker could form a part of the morning requiem and the evening feast of every loyal family in our land. W. Duncan writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "The Progressive Thinker's great prosperity covers some fifyears. No subscriber is more pleased to note this than myself, and if every reader or the average subscriber will do as much as I have the coming fifteen years will doubtless cause a wonderful brightening in spiritual thought of the millions of humanity who have been mainly taught that the priest and the elder and the minister can only be the interpreter of the Bible, or of creeds and dogmas."

A Birthday Party. What was intended for a surprise on the Rev. Mr. S. P. Mcrrifield, of Coloma, Mich., was given at his residence on Sunday, September 13, when friends to the number of fifty gathered to do him honor and show their appreciation of his untiring labor for the cause of Spiritualism, some coming in carriages more than fifteen miles, and but for rain many more would have been pres-The exercises commenced at 10:30 a.m., by a meeting under the trees planted by Mr. Merrifield more than thirty years ago; and now forming a fine shade upon the beautiful and well-kept lawn surrounding his residence; the spot is sacred to him, as here only four years ago, the funeral ceremonies of his first wife were held. The Coloma Spiritual Society, of which he is the resident speaker, presented him with a beautiful rattan rocking chair and the Sodus Spiritualist Society gave him a fine large ink-well on an elaborate hard rubber stand, also a finely carved ivory envelop opener while unknown friends contributed over twenty dollars in legal coin of the realm. I was called upon to make the presentation remarks, and while the good brother had been informed of this intended surprise by some tattler to the local newspaper, the gifts were a complete surprise, and for once Brother Merrifield was unable to readily respond when called upon to address an audience; he was compelled to stand and hesitate before he could choke back the tears of gratitude which filled his dear and ever expressive eyes. After a slight struggle, he was able to control his emotions, then in most eloquent words he thanked his friends for their kind remembrances

At the close of the forenoon exercises all adjourned to the house where dinner was served by the ladies, each comng with a well filled basket.

At 2:30 p. m. I addressed the assemblage, being called-by the First Progressive Spiritual and Religious Society of Goloma, Mich., this meeting also being a regular meeting of that society. Here allow me to correct a mistake in my last communication as printed in he Progressive Thinker. Instead of this being the 72d it was the 76th birth-day of Mr. Merrifield; also the name was printed wrong in the other communication—it réad "Munfield." We feel it but just to this fearless and ardent veterancadvocate of Spiritualism. He dommenced his career as a public speaker many years ago as a Universalist minister, but finding his field too narrow and the creed too cramped, he soon was led to the broader and more liberal way, then throwing Hattie E. Webster writes from Columbus, Ohio: "Sept. 6, the West Side the truths of Spiritualism. Since then he has given his time to the world in advocating the purest of Spiritualistic truths; so, after over thirty years in the field, he is one of the broadest-minded of men. His home is ever open to all, and being of a charitable disposition, he makes all feel at home, even those who may disagree with him are never made uncomfortable by any thoughtless words, and so it is a pleasure to meet him As it is the custom of the Coloma so clety to meet at the residences of different farmers, of which this society is principally composed, they usually hold several meetings at his home during D, the year.

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, spiritual laws; to note that new lorces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a bigher morality and increasing happiness. NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of in-Quiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal

Student and many others: Q. When will you be able to supply copies of the Arcana of Spiritualism?

A. This volume was first published nearly thirty years ago by the sainted J. S. Adams. A few copies only had been sold when the Boston fire burned the sheets and also the plates.

Some time after, James Burns, then at the front of the spiritual movement in England, published an edition of two thousand copies. These were soon disposed of and for many years the book was out of print. Three years ago the publishers of the Two Worlds, Manchester, England, requested the privilege of issuing a new edition.

During all these years the inspiration which had first given me the book, had been revising and adding thereto, whole chapters being rewritten. This revised copy was furnished the publishers of the Two Worlds and the book was brought out in an admirable style. The only objection is the cost to American readers. The work contains the highest inspirations of thirty years' experience. I wish to place it before the spiritual public at the lowest price covering cost. It is intended as its sub-title im plies, to be "A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy," sufficiently complete to enable the student to continue on the way marked out to more exhaustive research. An analysis of the sub-jects treated would take too much space. They are grouped under the following greater headings: Evidences of Spiritualism; Matter and Force, Their Relations to Spiritualism; Spiritual Atmosphere of the Universe; Animal Magneitsm, Hypnotism, Mesmerism; Spirit, Its Phenomena and Laws; Philosophy of Death; Mediumship, Its Phenomena, Laws and Cultivation; Mediumship During Sleep. he created this world? A. These questions have been asked in wonder by man in all ages. Savage and sage has stood before the keleidoscopic, changing world, equally impotent to solve the mystery. Every religion sets out with a cosmogony, a story of world-building. The rudest fetichism has its fable, and perhaps as near the truth as the more pretentious. The Christian God, or creator is only an enlargement of the savage's ideas. He creates as a man, is a man with unlimited powers. He labors six days and growing weary rests. He is the ideal of man, projected from the mind and from a subjective thought made a personal reality. All the long line of philosophers, from the flood tide of Grecian and Roman civilization, to the incomprehensible profundity of German metaphysicians, have produced their special schemes, which have passed one by one into the obscurity of forgotten things. Their plummet which they egotisti-cally thought sank to the bottom of things, floated with the jetsam of the The apple-blossom, rose and pink tide, and their labored explanations have been verbosity.

Can the finite mind grasp this infinite problem? Has the most profound thinker made more than one step to thinker made more than one step to-ward the "final cause" of things? Why, then, waste precious time in attempting to scale the walls of this inac-cessible height? Especially when before us are more profitable subjects directly relating to human welfare? The God question, in the very mystery of its unsolvability, has sharpened the sword of antagonism, and what the reason failed to maintain has been the contest-ant on the field of battle. The plains of Europe and Asia have been whitened by the bones of bigots fighting for the mis conceptions of ignorance; cities have been leveled in ashes, populous countries reduced to deserts; every atrocity wreaked on poor humanity; fagots' flame, dungeons' horror, auto-da-fes, massacres, and crime unmentionable. in the name of God, by the supposed command of God, to maintain his glory, It has passed like the murderous dream of the night. > Mrs. E. C. Lewis: Q. If a man kill another, the law makes no allowance for his being intoxicated, and he is executed. But the nation by law is permitted to manufacture and sell intoxi-cating drinks. Is this right?

A. Morally, the man who sells an other liquor that robs him of reason and instigates to crime is accessory to all that grows out of it. There is a flat contradiction when government sanc-tions the making and sale, and condemns the effects of such sale. So far from being right, it is all wrong. There is no business which offers such a menace to the well-being and stability of the government as liquor-selling.

The making has fallen into a few hands, and is dominated by trusts which are strong enough to override the wishes of the people, and modify the laws in their favor. With such leaders, with enormous wealth gained by the traffic, with a clientage of the ignorant, or drink-enslaved, the saloon party presents a solidarity which may be a controlling power in elections.

Thus it is possible for the worst candidates to win, and the most objectionable laws to be enacted.

It would not be practical to allow a criminal to escape because he pleaded intoxication; all criminals would claim to have been drunk when they commit-ted the crimes for which they are charged. Man must be held accountable, and if he by drink, confuses his reason and weakens his will, he must be held responsible therefor. In the eyes of the law man must be held to be a free moral agent, responsible for his own acts, and however much this may be tempered with mercy and charity when the circumstances which drive each individual forward in the conduct of life are taken into consideration. This must be fundamental.

If it is said that the maker of alcoholic beverages is as responsible as the saloon-keeper, then a step farther may be taken and the farmer who grows the corn and barley is equally so. There are laws that hold the seller responsi- one else to bring from it such experible for the conduct of those to whom he ence that shall lead them past its bittersells. He is made a guardian over those est point, and by that I mean if you who purchase of him. (Continued from page 5.) cauty and perfection that may enable you to journey hence to those beautiful states that are higher and more con-plete than this; that there is much that you shall need to know; that there is nuch that you must come to understand," and as he spoke there came to me a realization of the great difference between myself and him. He was clothed in a beautiful garment of flowing white, while I perceived that I had become enshroused in that which seemed to be a clothing of black. I wondered why it was, and asked that I might know the reason. I was told that as my spiritual perceptions became strengthened, as I was enabled to lay aside my material thought, as I was enabled to develop from those surroundings which had been mine in life, and accept the environments of the spiritual reality, then might I, too, lose the somber clothing of material existence with its sorrow and its pain, and take upon myself the robes that meant all purity and truth, We were led once more back into that condition which I have described as my awakening. There I seemed to sense a feeling that meant to me knowledge, the vast difference between the life that ought to be and the life that was. There came to me the comprehension of the idleness of our narrow thought. There came to me the realization of the uselessness of the creeds and sects of the nations. There came o me the thought of an unified whole that should advance as one grand brotherhood of people, each equal in God's sight and his own, each one imbued with a divine spirit of love and truth, each one living within his soul to the utmost of his ability, each one aspiring day by day and gaining by that aspiration. I saw my faults so clearly that I cried out in anguish.

At once did my guide chide me and say "Wherefore thy idle moanings? Spend not thy time in such a manner but start at once to retrieve the condition of the past by doing a noble action of the present."

Ah, the lesson that it taught me, a esson that I wish it might teach you. We are ever thinking of what we have been; we are ever realizing within ourselves the misspent days, the lost opportunities; we are ever pointing out he back chapter in some one's life instead of living in the present and building for the future. Why waste our time? If we have failed, all the more necessary is it for us to retrieve our thoughts and make ourselves stronger for the battle that is to come, and once again should we exercise this spirit of love that I realized was manifest through all the universe and extend to those who were beneath, those who had fallen and were too weak to establish themselves again, that we should give to them the sustenance of a kind thought, a loving deed, an action that might lead them to a position of strength, and support them until they were able to journey forward. I realzed then how far I had journeyed from this path of truth, and no doubt you who think of this matter may realize how far you are journeying day by day and hour by hour from this path that may lead to that nobler height. Let us do with the past as we might with a page that we have already read Use it as a means by which to understand the future, a means by which to know the present and leave it for some your own power of strength showing to them that man is prone to faults, until Poisons are manufactured and sold, he shall have gained that spiritual perfect. Show to him that from the maker and seller cannot be charged as lowest depths may there evolve the accessory to crime, when the use of the higher spiritual truths.

Glancing over this journey hastily, was brought to understand that from this misery and woe, this pain and anguish that finally led me to the heights of sunlight and beautiful clouds there were vast differences, and still they were all parts of the great journey of life, and I made up my mind that from this mountain of misery might many a noble lesson be learned, that if would open our minds we might sink it into our hearts and there establish for each and all of us, a better understand ing of the way that shall be in this future life that leads us condition by condition, stage by stage, year by year, day by day, hour by hour, and moment by moment to that perfect heaven.

A Jumble of Facts and Fancies.

Carl C. Pope, in the issue of The Pro gressive Thinker of 29th ult., recognizes the scientific assumption of the "Con-servation of Energy." He says: "All force which includes the soul persists. This assertion assumes the soul is a single ultimate atom. If this was a fact there would be scientific philosophy in the statement. There is every reason to believe the soul is an aggregation of ultimate atoms of energy. The physical body is composed of many ultimate atoms of force, which are dissolved and disintegrated at death. These primary atoms persist but their particular combination in the human body is forever destroyed, and that precise body will not continue, or reappear.

The molecules of force called the soul, or mind, at death, are resolved into their primary atoms of energy, and with equal certainty will never be combined to form the same identical soul

Mr. Pope, to bolster this defect in his logic, says: "The soul in human life be comes individualized by experience and thought and becomes a distinct entity. This is an unwarranted assumption All the thought and experiences in mortal life could never change twenty distinct elements found in the human body into an entity or one element of energy. The distinct elemental energies comorising the soul can never convert them into a monad, or an entity by the thau-maturgy of "thought and experience." All the evidence the "conservation of energy" can afford the theorem of Immortality is that whatever elemental atoms of energy there may be in soul will persist forever. It does not furnish a vestige of evidence that the soul will continue after death intact,

Spirits do return: T. M.Z.
This has been stated time and again ind proved as often in the columns of

The Progressive Thinker.
This truth is admitted and well fixed in the minds of all spiritualists. Like begets like. Deci but That which exists upon earth has its counterpart in the spirit, nealms. And these are without number, some yet awaiting inhabitants young.

Yet the teening millions of the lower atmospherean heavens, speak to earth and have spoken for ages Yet the day of signs and wonders to manifest the spirit is at an end. To not know that spirits can and do eturn is to be but half-educated. Other ways are now to come to pass to bring these world together for work. A universal system has been given to the corporeal world, through the mediumship of Spiritualism, in the form of a beautifully printed and illustrated book of nearly 1,000 pages. This book contains some 5,000 new words for the complete understanding of the spiritual light therein given. The Spiritualism of fifty years ago, the Modern, is now, so to speak, on the shoals. The great Avalanza has power within itself to move off the rocks. Brother Kates twangs the old harp, but the people do not listen. He wails and beats about the "ark" almost ready o jump overboard. Moses Hull tells us that people cease to wonder at or run after phenomena. That the time for great excitement on either the philosophy or the phenomena has passed." These words are tru, words; they are the words of a true seer and prophet of the times. The whole field is ripe ready for the harvest. Let all who may, take a step forward.

Open the book Oahspe and read. Atthe same moment will your eyes begin to see the light of day. You will then see why Spiritualism was given to mortals.

You will see a new way to live in this world, and will have a complete understanding of the next.

A new purpose will come upon you; your whole life habit, will change for the better. Your wants will be few and easily satisfied. Time will be added unto you with gain in everything your hands will find to do. Satisfaction will be your portion. Complaint will cease to escape your lips. You will rejoice in oven the smallest of created things. In fact you will begin to live out the true career of a human being.

Is it not true that every mother's son and daughter of you are in habit and thought nearly identical with your brethren of the Christian or Uzzian mode of life?

Why do you so long remain in outer darkness? Have you not been less than a beetle under a chip, or, to use a phrase, respectful and explicit, less in harmony with the high purposes of humanity than a bump on allog? And still will many persist on being wise and reject the glaring light so marvelously laid before them. Oahspe bids none to read it. It has condemnation for no living soul. Mam is to be his own judge. It is laid before him in every city library in this free land to be, of America. It has never been assailed. It can never be suppressed. Read Oahspe now.

Let me commend the poem of Bishop A. Beals and quote the last verse:

When will the spirit of humanity arise Unhampered by pretense and pride And gain in their might what Mammon For the doors of Progression are wide;

And Nature is smiling, the birds of the Sing Freedom's glad, happy lays The new morn is breaking, let the old world prepare, God works in mysterious ways." And also that of Lizzie Doten:

umn, light burst upon my darkened mind by reading "Ambrose Bierce, in Chicago Examiner." Let me confess my ignorance. I did not know of a 'Chicago" Examiner. There may one. I do know of a San Francisco Examiner, in which while in California, I read many articles signed "Ambrose Bierce," good ones, too.

Here is the point: From the internal evidence I was confident that the "communication" was not from Francis. It was a different "spirit." When Francis came he said, "we are disgusted" with the bare suggestion of the "old-time methods of horror," "barbarous means of savages" to get rid of criminals.

The first writes like a "thoughtless outh." Francis like a philosopher. While I do not positively know that Francis wrote, it is like him. In the hundreds of "communications" which purport to come from "over there" not one gives as much proof of the identity of the "spirit" as this-and yet it may not be Francis!

CONTINUITY OF LIFE.

The Evidence of a Multitude of Witnesses Proves It.

Nearly all of the accepted facts of the present age are, and of every other generation have been, outside of the personal knowledge of any particular person; yet they have been and are helieved just as thoroughly as though they had been demonstrated by each individual who ever lived. We have to rely upon what others have told us for nearly all of the information which we possess. Considering how much there is to know and the very limited time one Considering how much there is has in which to get, acquainted with his earthly environments, and his want of capacity to understand those surroundings it is no wonder that the individual can acquire a personal knowledge of but little during the brief period of human life. It is a hall and a farewell, and the period of human life But very few people in this country have seen the city of London. Yet ev-

have not seen it, know just as well as those who have seen it, that it exists. They know it because of the credibility of the evidence which they have of its existence. In the successful prosecu-tion of all scientific inquiry, in the administration of justice among civilized nations, in vast commercial transactions, in all matters of importance, we have to rely largely upon evidence of others. No one questions these axioms, because they cannot be questioned; when they are applied to the affairs of man and his surroundings. But when we come to apply them to the question of the immortality of the soul, the average man becomes at once incredulous. He does not believe what he has not seen, and he illogically judges that because he has never seen or perceived certain phenomena they cannot exist. He makes the boundary of his own knowledge and experience the boundary of all knowledge and experience. But if this same man was that a murder had been committed in a neighboring city, and this information was vouched for by some reputable person, he would believe that such an event actually took place. And he has no doubt that King Alexander of Servia was assassinated, and he believes it because the newspapers have published it as true.

There are very many persons in this country and in every civilized country on the globe, who have seen the materialized spirits of those who have passed that change called death; there are a great many persons who have re-ceived communications from the souls of those who have crossed over that wondrous line which separates the quick and the dead. The spirits of our departed friends are in constant communication with their friends in the flesh. And these facts have been proven again and again from the mouths of the most reputable of living witnesses. Not only that, but numberless of these messages are of such a character that they must have come from the departed. They are evidence of their own genuineness.

That the spirits of the so-called dead

do communicate with the living is a fact well established by the testimony of a multitude of intelligent and reputable witnesses. It is just as clearly proven as any other fact recognized by mankind.

It is not such a wonderful thing after all that such communications are made by the discarnate spirits of our friends. It is not at all miraculous that the soul loses none of its power after it has shuffled off this mortal coil and become clothed in that spiritual body recognized by the great apostle of the Gen-

To-day hypnotism is recognized and telepathy has been long demonstrated. Two incarnate souls may commune continent.

Mind has a wonderful influence over mind in this world of ours. Without such influence, science would be re-nounced, oratory would die, poetry expire, music cease, and society and civilization would revert into barbarism. The soul loses none of its powers in passing through the ordeal of death. Soul speaks to soul in a silent but im pressive language here in this life and the grave is powerless to destroy that language or prevent the communion of congenial souls after life's fitful fever

Everybody Wanted It. At a certain London church the collection used to be made in nicely embroidered bags, but, so many old but-tons and stale pieces of chocolate being put in, it was decided to try "plates" instead. The first Sunday the usual number of coppers but among them a bright yellow shining piece was observable. On Monday morning there were more callers than usual at the vestry, some of them with the same applica tion. After a short interval another came with the same, "Oh, I am so sorry, but I put a sovereign into the plate by mistake. Could I have it, as I really cannot afford it?" "What?" said the vicar, "you are the fifth that has been to see me this morning with the same application, but the church warden has just told me that the supposed sovereign is only a gilded shilling!"-Ex.

A Plea for Kind Words.

After carefully perusing. The Progressive Thinker today, I fell to musing over the different ideas expressed by its able contributors, and wondered if after all it would not seem a little more spir itual if we were not so apt to speak harshly of others

To the earnest investigator it seems strange that we cannot agree to disagree and each one tell us of what they know and let these bickerings cease and let brotherly love continue. Some of the faithful are trying hard to convince Brother Jamieson of the return of spirits and the immortality of the soul. We have read somewhere that there is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. Perhaps if not here, hereafter. Again we read: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them for spiritual things are spiritually discerned." The question, why can some see and understand while others cannot, if the spirit of God giveth understanding, we do not know, unless prenatal conditions, education and environments have molded the minds of some in certain channels of thought hard to overcome. We know many people are so engrossed in worldly pursuits that they take but little time to develop their spiritual natures and do not fit themselves to become receptive to the spiritual powers; while others are constantly trying to come to a knowledge of the truth, and are never able to do so, doubt and distrust hinders their advancement as the spirits are unable to make their presence felt or seen; but when the mists have cleared away we shall know and be known as we are. We realize that agitation of thought

think good and charitable thoughts as much as possible and express them in a kindly manner, for we know a soft answer turneth away wrath, but griev ous words stir up anger. I do not understand by this that we should permit anyone to wilfully impose upon us, for we should speak out our honest sentiments. For illustration, I know of an instance where one person was saying to another, "You might as well have the game as the name, for we shall do all we can to let others know our opinion of you." The other replied, "No, things are not always what they seem. I have done no wrong and I will die before will acknowledge things that I know nothing about, and no one can injure my soul. Reputation is what others think we are, and character is what we are." And so each one went his way one wounded nearly to death, the other feeling competent to judge and con demn. Perhaps each one, from his standpoint thought he was justifled in denouncing the other. But sometime in the great future, weighed in the bal-ance of justice, they may temper their opinions with gentle mercy and love, and from out of all these seeming contradictions the right shall come upper most.

So we realize that the contributors of the spiritual press may seemingly speak sarcastic things at times of one another, which create a storm of discord and inharmony, but we also know after the storm the sunshine appears and all feel decidedly better. Nearly every subject of interest is discussed in our spiritual papers by the best talent, and these discussions will have a tendency to make us think and as thoughts are things, in time, possibly through experience, we shall learn better how to advance our cause and benefit the world in general, meeting the past season at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, was of a nature so unusually important as to demand more than a passing notice. In many respects it was the most successful session in all the twenty years of the existence of our camp. The remarkable harmony, the high order of talent employed and the large attendance would have made it notable, while the financial results were beyond our most optimistic expectations. Not only were all running expenses met and paid in full, but a new and commodious restaurant building was erected, a brilliant system of lights installed, and other permanent improvements aggregating over five hundred dollars, added without in curring a dollar of debt. In addition something like two hundred dollars was contributed to the N. S. A., the Morris Pratt Institute, and other laudable objects, still leaving a very comfortable sum in the treasury. But the most important and far-reach ing event of the past session was the resolution to demonstrate to the world that Spiritualism is a practical religion by tendering the use of Mt. Pleasant Park and buildings to the Bureau of Charities of Chicago and other large cities as a breathing spot for the suffering mothers and children of the slums during a couple of months of the sum-

The lyceum was given particular attention; Prof. Nelson Learned, a veteran worker, is giving much time, enersy and helpfulness to the lyceum move-ment. Many of the young people and children are wonderfully talented in elocution and music and as all lyceums should be, an evening of entertainment can be had with but a 1ew hours' notice. The woods rang every day with the lyceum yell: "Lyceum, lyceum, march, march ahead. Never dead, file ahead, come, come, come!"

Many of the friends kindly subscribed to the Progressive Lyceum, which of course pleased me, for it is my heart's own love.

My return trip was made as quickly as possible, making no stops. I arrived home Sunday night, Monday the friends—society and lyceum—most pleasantly surprised me with their presence and refreshments, which proved to me that there is no place like home. How dear to my heart are the scenes and friends in Galveston, where I have labored for seven years in the spiritual work, where I have many warm-hearted friends.

September 22, 23 and 24, our state convention will be held in Austin, and then I expect to start for the National Convention. Tuesday, September 29, I shall be in Joplin, Mo., then a few days in Jasper. Mo., where I first saw the light of Spiritualism, and on to Springfield for Sunday, October 4.

John Disler was one of the first mediums I visited, and I had the pleasure of again seeing him in Los Angeles, where he is now making his home. Indianapolis, Anderson and Waldron,

A Tribute.

Mrs. Dr. J. A. Smith, formerly a resi dent of Kansas City, Guthrie, Toledo Ohio, and last in St. Louis, Mo., passed away on August 22, aged 57 years. She had been an active worker in the cause of Spiritualism-for twenty years, as test medium, clairvoyant and inspirational speaker. Many persons were brought into the light of Spiritualism through her efforts in the various localities in which she lived. Eighteen years ago she and Dr. Smith were married in Kansas City, Mrs. Scovill officiating. They were the first couple married by a medium in that city. Since her marriage, she has traveled with her husband over many states, always working for The Progressive Thinker, and for the cause of Spiritualism, proving by demonstration the intercommunion between this world and the world of souls.

She was troubled with heart disease, and was confined to her home for about four months, on account of dropsy, which terminated her earthly career. She suffered intensely and for nearly three months was unable to lie down but remained in a sitting posture day and night. During all those days of agony she exhibited the most wonderful patience and fortitude. Indeed she was a living lesson of cheerful submission to the inevitable, which we may all emulate and strive to imitate. Her husband, Dr. Smith, did everything in his power to relieve her and mitigate her suffering, devoting himself entirely to caring for her.

Several days previous to her leaving she left she said to me, "See! they are coming for me! I am going." She was resigned, and on the morning of the 22d severed her earthly ties and was born into a higher life. Funeral services were conducted at four o'clock Sunday afternoon, .under the auspices of the First Church of Spiritualists, by Mrs. Gabauer, of New Orleans, and your humble servant; our pastor, Brother Peck. being absent at camp-meeting at Clinton, Iowa. ANOTHER TRUE STORY

For Prof. W. F. Jamieson's Explanation.

It will be remembered by the reader, that the controversy between Brother W. F. Jamieson and myself developed upon his part the acknowledgement of the fact that there are genuine phenom ena known as Spiritualistic. He fully subscribes to Prof. T. J. Hudson's statement that "The facts are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time. The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism today, is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to en-lighten him." I have quoted this decla-ration from Hudson's book, not any too frequently, in preceding articles There is a world of meaning in it. It ought to stand at the head of every article printed in every Spiritualistic paper in the world, for at least a year, because, in that declaration of a scientific writer, who was a non-Spiritualist, is contained the proof of what Spiritualism has accomplished in the short space of fifty years, or the latter half of the nineteenth century. Accomplishing it, too, in the face of the most bitter opposition of church and state. It is a most colossal victory for Spiritualism and the wonder is that it is not more considered and appreciated by Spiritualists than it appears to be.

If, within the next fifty years, Spiritualism will do as well in establishing the Spiritualistic origin of its phenomena, its victory will then be complete, and the future historian will record the twentieth century as the one in which the proofs of a future life were estab lished and universally accepted.

It will be seen, then, that Spiritualism, having established the truth of its phenomena, has yet to establish their Spiritualistic origin. I do not believe this task will be as difficult of accom-plishment as was the former. If we only knew how many people in world are convinced by undeniable proofs of the spiritual origin of these phenomena, but who, for various reasons, are non-committal and silent about it, we would about conclude that virtually, this task is already accom-

But we are yet obliged to encounter such men as Brother Jamieson, who antagonize the Spiritualistic origin of our phenomena, accepted as genuine. He thus writes: "I put my own explanation. that the phenomena are 'wholly of human origin, against the Spiritualists theory of spirit outside of earthly body. One would suppose from this quotation that he has but one explanation upon which he depended, and which he trots out against the Spiritualists' theory but in another place in the same article from which the above is taken, he acnowledges that he is charged Rev. Moses Hull, with having so many explanations, that he (Hull) was afraid they would "kill each other." It is probably an advantage to the skeptic to be thus provided with a large number of explanations for if one fails, another can be employed, and so on, ad infinitum.

In view of Brother Jamieson's position as developed by our controversy, there was nothing left for me to do but to furnish some of my experiences for one or more of the explanations which "puts against the Spiritualists' theory of spirit outside of earthly body." Up to this date. I have furnished quite a number of these experiences, but at this writing, September 1, 1903, have seen no explanations of them from his pen. I have either been contributing them too rapidly for The Progressive Thinker to publish, or Brother Jamieson requires more time in making se lections from his large stock of explana tions, to suit each particular experience

But I did not intend to write such an etended preface to the experience or true story I will now relate.

Some years ago, one Sunday night about 11 o'clock, I was called hastily, to see a Mrs. Anderson, an old lady, of about 80 years of age, perhaps older and residing but a few squares from my residence. When I arrived at her bed side, she was dead. Standing around her bed were her two daughters and myself discussing her sudden departure. One of the daughters finally isked me if I would not place in the mouth of her deceased mother, her false teeth, which request I complied with at once. A year or more subse quently, in one of Mrs. Hibbitts' seances, a voice purporting to be that of Mrs. Anderson, addressed me, and to satisfy me that it was she, who was talking, reminded me of the above-mentioned circumstance, with other tests, equally convincing.

Upon another, similar occasion, I was hastily summoned to the bedside of Col. Chas. A. Bollinger, mayor of the city of Fort Wayne. Upon approaching his bedside and placing my hand over his heart, I said as gently as I could to his wife, who was kneeling by the bed, that his heart had ceased to beat. She arose, placed her arms around me, and implored me not to say that he was dead but to do something quick. Although satisfied of the futility of resorting to any measure looking to his restoration Ladministered a hypodermic injection of a powerful stimulant, but, of course to no avail. A short time after his funeral, which was one of the largest ever witnessed in Fort Wayne, I attended a seance (trumpet) given by a medium by the name of Mrs. Barrett, who, with myself and two others, constituted the entire circle. It was not long until a voice through the trumpet called me by name. I asked whose it was, when the response came, "Zollinger." the response came, "Zollinger." What?" said I. "Mayor Zollinger?" Having answered in the affirmative, he went on and detailed minutely everything that happened during my stay in his room, voluntarily, without my asking a single, leading question. No one had been called to see him. Is it at all surprising that Prof. Hudson exclaims. "The man who denies the phenomena of Epiritualism to-day, is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant"? I await Brother in the circle, but myself knew that I

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

Funeral in Buffalo-Geo. H. Brooks-Scientific Stars Good for Skeptics.

Just home from Buffalo, where I went to join the friends of Nathaniel Hunt, whose body was cremated under the auspices of the G. A. R., September 16. Short services were conducted by the writer at the house, then all went to the First Spiritual Temple, corner of Jersey and Prospect, now owned by Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, and there the gospel of Spiritualism was presented, and its blessings received by the family and friends, after which the Grand Army took charge of the remains and conducted their services at the erematory

Mr. Hunt was a man of much merit, oved and honored by all who knew him. He was for many years a generous supporter of the First Spiritual Church, and Mrs. Hunt, his wife, was several years president of the Women's Union which co-operated with the church and rendered valuable aid to its work. She ccepts the situation with cheerful fortitude and exemplifies her faith in this time of trial, proving that Spiritualism is good to live by and die by, and clesses all who live its teachings. I met many of the faithful who appreciate their blessings and give their nfluence to the cause.

Rev. B. F. Austin is speaker for the church at the Temple this month and heard flattering accounts of his work. He has packed audiences, without any sensational tests advertised to "draw." That speaks well for him and quite as well for the people who hear him.

I reached home at 10:15 p. m. Thursday, and found Mrs. Howe as I left her, wrestling with an attack of stomach and bowel trouble, which I hope is to be but temporary. On my arrival I was greeted with several letters-one from Geo. H. Brooks, whose boy ordered him home from Lily Dale without making us a call. That new master will hold George in respectable limits, the more binding for his diminutive stature. The very helplessness of babies makes them the most exacting and best obeyed tyrants. When he is as tall as his father, he will lose much of the magic authority due to his present newness in the family make up and his dependence upon those he commands. Brother Brooks has been chairman at

Lily Dale some six or seven years, and his word has been authority for most of us. When he said no smoking near or in the auditorium, we took our pipes out of our mouths, looked sheepish and wondered if he meant us, and if anybody else had seen us smoking in a crowd of 2,000 ladies and gentlemen! When he said be quiet and give the medium your best thought, we quieted and tried to think of something good, such as tobacco, beer, onions, and a shar scrap with our wicked neighbor, who refused to go to hell our way. So George Harvey Brooks was our boss. He enjoyed it, and so did we, and when we refused to mind, at once he laughed at us. and we laughed back, until he forgot our sin, and thought of another chance to boss us about our tardiness in arriv ing at church and our disposition to gos sip about Brooks' baby. Well, it was just fun to see him do it, and to observe the flesh-or fat-accumulate on bones every time the name of Master George Raymond Brooks was sprung on his memory. Now George Raymond Brooks is the boss and George Harvey takes a back seat and when the youngster kicks his mother, and commands George Harvey to stop smoking, his voice is more interesting and authoritative, within the circle of his official capacity, than that of the taller George as chairman at Lily Dale.

I note with interest that Brother Ja mieson is still trying to find out what he thinks about science, and still trying to limit his capacities to a bundle of facts arranged in order like a challenge of ten pins ready for a master strike in game of rolling. There they are, sir! See those facts, all classified, all stand ing on end with a chip on their shoulder demanding the worshipful allegiance of critical skeptics, who believe nothing that they know, and know nothing that they believe; and are not sure that they know anything, or that any of the rec ords of facts are true—except those about meteoric showers. They oc curred "thousands of years ago" and 'have been verified." Good! Brother Jamieson has faith in hings that were reported "thousands of years ago." Somebody saw them and told the story to somebody who be leved it, and the stars fell from heaven! Of course they did, because stars are scienitfic facts, and they ar anged themselves in becoming order so that they could be classified, and canonized as science, to convert skeptics, and convince doubters that stars were real things—not ghosts or beliefs—thousands of years ago." That is starry science, chasing itself down the centuries "a thousand years" with a cat-o'-nine-tails tied to a long crooked handle of Jamieson faith! I did not see them. but of course, they are scien-

REFLECTIONS.

Concerning Temptation and Human Concerning Temptation ad Weakness.

Is it best to face evil or to shun it? Should it not depend upon circum-stances and upon the individual? Those who go into evil places with full knowledge of the surroundings and with the lofty purpose of lifting up and strengthening the weak and erring are worthy of all praise, unless they themselves lack the requisite strength and wisdom, in which case they are to be pitied. The innocence that is based upon ignorance, however, will find itself in danger whenever it undertakes such a task. Whosoever unwittingly walks into a slimy pool in the dark is likely to be soiled just as much as though he deliberately walked into it in the daylight Recently several boys were playing and climbing near some electric wires. One of them was dared to touch the wires, He did so with fearlessness that was admirable if rightly directed; but he lost his life.

Special fitness for work among the degraded is required by those undertaking such work, including constant watchfulness, patience and perseverance, and the possession of the very strongest spiritual and moral qualities. The moral muscles should not be strained by seeking temptation needlessly, just to show strength and for self-glorification. It might result in a breakdown.

In endeavoring to prevent or to abolish an evil it is best to try and view it from an opponent's standpoint. For instance, take a fight against opening a beer garden near a school. It is said that in Germany men frequently go with their families to the beer gardens without thought of injury. In England it is a common practice for families a little distance from home to seek refreshment in "public houses"-these saloons serving as a connecting link to the old-time inns. Many of the foreignborn citizens of Chicago, therefore, see no danger to anyone in beer gardens. To gain their co-operation it is necessary to prove to them that such places are a temptation to youth, in whom may be created or awakened an uncontroll able appetite which leads to the lowest depth of moral degradation; also to point out to them that the rooms for hire for immoral purposes, which are understood to be usually connected, are but the natural sequence of becoming frequenters of these resorts.

There are so many in this city who drink intoxicants in what they call "moderation," that anything approaching prohibition would be strongly resented. Curtailment of the opportunity to purchase liquor would be deemed an infringement of personal rights. It is id injurious to the general welfare to have law looked upon with contempt. Yet an item from Terre Haute, Ind., read that "John McMahon. captain of a fire company, committed suicide with poison because after seventeen years of abstinence from intoxicants the old habit reasserted its power over him." Possibly he was tempted or persuaded to his undoing. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." The remedy is in knowledge which shall give power to resist injurious cravings and which shall make society careful in the examples and tempations its sets forth.

"Lead us not into temptation" is the cry of weak humanity; but it is nevertheless the offspring of wisdom. There is nothing impure in a picture or statue of the naked human form; yet if the sight of one causes feelings of sensuality, is it not best to turn the eyes Beware, however, of assuming that all others are similarly affected. It is unjust for this reason alone to conlemn those who possess such works of art. In all things discretion should be used and judgment be soundly based.

Seek not temptation's lure, yet walk without a fear; Where'er stern duty calls, your path keep straight and clear; Crush noisome-smelling weeds that snare and trip the feet: All trifling faults o'ercome—thus shall your life be sweet.

SLAVERY OF CUSTOM.

Mourning for the Dead - Solace of Spiritualism

The events of Pope Leo's decline, death and funeral were brought promi-nently before the people of America through the daily papers. There were great flourishes and demonstrations made all along the line of these events as great as it was in the power of Catholics to make them-all done to glorify the Catholic religion and give the church a tremendous boost.

And now the question arises, Is it the proper thing to do for Spiritualists to publicly express sympathy or condo lence for persons who go into modern mourning? Any one of ordinary intelligence ought to be able in such cases to counteract and overcome sorrow by the light of their knowledge of a future life for all.

Some folks say, "We are naturally overcome with grief and sorrow at the loss of dear friends, and we cannot help it." Probably the dear friends are not lost to us, although, they have disappeared from sight. It is questionable if excessive grief is natural to those who understand Spiritualism. Perhaps fashion, custom, habits of thought and education have a preponderating influence. Perhaps old religious beliefs have con-

Why should we succumb to sorrow and go into mourning? Why can we not help it? Are we Spiritualists in name only? Such proceedings indicate that we are unworthy representatives of Spiritualism-in fact we do not represent its facts or principles nor philosophy. If we are going to be true to our profession, the most appropriate time and place to show it is a funeral occa-

Some people say the crude barbarians are vain and idiotic in their weeping and wailing for the dead, in their ideas and actions at a funeral, but the same thing in meaning and effect is done in our home land in a different style, by other demonstrations.

What shall we say in reply to the opponent of Spiritualism who stands off and makes such remarks as follows: You Spiritualists are in the same boat with us in mourning for the dead. You are deceivers and don't practice what you preach. You claim knowledge of a future life and communication with the dead which is balm for wounds and solace for sorrow—all nice to think of and talk about, but of no practical value." If we are honest /we must confess there is some truth in that argument as it has been developed in some instances in which it is a just rebuke.

People have been expending their love and money on coffins, funerals, graves and monuments in an age when men are supposed to be wise. It has been said that $75,000,000 are annually expended in this country for funeral ex penses. Among the slaves to custom, the rich indulge in expensive funerals, and the poor and middle classes imitate them, in some degree, to be in fashion. Following in the train are the needless expenses of coffins, hearses, emblems of mourning, carriages, mourning costumes, processions, forms and ceremonies, and finally costly grave-stones or monuments-utterly useless to the living and the dead-erected in cemeteries, rarely seen or thought of by the living multitude. Such irrational customs rest on fashion, superstition, not on common sense or reason. How much better it would be for our world if a rule were established for all alike, by which the expensive show and waste of time and money could be avoided

"Death levels all distinctions," and the dead body is of no more consequence than old cast-off clothing, and nothing should be wasted on the dead when there is so much needed among the living. We hope the time will come when customs will change, when the rich and poor will receive the same respect, when people will do away with expensive funerals, and cremate corpses, which can be done at small ex-

The common ideas of death have been shrouded in gloom. The pages that have set forth the fact of death are filled with terror. Carlously enough, some of the most gloomy figures associated with death have come from Christianity, and yet it started in its career by virtue of this greatest of all belefs-victory over death. And yet, to judge from the gloomy observances, mourning weeds and the like, amid the notes of the funeral dirge, we would think that death meant not rebirth into a new life but utter extinction. Mourners, palsied with grief and woe, stand appalled at the pitifulicorpse and bend their raining tears on clods of clay. Theologians have taught that death was an after thought that God made this fair earth and made man perfect and intended that he should live here immortal and painlesse But man sinned, and, as punishment sent by divine anger, death came into the world. leny all that class of conceptions and affirm that death is as patural as birth, as sweet and full of hope as, birth, part of the divine order, a token of wis-

Requiescat in pace is a popular motto dedicated to the dead. If the remains that are laid in the grave were meant simply, it would be appropriate enough.
But few people harbor the idea that their loved ones remain there—even on the resurrection plan. Souls never rest in that sense. Life is a perpetual motion. Careworn mertals/may have rest from material work, but such awaken to a life of spiritual activity in which work becomes a pleasure.

There is a lingering feeling which should be dissipated, that our spirit friends are especially honored when we decorate their graves or erect tomb-stones to their memory. Your friends are attracted to you, not because their bodies are interred or ashes preserved in your vicinity, but because you are here and you attract them—not their cast-off bodies. Then place some memento of your appreciation of their worth where it can be best made use of to carry forward the work they are now interested in. They have become invis-

The article in The Progressive Thinker of August 1, from N. B. Freeland, exactly expressed my opinion of Spiritualism one year ago; but after my only child, a boy of seven, was taken from me, I could not endure the thought that he was annihilated, and I said if there is a truth in Spiritualism I will know it. There were no mediums here that I could consult, and if there had been I would not have consulted them, for fear of being deceived, but I did all that I could alone to receive some sign or evidence that my boy still existed. I sat in as passive and receptive state as I could put myself in, but I will admit-it that finds expression in a tone that was far from either. I read everything over its own elevation crushes precould alone to receive some sign or evon the subject I could get; some articles I read seemed reasonable, while others seemed most unreasonable, and after about a month of earnest search for some light on the subject, after reading an article that seemed more unreasonable than any I had read before threw down my paper and said: Death may not end all, but I don't know it, and I don't believe anyone else And the tiny spark of hope that had been in my heart departed, and I gave way to my grief more utterly than ings," yet its assumed office in the mor-I had ever done before. I hadn't a thought in my mind or a hope in my heart, and then I heard my boy's voice as plainly as I ever heard it in my life, "Mamma!

Instantly my thoughts came rushing back into my mind and I heard him no more then—but I knew—I knew at last burden of San I condres the burden of San that he was not dead, only changed so should be at him. So far as anything I could not see him. The impression Sar'gis says is concerned he might be that his words gave me was that he was in full accord with every position of the crying and screaming as hard as he "old teachings." The fact that the arcould, trying to make me hear him; ticle criticised was only a copy of an and several times the next day these automatically conveyed communication words were impressed on my mind in such a way that I knew that he said them to me: "I did make you hear me, didn't I, mamma?"

I did not hear the tones of his voice like I did at first, but I intuitively knew that he was glad and proud and happy as could be because he had at last made me hear him.

I have had much evidence since then, but I have worked earnestly and pa-tiently for it, and I sincerely believe that anyone that really tries and has patience will learn the truth, and feel on earth equal to this knowledge.

Gravity Is a Separate Sense.

The conscious senses by which we become acquainted with or take note of physical sensations are ordinarly said o be five. But this enumeration was made ages ago when man was incapa ble of making nice distinctions certainly can appropriately mention six; for the sense of weight is peculiar and distinct, and does not belong to feeling. Suppose there be several metal balls of similar size and color on a table. Can any one by simply feeling them tell which is the heaviest? or even guess their weight by touch? But the moment they are taken up a new quality is perceived which is due to sense of weight and its nature is independent of feeling or touch. The sense of weight is also measurably perceptible by barometric changes when the air is lighter or denser or when a person rapidly changes his altitude. It is an interesting question: Does a decarnated spirit wholly lose this sense of weight? As they have the power of passing through matter it is doubtful if they can discern if a body be heavy or light. In other words their sense of gravity is abolished or exterminated. C. H. MURRAY.

We cannot honor or win the approval of departed friends by uselessly afflict guage unknown to the medium he ing ourselves, by weeping where their bodies lie, or decorating grassy mounds; but we can verily commune and co-operate with their living spirits by engaging with them in some useful service to perpetuate their work and memory. The new gospel gives us knowledge in place of faith or theorygives a basis for our hopes, founded forth this effort of Sar'gis. It was upon natural laws that are forever harmonious with reason.

When we see that our friends are taken from us, that it must be so, we should gracefully yield to the inevitable and be reconciled to the situation. "COSMIC VISITORS."

Sar'gis' Reply to an Article by the California Philosopher.

To the Editor: -Returning home after an absence of several weeks, The Progressive Thinker of August 1, was found containing an article-"Cosmic Visitors"-by Prof. Dawbarn, the San Leandro philosopher. As all "vibra-tions" that are printed from that philosophical, psychological and ornithological center are carefully read and studied by all interested in the very newest—kind—of thought, so this latest resumption with ponderous irony. The animus is disclosed at the outset in his styling reported seances as "Revelations by Sar'gis," and subjecting that unfortunate to be trod under foot by that proboscidean humor.

To speak from the common vibratory evel, the emanation is evidently and simply splenetic. The office of the spleen in the physiologic function is as yet unsettled by his favorite "old teachthe under-world it would be called "spite." At least that coloring is suggested by the elaborate and ponderous humor so persistently directed at "Sar' gis." As he was simply a reporter and expressly refrained from an opinion. pro or con, as to what was reported, through the hand of an educated gentleman of character and professional repute before witnesses who took down verbatim what was given, does not call for personal attack unless the "veridical" quality of the reporter is called in The "veridical" innuendoes question. nly excite curiosity as to the motive of the user. Philosophers should be superior to spleen, yet history is almost tragic with the bitterness, animosities and fierce antagonisms of the children of genius. the joy of knowing "There is no death; they live and love us still." And I wish the upper world of intellect. The great to say to all doubters, Don't give up try- Newton was not exempt from these ating to know, for there is no other joy tacks of genius-temper and made his victims wonder whether the attraction of gravity or the explosive force of pleric displeasure was most acu controlling.

How, then, should Sar'gis expect to dro after once, even though in strict courtesy and good humor, asking if "vibration," in its intenser and omnipotent expression, might not sometimes assume the color of a "fad." When that levity at Olympus was recalled, the wonder over the flings at the innocent reporter ceased and the revenge of genius indulgently recognized. It is all right and-natural. There is really no point in all that can be seen in the Philosopher's talk except it be to poke fun at the reporter, and any serious criticism would be simply a work of imagination. But there is thing that is surprising. It is where he asks: "How these cosmists can automatically write the American language?

* * Thought may be creative, but to assume power to create a knowledge of a foreign language is going farther than the most ardent telepathist would sanction," etc. Were it not that this is over the signature of the San Leandro pundit it would be incredible as from a like source. Such a criticism from any "high" teacher is matter for wonder. It belongs to the very beginnings of the study of spirit return, that spirits do communicate one with another without using the speech of physical organs. Surely Brother Dawbarn means to be facetious rather than serious in such an objection.

He knows it is the control that gives the message in the language of the medium or sitter, and that it may or may not be a translation from the spirit de livering the message to the control. If the objector has not had the experience of a control speaking to a sitter a lanshould not ignore the testimony those who have as not being "veridical." Spirits tell us they communicate with each other without the use of earth language. But this is only a sample of the entire article—assumed superiority and a pooh-pooh air that catches by the light of the twentieth century. It is not our fault if San Leandro has not noted the wide discussion in scientific circles of these very theories as to tides, moons, and in fact the entire fabric of what may be aptly called textbook or orthodox science. Even the wonderful cult of "vibration" has not escaped the scrutiny of practical minds. But to the original offense that called about three years ago that in a review of "fads" and such things as "telepathy," "sub-consciousness," "subliminal," "objective," "subjective," "ego," "vibration," and all that sore of nomenclature that had crept into our literature and on our platforms, this was said:

"As to vibration—it is like the others

when applied to spirit—sound—but affords a peg on which to hang unthink able theories. To make thought depend ent upon degrees of vibration is rankest materialism. It is only and purely a physical concept, and no shade of ety nology can give it any other. We can only cognize life from the phenomen of motion—the two are non-separable in thought. And how this thought can be measured by wig-wags is unthink

There is the original offense, and it is only natural as it is enjoyable to see the return at the expense of the "High Spir-It is not called for here to discuss this matter of vibrations, nor to defend the statements of the "High Spirit"-for neither of which is this reporter responsible, but the concluding sentence of Brother Dawbarn's article may be not ticed. He says:

"Is it not possible that we herein get a glimpse of the mighty power of suggestion over even High Spirits, and that the editor medium was thus him-self shaping the whole communication out of his own dreams and experience.' Well, well, how can you answer that? The medium is dead, and to say that he was the most astonished of men at these strange utterances, so at variance with all his education and thought, could only rest upon the word of the reporter, and his testimony already queried by the critic as to its being "veridical"—yet such was the case. The medium as a matter of fact was utterly ignorant of any mediumship except his own, never having had an experience with a medium but once, and that not privately. Nor was he given to occult things, but the reverse, and was critically conscious while reading off the message that without volition came by his hand. But the plain facts upset the theory that spirits cannot communicate save the vibrations on the part of sitter, medium and spirit are equal, or that the vibrations of the sitter suggestively control those of the spirit and compel a message to correspond to the suggestion. Or the spirit strikes the vibration of the sitter and reads back his own thought to him. If that is not it-what

We have read carefully, studiously and admiringly, in a sense, all that Bro. Dawbarn has written and printed in The Progressive Thinker, but owing to the want of a proper vibratory rapport, or something, can only make out his position as something like this: (1) There is a spirit world. (2) There are spirits in it who were once inhabitants of this earth. (3) That these spirits—some of them-can and do return, but are only able to prove that they cannot and do not. (4) That what we think is spirit return is only a suggestion of our own minds "telepathically" given to the mind of the medium.

Perhaps some other mind whose vibrations are quicker, or slower, as the case may call for, can make something else out of it all, but the line to ours is there.

And now for a feeble attempt to see into this mystery: Mind, if continuous, must be of the same nature in both worlds, both conditions of life. If so, then the superior mental endowment should be as capable of putting itself on the plane of the inferior in one as in the other. In this mortal life the whole scheme of teaching and instruction from the kindergarten to the university is founded on the ability of the teacher to so enter into the nascent pupil mind scape the high dudgeon of San Lean-lro after once, even though in strict knowledge. It is what the mother mind does to that of the child. Her lullaby is not the suggestion of the child mind controlling hers, but the self-prompting tender inspirations of her own to the needs of the child. So it is, or so it logically ought to be, that when translated to spirit life she returns to her still child, and brings the same faculty of adaptability to harmonize with the material environed conceptions of her mortal child, leading it up nearer to her own. And so with wise spirits-or according to sommon sense ought to be. This theory of synchronous vibration and hypnotic suggestion, reducing spirit communication to a level with wireless telegraphy, as the necessary condition of spirit cognition, is as incongruous as it is mischievous, and a fact or two settles its character. ple: Time and time again have spirits returned confessing themselves murderers of the most depraved kind, and yet neither the sitter nor the medium showing any disposition to run amuck. or to kill each other, or to hurt anybody, but on the contrary have tried to help the poor spirit to get free from his condition. But then, these experiences are to inverted theories like the negro boy's question as to who made the fence that the unbaked Adam was leaned against to dry-they upset all the "old teachings" as well as many of the new. How to Keep Young In Old Age.

Here is a subject which many of us have pondered over, I am sure, as every one of us likes to be admired. Much indeed can be said on the subject given, rules how to live, etc. Now I wish to come to the point, and that is this, that no one is older than he feels.

That some people think after they have reached three score and ten they have lived past their time is a serious mistake. You must now learn how to develop your soul, have more soul life: it will certainly illuminate your whole countenance,, your eyes will glisten with a new light which has never been seen there before. We can think ourselves into any position, at any age, start at any time in life, with unselfish ideas, to elevate and cultivate our soul-life, and I am sure we will always remain younglooking, no matter how gray the hair is. The idea is this, to have a righteous understanding of the God, the one who has given us life; for us to see we must keep our sun to shine out of the shape hat is given us.

How can we when once conscious of his grand truth of being, look old at any age? Everyone should take a few minutes' time each day to concentrate in the soul's nearness to God (which is is near as our breath); if we earnestly do this we will always remain young-looking. AMELIA MYERS, Queen Victoria and Spirit Communion.

In the Strand Magazine for June Mme. Helene Vacaresco, maid of honor to the Queen of Roumania, the charm ing Carmen Sylva, relates her impressions of Queen Victoria, and incidentally touches upon the belief in spirit communion so strongly held by the late sovereign. Her Majesty had been questioning Mme. Vacaresco concerning her ideals in music and art, and presently "How wide apart lie your ideals! I am so fond of music myself; and love reading the biographies of the great musiclans. They all have had such sad and thrilling experiences. I have till quite lately played on the piano, and even practiced whenever I found time enough to do so, because I ever rememhusband opened the instrument himself and les me to the music stool, and then opene a book of Mendelssohnhe loved Mendelssohn—and pointed out the passages he wanted to hear. Now I am rather ashamed to play, I am such an old woman. One day one of my youngest granddaughters caught me practicing and laughed outright. Why, grandmamma, how can you practice now, and what for?' Her remark struck me * * I left off playing for some time. But then, you see, my dear husband taught me to love all things beautiful and good—I learnt to seek Possibly, as ministering spirits, they them for his sake—now I return to may minister unto the heirs of salvathem in memory of him You cannot guess to what extent my life is interwoven with the life of the dead. I only feel alive when in close communion with the dead. My prayers lead me toward them. Their spirits and their power guide me. I am sure that the dead we have loved pray constantly in favor of the living." "I then took occasion to relate to Her Majesty how tender and true was the love which the villagers in Roumania bestow on their dead, and how many touching ceremonies and songs point out this particular trait of our national instincts.

"Further, the queen said: 'I am studying Hindustani just now. Don't laugh -I am very old, but I have always lived up to a precept which I advise you to remember: 'We must always live as if we were immortal."

"In my opinion,' says the writer, 'all the power and bliss of Queen Victoria's life and influence are explained by those words. With a quiet, melancholy smile she added: 'Then will death come to us like a radiant surprise, a most wonderful and unlooked-for boon: then will the joy of seeing again those we have loved be most startling and com-

of clairvoyance we have ever read reaches us from an esteemed correspondent. He savs: Perhaps this instance of clairvoyance and its proof will be of interest to some of your readers. When a child of six years my home was in a small village in Leicestershire. In the autmn of 1884 our rector (who was a very old man) was ill, and our family were much concerned about his condition, as our lives were bound very much with his church and himself, my mother being organist and my father churchwarden, and a personal friend. One evening my elder sister, my self, and a baby brother were sent for a walk in charge of a nursemaid and a work apprentice. went further than was intended, and as it was growing dusk on returning it was decided that to reach home the quicker we should go through the church yard, but as we reached within fifty yards of the gate I saw a speck of white just on the outside. As I looked, it enlarged until it seemed a square of white paper. We stood still, and it continued to grow until it was a pillar of white, about eight to ten feet high, then slowly turn to the form of our rector, dressed in his surplice, hood and stole as we had been accustomed to see him, the surplice being of a peculiar fashion not seen nowadays. I. though only a child, thought a great deal of this, but did not dare to say anything, as I was of an imaginative nature, so my parents say, and I knew they would check me by saying I had dreamt it. That same hour that we saw the phenomena proved the time of the passing on of our rector. Time went on till 1899. when I came in contact with the same nursemaid and apprentice, and the conversation came round to ghosts. I related this experience to them, when I was astonished to see their looks towards each other. I said, 'Did you see it, too?' They answered, 'Yes, but it frightened us so we dared not talk of Since then I have come to know of Spiritualism, and on visiting my elder sister I mentioned this and other experiences as a proof of clairvoyance, when she astonished me by saying she had seen it also, and had remembered details I had forgotten, and was able to bring to my mind circumstances as to how we had got home, which satisfied

The Invisible World-Views of John Wesley, Founder of Methodism.

From a large volume written by John Wesley, founder of Methodism, entitled "The Invisible World," we make the following extracts:

"It is true that the English in general and, indeed, most of the men of learning of Europe, have given up all accounts of witches and apparitions as mere old wives' fables. I am sorry for it, and I willingly take this opportunity of entering my solemn protest against this violent compliment which so many that believe the Bible pay to those who do not believe it. I owe them no such service. I take knowledge these are at the bottom of the outcry which has been raised, and with such insolence spread throughout the nation; and in direct opposition, not only to the Bible, but to the suffrage of the wisest and best of men in all ages and nations. They well know (whether Christians know it or not) that the giving up of wishes for. witchcraft (the control of undeveloped spirits) is in effect giving up the Bible. And they know, on the other hand, that if but one account of men with separate alism) falls to the ground. "One of the capital objections to all the accounts, which I have known urged over and over, is this, 'Did you ever see an apparition yourself?' No, nor did I ever see a murder, yet I believe there is of occult forces will find instruction of such a thing. "Elizabeth Hobson was born in Sun derland in the year 1774. Her father dving when she was three or four years old, her uncle, Thomas Rea, a pious man, brought her up as his daughter She was a serious child, and grew up in the fear of God; yet she had a deep and sharp conviction of sin until she was about sixteen years of age, when she found peace with God, and from that time the whole tenor of her behavior was suitable to her profession. On Wednesday, May 23, 1788, and the three following days, I talked with her at large. But it was with difficulty that I could prevail upon her to speak. The substance of what she said was as follows:

"'From my childhood when any of my neighbors died, whether men, wo-men, or children, I used to see them just before, or when they died, and I was not frightened at all, it was so comber the happy days when my darling mon. Indeed, I did not then know they were dead. I saw many of them by day and many of them by night. Those that came when it was dark brought light with them. I observed that little children and many grown persons had a bright, glorious light around them, but many had a goomy, dismal light and a dusky cloud over them.'

tion, and watch over the interests of those who on earth were dear to them, either by the ties of nature or religion One of them was employed to converse with the Apostle John and explain to him the wonderful things he saw in his visions. (Rev. xxii.)

"The sentiment for which we are pleading has the sanction of the highest antiquity. Philo speaks of it as a received notion of the Jews, that the souls of good men officiate as minister-ing spirits. The Pagans, in the earliest ages, imagined that the spirits of their deceased friends continued near them, and were frequently engaged in per forming acts of kindness, hence the delfication of their kings and heroes, and the custom of invoking the names of those who were dear to them.

"Cicero makes a better use of the doctrine, when he endeavors to comfort a father for the loss of his son by the thought that he might still be engaged in performing kind offices for him And it is not improbable that the idea though perverted by the heathen to the purpose of idolatry, might, like the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, be derived from a divine source. "A few years ago a gentleman of character and serious carriage, who resided near St. James and lived very happily with his wife, was taken sick and died, which so affected his dear left companion that she sickened also and kept her bed.

"In about ten days after her husband's death, as she was sitting upright in bed, and a friend and near relation sitting near her, she looked steadfastly toward the foot of the bed, and said in a cheerful voice, 'My dear, I will be with you in two hours,' The gentle woman who was with her (and who firmly attested the same as most true) said to her, 'Child, whom do you speak to?' (for she saw nobody). She answered, It is my husband who came to call me hence, and I am going to him;' which surprised her friend very much, who, thinking she was a little lightheaded, called in somebody else, to whom she spoke very cheerfully and told the same story. Before the two hours were expired she went on and up to her dear companion, to be happy together forever, to the great surprise of all present."

Eternity.

In The Progressive Thinker, No. 720, J. T. Dow appears to be very much perplexed, and quite at sea, over the ques tion of the length of eternity and the continuation of his own individuality, and is very anxious to gain as much light on the subject as possible.

Now he is asking too much, for there is not a person living on the face of the globe, nor a spirit in all the yast realma of the spirit spheres, that can give a definite solution of the length of eternity, only to say that it always existed and yet they don't know.

The problem is simply overwhelming, entirely incomprehensible in its nature, and belongs to that class of psychology that is beyond the intellect of man, and has to be worked out by reason, and accepted by each individual just according to his capacity for comprehension. But let us look at it for a moment.

Suppose, as very many unwisely say, there must have been a "first great cause" for all things, and that, at some definite period in the past, established a definite period for the beginning of eternity, what was the cause of the first great cause? And what preceded the time of that fixed eternity? Or take the Christian orthodox God—they claim me that it was in reality the spirit of that He "always" existed. How do the rector I had seen."—E. A. H. the "always" existed. How do they know? Who was ever back of "always?" How does He know Himself? for He certainly could not have preceded himself. Now Brother J. T. Dow has jumped into deep water, clear over his head and ears, and his feet can't touch bottom, and he is crying out for some one to pull him out; but let me tell him his only way to get out is to lay hold of the rope of reason that hangs just above his head, and pull himself out, until he can land high and dry on a satisfied foundation. But he asks for even an opinion on the subject. I will give mine freely:

I believe that eternity is the present moment-now.

I believe that we are just as much in eternity, now, as we ever shall be. I believe that eternty "always" existed, and that as it has always existed, so it is but reasonable to suppose that it always will exist as now, as we cannot precede time. I believe that our spirits, the life principle, always existed—so they always will, eternally, and I think that before J. T. Dow gets through the eternity of the future he will have all of the plensure of an eternity of the future he C. P. MITCHELL.

CASH AND RELIGION.

A New Syndicate of Old Enemies.

"And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together, for before they were at enmity between themselves."—Luke 23: 12.

During the late sickness of Mr. G. V. Pecci, known as Leo (lion) XIII, Pope of Rome, the press and pulpit of Christendom were apparently camped on the boundary line of frenzy with acute and painful sympathy. Presidents, kings, statesmen, priests and eminent laymen taxed the world's telegraph supply with messages of condolence, inquiry, and ardent hope. Among those anxious sufferers, the leading ministers of Protestant faith seemed to be most prominent. Their pulpits creaked under the weight of praise bestowed upon the invalid-so fulsome in character as to convey the impression they intended to canonize him before death.

And then what a fearful wail! What melancholy ululation followed, when the vital spark quit that poor old fiftypound tenement, it had occupied ninetythree years!

It brought to mind the anguished cry of Jeremiah, "My bowels my bowels!" John 4: 19.

During my youth and early manhood bitter and ceaseless warfare was carried on between Protestant and Catholic Christianity, and history informs us that ever since the days of Luther, it has raged vindictively-had been most a vendetta at times, producing crime and bloodshed wherever the cults were brought together. Protestantism always called Catholicism, "Mother of harlots" and Catholicism responded by pointing out Protestant churches as her lewd daughters."

What has caused this sudden reconciliation? Why have war and calumny without notice, been merged into adulation almost sickening, for the head of the largest body of the belligerents? Leo was not a great man. He was only a mild, amiable old gentleman, who if a Protestant, would have made an acceptable Sunday-school teacher. I defy the world to produce a book, (he never wrote one), a speech, a poem, or eyen a paragraph, of his composition, that in sentiment or words surpasses mediocrity. In fact it seems possible that his mental organization was of such an ordinary character that he might be sincere in claiming in fallibility. I have heard of a man who was equally confident of being the spout to a tea-pot. It was not therefore because a great scholar, statesman or philanthropist.

trial—and tyranny was not safe unless the truth was crucified. The cause that led to the cessation of arms betwen the guilds of Christianity is not found in the appearance of a new and promising flock of goats with milk of blue-grass odor, but can be traced to the personal fear of the hostiles. The leaders know that their religion is founded on myth and falsehood, and they also know that a host of the best minds on earth are equally aware of the fact. They have seen Spiritualism during the past half-century force mankind to strike with a power before unknown. They have seen their infallible books reduced to the plane of ordinary literature, and their boasted miracles become themes for the jester. Safety. in abstinence from labor could only be secured by combination. A syndicate of Religion and Money was their only Wealth abounds in the churches. The Methodists alone raised twenty million dollars last year with little effort. Billions of property belong to the Then how their joys would double! combined religions, to which silly old But they don't, and there's the trouble. women of both sexes are daily adding legacies and donations. Will the leaders lift their heads from the lap of iniolence and engage them in useful thought? or employ their hands with honest labor, while that vast wealth rests within their grasp? Such a sacrifice is unparalleled, and must not be expected. The height of priestly ambition is to live in idleness when the sisterhood is gracious and yellow-legged chickens roost low. The million priests and great army of monks, nuns, colporteurs, musicians, janitors and other stipendiaries have ended the quarrel among themselves and are prepared with serried ranks and a common purpose, to make war upon free thought and personal liberty

In the United States we may expect all the zeal of the syndicate (spell the first syllable with an i) and hosts will besiege legislative bodies for more stringent laws against freedom of thought and action. Many laws of that character already disgrace our statute books. We are compelled to pay all taxes on school property and give one seventh part of our time to a observance. These alone religious amount to fifteen per cent and more, of all our possessions. A self-sustaining Christianity is a thing unknown. It has been supported by law for more than fifteen hundred years, and we are semi-slaves to its despotism to-day.

But the new combination will demand more power and strive to bind us with stronger fetters than the divided sectaries could secure. There will be efforts made for sumptuary laws, hitherto unobtainable, and laws against speaking or writing anything the priesthood may not sanction. If possible they will obtain an injunction against thoughts they do not dictate.

Let the reader's mind glance over the experience of his species in Scotland, England, Spain, and even in our own New England, when the religious power was dominant, and he will readily understand what our fate will be if the combination be successful.

It is not probable that renewed hostilities will be opened against Spiritualism. Pilate and Herod are too wise for that. They know it is a demonstrated fact and immune as the multiplication table. They will rather endorse it in small quantities at a time, expecting to secure absorption, and then they will insist they always believed it, and claim credit for its discovery. And why should they not make that claim? A Catholic bishop publicly stated in Chicago that the world were indebted to Catholicism for the discovery of America, because Columbus was a Catholic. It follows that the Methodists discovered Spiritualism, for the

By a cruel destiny! Oh, if people only knew What their neighbor's burdens are, Could they read the secret truly Of their sorrow and their care, Then would their charity be double;

But they don't, and there's the trouble Could they only leave their scorning, Their haughtiness and pride, As the earth-worm leaves its larva When it mounts the airy tide, And, on radiant wings disporting, Sips honey from each flower, Nor harms the purest chalice That opens to its power-Could they learn the love that's gentle Compassionate and true, That knows the rudest nature To chasten and subdue-

Could they leave their saintly seeming, When their heart is full of guile. And turn the noisgned arrow Of their malice to a smile. Oh, could they thus, how peaceful Would be the paths of life! How changed to words of sweetness Would be its sounds of strife!

Oh, if people only knew When they pass each other by, How much of truth and beauty Is hidden from their eye, n the forms they hardly notice Or notice but to spurn, How would their footsteps falter. Oh, if people only knew How deep this love and true, How strong to lift the fallen, And the haughty to subdue, Oh, how their faith would double! But they don't, and there's the trouble. But there'll come to every mortal A release from toll and care, An unveiling of the spirit

And a fairer garb to wear, We may stumble and grow weary Of the burdens we must bear, But we'll reach life's shining portal, We'll climb the golden stair eading up to joys immortal, "And we'll know each other there,

PSYCHIC EXPERIENCE

Interesting Narrative of a Blind Man

I have been listening this afternoon to reading by my wife from The Progressive Thinker. I am in the music business selling pianos, organs, etc., on the road, so that your paper affords me many pleasant hours, Sundays. The paper this week is particularly interesting. Dr. Sweringen, whose contributions I always enjoy, is none the less entertaining in this issue, and while it would not have been necessary to more thoroughly substantiate my belief in spirit return by such manifestations, I naturally have a longing-a hunger-for something real, a medium in whom one can place confidence. By reason of an accident I LOST MY EYES when about six years of age, and I may say, my life has been remarkable from the fact of my getting about with such little inconvenience to myself and others. I have driven my own horse to the piano wagon or buggy for several years, going over strange roads, into localities never traveled by me or my horse, and always with a feeling of se-

I ofttimes received impressions, and I soon learned to understand them. my desire was to turn to the right the impression seemed to be upon my right cheek, and vice versa, and many other impressions no less sensitive, but which I learned to understand, but could not here describe satisfactorily. I have driven into cities and towns, among vehicles of all kinds, always without accident, never losing sight of the fact that some UNSEEN HAND guided and protected me, ofttimes seeming to take control of my horse, leading it around dangerous places. Many of my friends have anticipated accidents for me, but they have not come and I do not fear them.

I did not know much about Spiritualism till my friend, Jacob Lintz, of Kenton, Ohio, to whom many people are indebted for free distribution of Spiritualistic literature, began to supply me with The Progressive Thinker, Banner of Light, and other valuable reading matter. Others insisted that I attend a seance, so some five years ago I attended my first private seance. I accompanied the medium to a dark upstairs room, and after closing the door. he sat down immediately in front of me with his knees touching mine. He then asked me if I wished to hold him. I did not. He then told me his control, whose name was "Tom," had a heavy, gruff voice, and that I should not be frightened when he arrived. I thought he placed his trumpet at my right hand. We conversed a minute or two, when a voice to my left, said in a loud tone. "How do you do?"

I started a little, whereupon the medium asked me if I was scared. I replied: "No; I was expecting it on my right." Time enough was taken for a man to walk around behind either of us, and "Tom "said, "Well, I'll get over here." I then told him I wanted to hold him. I placed two fingers of my left hand on his upper lip, and two of my right on his lower lip. I then told him I believed he was responsible for those sounds, and that if he was the true blue I sincerely hoped his spirit friends would vindicate him. We sat thus for an hour, but received not a sound. The medium said I was too positive. That may have been true, I have sat with him and other mediums. private and in circles since, never receiving any communication only that they were happy, and giving me the number of their sphere—this always in a faint whisper. When asking for their names the reply was always unintelligible. Permit me to mention one more private seance. This was with a lady medium in a dark room. She sat about three feet in front of me and about the same distance to my right. I sat with my back to the wall. Several persons purporting to be from the other side, came, one at a time, none of whom however could give me their names, only as she, the medium, and I guessed them out.

I then requested that a spirit should bring the trumpet and speak in my left ear. She did not know whether they would do that or not, but would try. In a few seconds the trumpet struck the ceiling: then a voice between a feminine and a masculine, trying to imitate an Indian, seemed to take possession of the trumpet, and it came very near my left ear. But just then a board in the floor a little in front of me and slightly to my left, creaked and I said: "But where are you, madam?" She said, as the sound of her voice passed a line in front of my face, descending from a standing to a sitting posture, and panting from fear of detection, "I am here."
This so enraged me that I tore away the blanket from over the transom and rushed out, disgusted, not with Spiritualism, but with the methods of certain ones who tried to represent it. Some time after this I began to diseern lights. When a long distance from home I wait till night to drive home Then the highways are less frequented and I do not have to be so alert, as it were. At first these lights annoved me, because I could not decide whether they were imaginary or real. But soon they began to appear in my bed-chamber, so brilliantly that imagination was out of the question. A few nights ago my room seemed to be flooded with light. This continued for several minutes; then I seemed to outline a form. This made me very nervous and I have not noticed anything since. Will some reader give me the true theory as to why I have never seen lights in seances, although I have attended dozens of them? Others say they have seen them in these seances, and I have about concluded the lights they see are artificial.

Frequently I dream of seeing things, being able to recognize persons and things, realizing at the same time my misfortune, and wondering how I see. Recently I dreamed of being in Philadelphia. I remember distinctly of go ing east on Race street to Tenth street, south on Tenth till I had crossed Spruce street, and between Spruce and Pine I looked and saw a man coming out of a building on the west side of the street, and recognized Dr. Levi Z. Zook, a gentleman with whom I was intimately acquainted years ago, and who was taking a course in the Jefferson Medical College, while I was attending Blind School at Twentieth and Race, that city, from '76 to '79. The strange part of this is, how I knew and recognized him when I remember absolutely nothing of his features. I also saw men's shirts hanging in the window and some other things which are too vague to be remembered.

I congratulate all those who have witnessed manifestations worthy of re-membrance, and while I do not have to have them to sustain me, I am patiently, hopefully awaiting for a trent of that kind. H. F. STEELY. Per Mrs. H. F. S. Big Springs, Ohio.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF "The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 469 pages and is lindsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the anthor.

THE QUESTION SETTLED is a cartiful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spirit

talism. No book of the century has made so many convert; to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, strangers to compare the Bible with modern phenomiasa and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adulptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its inoral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Bible, asture, history, reason and common sense, sind expressed clearly and forcibly. THE CONTRAST consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a portious storehouse of facts for those who wish Eadersed Spiritualism, or find arguments against the Essemptions of Orthodoxy.

OBSESSION.

The interesting Experiences of an in AMERICAN REDSKINS RIVAL ORIvestigator.

[Continued from No. 722.1 I suppose that many of those who read my first article will believe that I plunged into Spiritualism without thought or consideration, and in order that they may better understand me, I wish to say for twenty years prior to my investigation I had studied physiology, physiognomy, phrenology, hypnotism; anything pertaining to psychology or metaphysics had been my hobby

I had discovered back in the seventies that I had good hypnotic power, and demonstrated the truth of it a num-

I believed the Spiritualists, as a rule to be an honest but deluded people. I believed that all the phenomena they produced could be accounted for by the sciences. I had had many remarkable experiences in telepathy. I did not beeve-I knew that there was much in it, so when I began my investigation I did not think I could be deceived by any hypnotic influence or trick which any one might attempt to impose.

I admit that a thought like this had presented itself to me: As telepathy is an admitted fact by many, and if a thought-wave of the living can reach and impress a sensitive, what about the dead? Do they think? If so, do their thoughts produce vibrations, and is there a finer force in the occult underlying the grosser, whereby these vibrations could be conveyed to any receptive mind among the living? Does medium possess those extreme qualifications?

But as I had no evidence that such was the case, it passed as a thought only, yet it fitted me-to give credence, should anything occur in the seance room in this direction beyond what I considered the ordinary.

This was my mental bias when I attended the first trumpet seance given by Mr. Barnes, that I mentioned in my first article. I will now narrate what occurred at that seance. Soon after it opened I was greeted by a feminine voice which said: "I declare if there isn't Mr. Dailey." "Yes, I am Mr. Dailey, and I I said:

am glad that you have come. Now will you please tell me your name?" She said her name was Lotty Heston.

I said that I was sorry, but that I could not recognize her by that name. She said: "Oh 1 know you. I know you and you know me. Do you not remember that thing you had fixed up to put the logs on, and that one of the logs fell on you and crushed you I could not recall the circumstance and she seemed to be greatly chagrined at my stupidity, and left the trumpet.

I returned to my home and tried to recall the incident. I could not sleep, and about midnight it began to dawn on my mind that there had been a similar occurrence somewhere at some time. I now fell asleep, and on the following day my mind was clear on the subject. Sixteen years prior two other parties and myself purchased a tract of timber land. We employed a man to move a saw-mill on the premises, to cut the timber. The engineer's name was Heston. He had two little girls. At this mill my partners had built a scaffold on which to place the heavy timbers, the scaffold being the same height of a wagon, so that the teamsters could readily load and remove the same to the railroad, five miles distant, where I resided. I received and shipped the lumber at the railroad, while my partners looked after affairs at the mill; therefore I did not visit the mill often On one occasion, however, I had gone to the mill along with one of our teamsters to see how all were getting along and was assisting in loading the heavy timbers when my hand was caught between two of them and badly crushed. I sank down in a half-way faint with he intense noin two little girls were near by looking at me. My hand bled profusely and I supposed they were deeply impressed with the same. When the work was finished on this land, Mr. Heston moved to a house about one mile north of where I resided. I could remember that the death of a child occurred at or about the same time at this house. This had a tendency to make me believe the test I had received at the trumpet was genuine and also to push my investigation, which I did.

Fully one year had elapsed, and while walking along a street in Red Key, Ind., I met Mr. Heston. I made inquiry concerning his two daughters. He informed me that they were alive and well, had grown to womanhood, and that one of them was married.

We have now one of those intricate problems which is coming up in the seance-room continually, for which a number of solutions are offered by able men and women, both in and out of Spiritualism, but I with respectful deference reject them all. I shall offer nothing instead, at present, but will return to this branch of the subject (for it belongs to obsession) in due time.

I will say that if I had met Mr. Heston soon after the seance mentioned I would have now stood with thousands of others at the very threshold of knowledge, knowing not to enter in, believing that all this phenomena could be and was produced by the living; but I had gone too far before I met Mr. Heston. I had passed the meridian of ignorance in this respect, and was safe. We will now go on with the development. As the spirit continued to get control of me, my ability to get communications with the planchette continued to increase, and I observed that those communications were pretty equally divided, about one-half-truth and onehalf lies. I also discovered that there was a number of spirits trying to get control of me, and that my wife was taking a very prominent part in the struggle. I immediately gave her all the support I could by trying to will the others away, and give her control. This appeared to have the desired effect, and she seemed to gain control very fast. I recognized her presence the same as you would an individual by the walk or other peculiarities. When she controlled the planchette her very hand seemed to be within my own.

I wish to say that my wife was of a high moral nature, and very truthful. One day I asked her if she could tell me whether there was anything in the postoffice for me. She said there was a letter, and for me to go and get it. I went and there was nothing. I did chide her on my return, and said that when she did not know, she should say so Immediately I was influenced to go to the planchette and I received this message from my wife: "Herbert, I do the

ENTAL FAKIRS.

Remarkable Feats of Wizards of Prairies-Experts of Chippewas Particularly Skillful.

Redskin magic has been a subject of special investigation recently by the Bureau of Ethnology, which finds that among the American Indians there are wizards who can perform feats quite as wonderful as any of those attributed to the fakirs of the Orient, says a Washington letter to the New York Herald.

In fact, there are certain tribes, such as the Chippewa, which have developed the art of sorcery to a high point. Catholic missionaries and other witnesses testify to having seen century plants two or three feet high produced within a few minutes on bare western prairies where previously nothing grew. simply, as it seemed, by a few incanta tions and a small amount of hocus-

This feat, which bears a likeness to the famous mango tree trick of India, seems beyond explanation, the century plants grown in the spontaneous manner described being of considerable size and apparently a dozen years old. But it is perhaps surpassed by a marvel recounted to one of the government investigators by a Jesuit priest, who said that while he was among the Arapahoes and Cheyennes he saw two wizards fetch grass up out of the ground where there had been not a sprig of vegeta-tion. It was done within a few minutes, and there was a patch of it, green and growing. With his own eyes he saw it sprout and grow.

The wizards among the Indians are priests. Indeed, the primitive priest all over the world has always been a magician and juggler. Juggling tricks are the most important part of his stock in trade, impressing the untutored beholders with a belief in the supernat ural powers of the performer.

Wizards Known as "Dreamers."

Among the Chippewas there is a class of wizards known as "dreamers," who are supposed to be able to handle with impunity red hot stones or to bathe their hands without discomfort in boiling water. A magician of this type is a "dealer in fire," and at night he may sometimes be seen flying rapidly along in the shape of a ball of fire or a pair of flery sparks, like the eyes of some monstrous beast. The late W. J. Hoffman, of the Bureau of Ethnology, knew one of these jugglers who could take ripe red cherries from his mouth at any season of the year. He had a magic bag which would move on the ground as if it were alive, but Dr. Hoffman more than suspected that the sack contained a live rat or some small mammal.

One investigator on a certain occasion saw a Menomini wizard produce live snakes, as it appeared, from an empty bag. The bag was of red flannel, about twenty inches wide by thirty inches in depth, and the "mystery man" held it between his fingers by the two upper corners, so as to spread it out. Then he rolled it between his hands like a ball, to show that there was nothing inside. Again he took it by the upper corners, and holding it up, danced slowly. Presently two snake heads emerged from the top of the sack, gradually becoming more and more exposed, until their bodies protrued half a foot or so. From time to time the snakes withdrew themselves into the bag, coming out again and again retreating. When they had finally disappeared the performer rolled the sack up tightly and put it into his bosom. It seemed wonderful, but the trick was a simple one, the two snake heads (stuffed) being attached to a tape, the end of which were fastened to the uppercorner of the bag. When the wizard pulled the tape taut it caused the heads to lift themselves above the edges of the bag.

Less easily explained is a bit of offhand sorcery perpetrated once at the expense of Lewis Cass. He had gone to represent the government in a conference with the Indians at Mackinaw, and in the course of a ceremonial dance, which he witnessed, he noticed an old Ojibway woman who took an active part in the exercises He asked why this was, inasmuch as she seemed uninteresting, had nothing to say and did nothing except shake her snakeskin "medicine bag." Overhearing his remark, the old woman (who was known among her people as a powerful witch) became much offended, and without warning threw at Mr. Cass-so he himself told the story-her snakeskin bag, which transformed itself into a live ser pent and ran at the statesman. He promptly took to his heels, whereupon the witch picked up the snake, which again assumed the appearance of a dry skin bag. Juggling and Religion.

The Indian wizards pretend that they can perform their tricks only through the intervention of the tribal divinities: and this is where the juggling and religion comes together. Information as to future events is commonly obtained by special consultation with the divinities in the so-called "magic lodge," which is a cylindrical structure of birch bark, with a framework of small poles, just big enough to contain a man standing erect As soon as the wizard has entered the lodge begins waving violently, and there is a great rattling of bells and deers' hoofs which are fastened to the tops of the poles. Three voices are then heard in consultation-a loud one (for the Great Spirit), a faint one (for the small spirit) and the voice of the "mystery man." A famous wizard at White Earth, Minn., made a bet with one of the government investigators that the latter could not tie him with ropes so that he would not be able to get loose at once. With the help of the local Indian agent the man was tied up in elaborate fashion and put inside of a conical wigwam in an open space. Nobody was allowed to go near him.. Presently there was a great thumping noise and the wigwam began to sway back and forth. Two or three minutes later the magician called out, telling his captors to go to a house several hundred yards away and get the ropes. One of them went to the house and found the ropes, with all the complicated knots untied. Then the wigwam was opened and the wizard was found quietly smoking his pipe.

ARE THEY VIGILANT?

W. F. Jamieson Asks and Answers a Pertinent Question.

Says Brother Howe: "This is one of the fatal mistakes often made, by careful students of the occult. * * * they relax vigilance, and leave unguarded many conditions that admit of fraud."

I have been telling the Spiritualists the same thing for many years. This was Owen's "fatal" mistake; a splendid man driven to distraction. Mr. Howe says Owen did not have "absolutely fraud proof" conditions the one time he was there. Almost universally this is true of spiritual circles. Spiritualists are not vigilant.

To relax vigilance is dangerous. But what does Mr. Owen himself say concerning the forty sittings which he and four or five hundred others "witnessed"? I must defend Owen from Howe. Says R. D. Owen: "Of all this, and especially of the precise conditions under which these materializations were obtained, the public will be better able to judge."

Mr. Owen adds: "I stake whatever of reputation I may have acquired, after eighteen years' study of Spiritualism, as a dispassionate observer, upon the genuine character of these phenomena.

He said: "Four or five hundred" witnesses saw and heard "a spirit not of this world," and yet were deceived, every witness of them. I admit that one or two could be fooled easily enough, as has often happened; but when we have over four hundred who were as absolutely sure as Brother Sweringen, it is enough to make us doubt even that meteoric shower, and yet I am asked if I am perfectly sure of it!

Was there anything in the whole history of Spiritualism better attested than Owen's investigations of 'Katie King"? Here was an "eye witness," who says there were four or five hundred other 'eye witnesses" convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt, never "doubted for a moment," says Mr. Owen, those who heard and touched, that there stood a palpable breathing "spirit from another world" in that room in Philadelphia. It was a "physical impossibility," ably argued Owen, for that "living, thinking peing" to be a human still belonging to this world. Positive as he was then he afterwards admitted his mistake. He should ever be remembered by Spiritualists as that noble thing, an honest man, and by mankind generally held in ighest esteem. Brother Howe says, "I would like to know more about that," "I would like further evidence in this case." What I have quoted was written by Robert Dale Owen in Philadelphia, Nov. 2, 1874, published in the Banner of Light, Nov. 7.

I supposed, as Mr. Howe is an oldtime Spiritualist, that he was familiar with this entire history. It seems not. As I wish to render all the assistance possible to my spiritual brethren in their toilsome search for truth, I will inform them that an article written by Robert Dale Owen, as he himself says, with the "strictest care, containing a record of what passed during these sittings," was to appear in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly, 1875. As I understand that Brother Howe is writing a "History of Spiritualism," this ich material will be valuable. Mr. Owen, in following up his investigations subsequent to sending his report to the magazine, speaks of "unsatisfactory results," (written in Philadelphia, Dec. 6, only one month after his unqualified endorsement of the "Katie King" fraud) "suspicious circumstances," "direct attempt to deceive," he said. He withdrew the "assurances which I have heretofore given of the genuine character" of the Holmes' manifestations. Let me say, in behalf of level-headed Spiritualists, that there were a number in Philadelphia who denounced the "manifestations" as the daries being the limitations we our "result of imposture." Mr. Owen (be selves set upon our minds for receiving. fore he lost "confidence" in their "gen-uine character") wrote and published, I am sorry to know that certain Spiritualists, who have not attended a single one of the sittings for materializa-tion * * * assume to decide, in advance of personal observation, that these manifestations are the result of imposture." Seven years before Owen's sad experience with Jennie Ferris Holmes I gave the Spiritualists of America fair warning. I completely exposed her in Chicago; but in those days of rapturous 'faith," Spiritualists generally sympathized with her and condemned me.

Owen was so sure that he could not be mistaken, as a witness for materialization, that he staked his reputation. He admitted that his character as a 'shrewd investigator" should suffer is "natural and just." This was humiliating to a high-spirited gentleman, but he set an example of manhood that should be fearlessly followed. I despise that arrant cowardice which dare not pro-claim a change of conviction when the mind perceives its own error.

Brother Howe says he "is not quite sure that he was deceived in the last part." He has the evidence that he stated "there was nothing in this case that shook his confidence in the facts upon which he had built."

I do not know that any one claimed that he gave up Spiritualism on account of the Holmes' materializations was a Spiritualist before he saw them, and he unquestionably remained a Spiritualist to the last. Possibly Brother Howe refers to such expressions by Mr. Owen, as that he thought "others had seen hundreds of spirits materialize." In my own experience, this is what I thought for years, and freely expressed after traveling from that Mecca of materialization, Moravia, N. Y., to Memphis, Mo. When I failed to get a clear case of a materialized spirit I said it cannot be that all who have "witnessed" were mistaken. We then, are forced to this conclusion, that because a man is positive in his opinions is no proof that he is right. Brother Howe is as positive as Dr. Sweringen, who said in his first letter: "Many of my contemporaries have likewise witnessed materializations the genuineness of which there is no possible room to doubt."

I have attended many "materializing eances" and never saw one which did not leave plenty of room for doubt. That is their weakness. I never saw one where there was no "possibility of deception;" never saw one where Spiritualists did not, as Brother Howe frankly confesses, "relax vigilance, and leave unguarded many conditions that admit of fraud." The bountiful harvest of fraud proves it.

JOG ON, SPIRITUALISTS.

In the Sacred Name of Truth, Jog On.

To the Editor:-I notice, in your is sue of September 26, a few complimentary words from the pen of our worthy sister, Miss Balfour, of Sturgls, Mich. Words undoubtedly prompted by a spirit of gratitude for benefit received from the angel world through my mediumship. Such notices give me pleasure, not so much for any credit which might reflect upon myself individually, more because I feel that the divine teachings of those untiring and selfish laborers for humanity, from the unseen side of life, are understood and sometimes appreciated in their endeavors to uplift humanity.

The inhabitants of earth are ever hungering for sympathy and knowledge. "The harvest is ripe, but the reapers are few." I am often brought to a realization of the truthfulness of the saying of one of old when he said, "Many are called, but few are chosen." The iconoclastic period of Spiritualism is or should be closed and an organic constructive work based upon truth and altruism take its place. During the two years that I held the presidency of the Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., I endeavored to have the truth, as far as possible, given from our rostrum by all progressive and broadminded souls, irrespective of labels or isms; for Spiritualism, as I understand it, is an all-embracing philosophy of all that appertains to the unfoldment of the individual, and our motto should be: "Accept the truth wherever found, on Christian or on heathen ground." I am sorry to say, however, that I discovered that bigotry was not all outside the ranks of Spiritualism, but that many socalled Spiritualists are as nonprogressive and need liberalizing fully as much as their orthodox neighbors, not seeming to appreciate the fact that "those who are for us are not against us," and that truth is the pearl of great price to be sought. Mr. Evelyn Arthur See, then of Kalamazoo, Mich., now of Chicago, filled our rostrum for several Sundays. He came representative of the liberal Christian Scientists of Kalamazoo. Mr. See is an erudite scholar and logical reasoner and his lectures upon the psychic powers of man and their practical application in the present life were rare treats and highly appreciated by the progressive minds both inside and outside the ranks of Spiritualism, and could only be productive of good wherever accepted. Many religious cults are springing into existence under various heads as "Science of Being," "Practical Christianity," and many others all containing and giving to the world truths, and teaching their practical application in life, and I say God-speed to all these noble workers by whatever name, the world needs you; but the question still remains shall we as Spiritualists with eternal progression as one of the fundamental principles upon which is based our philosophy, fossilize in our opinions and refuse these grand truths a place in our philosophy and consequently continue to be absorbed by these various cults, or shall we open our eyes to the truth and absorb these various cults into our philosophy, forming us into one grand liberal progressive brotherhood, with altruism our object? I remember at an earlier day an amusing and instructive lecture given by that able and facetious speaker, Mr. O. P. Kellogg, of Ohio, the title of which was "Jog On," and homely might seem the subject, through mental manipulation of his talented and versatile mind, golden grains of truth were threshed from the theme for practical application in life, warning Spiritualists not to become egotists and fossils, but to remember that truth was boundless and universal, the only boun-I do not know whether he is still active in our ranks, or whether now resting from his labors, but while thanking him for his good work done in the past, I have in most of the societies to which my attention has been directed, felt the need of an O. P. Kellogg to preach "Jog on," Spiritualists, in the name of truth, "jog on." Perhaps my article is already too long, but I wish to announce ere clos-ing that I am about to resume my work in the cause, both lecturing and holding circles, and trust that during my tour I shall meet many old and make many new friends, and that through our interchange of thought we shall all learn better how to jog on up the steep of progression. Yours for the truth Proposed Amendments to the Constitution.

To the Editor:-Kindly print the following completed list of amendments to be presented at the N. S. A. convention in Washington, October 20-23. (Unfinished business) Cons. Art. 10. Change the word "Thirty" on fifth line

Amendment: That a quorum for the transaction of business shall consist of the majority vote of duly accredited delegates. Amendment proposed by vote of the Ohio State Spiritualists Association: Resolved, That the officers of the National Spiritualists Association shall consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, who shall be trustees and with five others, constitute a board of nine trustees who shall have charge of the business affairs of the Association and shall be chosen by written or printed ballot by the duly accredited delegates present at the regular annual convention. Beginning with the convention of 1903, the officers of the association shall be chosen in the following order, and for the terms here-inafter specified—Two trustees for four years, two trustees for three years, secretary and one trustee for two years; president, vice-president and treasurer for one year. The president will elected annually in company with the two other officers named in this article. It may be well to state here, that notwithstanding a rumor to the contrary, the Regent Hotel of Washington is not damaged by fire, and it will be in readiness, with fine accommodations for all who visit the convention, as hitherto At the last convention, a vote was passed for the secretary to publish in the papers an outline of work to come before the succeeding convention; but this is impossible, as we have no way Doten. In this volume, this peerless of knowing what will come up as new poet of Spiritualism may be read in her amendments proposed, and other routine business, our people already know of. With fraternal greetings to all, MARY T. LONGLEY.

HUMAN RIGHTS.

The Right to Guard Against the Liquor Traffic.

In the exercise of individual rights it s a very difficult matter for this comolex and closely related human family o avoid trespassing upon the rights of others. What one class of people leems rights from their standpoint, from another point of view appear more like wrongs.

We have become so accustomed to seeing the right of might prevail, that the moral rights of individuals are ofttimes everlooked. Like "Women's Rights" they have never been respected. A man undoubtedly has a right to addle his own brain with liquor if he knows how to stop before he becomes a public or a private nuisance; yet it is doubtful if he has the moral right to induce others to do so, knowing the possible results—and who does not? The writer who questioned the editor's assertion, "The liquor traffic is the worst business that ever cursed the world," did not mention its competitors in evil doing. It is probably safe to say, however, that if there is a worse business the saloon is the father of it, and liquor keeps it alive.

The business of the liquor dealer in plain words is the making of drunkards. Men who "temperately" or occasionally disorder their senses are not of much use to him. In justification of the traffic the Constitution has been quoted, showing its commercial right to exist; and yet the ordinary drunkard knows little or nothing of "Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." His wretched existence is not life, nor is it liberty to be the slave of intoxicants that beckon on every hand. And who can say that he ever attains happiness or alows his family to do so? Obstacles and temptations are indeed reat developers of character unless hey are so overwhelming that thou sands go down in the struggle where one s benefited. The saloon never made a duxley nor a Herbert Spencer, but it has un-made without number, those who might otherwise have been useful citizens. It is hard to believe that God puts men in the midst of saloons, or saloons in the midst of men, for the purpose of mental development. The lquor traffic is a man-made affair, created and fostered by wine-bibbers, and its destructive forces are in direct opposition to all who are trying to co-operate with God in the great work of evolution. So long as they are sanctioned there is little that can be done save to gather up the wrecks into jails and hospitals and various other public instituions as heretofore.

The law of the "survival of the fit test" as observed by Darwin, is a marvelously simple and effective way of advancing the lower orders of creation, yet in this day and generation it is too crude and primitive to apply to the human race. The newer method of improving the condition of the unfit seems more humane-more divine

All along the lines of social progress we hear of the value of environment, education and conditions. No one understands the power of these as does the liquor dealer. Night and day he welcomes the weak and uncared for who are willing to learn the ways of iniquity and to pay the price. There is a magnetic attraction about a saloon which draws some men in spite of the entreaties of family and friends and their own better selves.

Friendly admonition is of little avail with an inherited taste for liquor and a saloon around the corner. When a boy with such a heredity and such an environment takes his first lesson, it needs no prophetic eye to foresee that he is on his way to a drunkard's grave -no brotherly advice can stay his steps. But it is usually a cruelly slow process and he will not go until he has nken his m the life of his wife. Not until he has transmitted to his children the fatal tendency to take the same downward

The only valid excuse for men who engage in the sale of liquor seems to be ignorance, and still the most ignorant must know that they are catering to a depraved appetite which lowers moral nature and draws many through their open doors to disappear in the quicksands of the "underworld."

As Ingersoll has said, "Alcohol to a certain degree demoralizes those who make it, those who sell it and those who drink it." And so the liquor dealer is often dragged down with his victims. The average saloonkeeper cannot long witness the degradation constantly going on about him without being infected by its baleful influence; and his own brain becoming sodder with liquor, he is soon incapable of distinguishing right from wrong.

l, too, am a believer in individual rights. I believe that we have a right to protect our sons and daughters from these contaminating surroundings, and to demand for them and for ourselves a clean environment.

Of late years people are waking up to the necessity of guarding against disease germs of various kinds. When will they turn their attention to the liquor microbe? When will they realize that the saoon is a dangerous parasite preying upon life, liberty and happiness' SUSANNA DRAKE BISHOP. La Habra, Cal.

A Mistaken Minister.

After the disgraceful embroglio into which the missionaries in China in volved the "Powers" of Western civilization, it would seem that a lesson of humility should have been taught and heeded. Not so. Wherever the missionary goes, he carries disturbance and warfare. The complications which are now disturbing Bulgaria and Macedonia, are the direct results of the machinations of missionaries, who by inciting race hatred and fanaticism, have produced a scene of horror rarely recorded in history, and brought the nations to the verge of a war which if declared will be of the most frightful, because implacable character

And now preachers over all the land the eleventh and twelfth centuries, not for the purpose of wresting the holy sepulchre from the hands of the Mohammedan, but to drive the Mohammedan from Europe. The central nower of the Mohammedan religion is now vested in the Sultan at Constantinople. Strange as it may appear, the birthplace, and all historic places connected with the earth life of the Christian's God and Savior is in the hands of an antagonistic religion. The Turk rules over all the country made memorable by the apostles of the Christian faith. The Rev. Dr. Carstensen, rector of thought of the clergy in a late sermon.

He vehemently declared that the American government was in duty bound to take steps to bring the murder of Christians to an end in the Turkish dominions.

There is no doubt about the horrible deeds that have been perpetrated by the Turks, and it also appears that the Christians have when opportunity offered, been equally cruel and merciless. But why is the American government in duty bound to interfere? As a great moral power, it may protest in the name of humanity, against barbarism in any country, but there its offices end. cannot set itself up as the regulator of the nations, unless it has the power, and intention of whipping them

If the reverend gentleman and his confreres would stop a moment to think, it might occur to them that they were forcing this country into an awk-ward position. Suppose the United States sent the Sultan this ultimatum. and he should reply that the United States had better mind its own business; look after its lynchings, its labor riots, its countless saloons and slums, unknown in Mohammedan countriesand go right on with the warfare; there would come the alternative of a shamefaced acknowledgment of impotent imbecility, or declaration of war. Only by force of arms could the Turkish army of invasion be arrested. The Knights Templar are to be called on, 500,000 strong, to redeem the vow reiterated for "eight hundred" years and drive the Turk out of Europe. Can this government successfully take up war? With the assistance of 200. 000 Knights Templar can it do it? Do these clergymen appreciate the Quixotic character of the scheme they advocate? The cost of such a war would be fabulous, and the result would be disastrous to American reputation. An American army if landed on Turkish territory, would be whipped back to its ships, if anything to retreat was left of It is such a warfare the reverend doctor Episcopal, advises and urges; a warfare which would cost the lives of untold thousands, bring the nation to beggary and financial ruin, and rivet more galling chains on the rebellious must necessarily remain so, save as gained from the astronomer, the geologist, and the archaeologist. The latter science is making revelations which are carrying us back many thousands of years before letters were invented.

Egypt and the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris, with their ruins of long lost and forgotten cities once teeming with a dense population, are now our sources of knowledge in the Orient: while Central and South America, as many of the isles of the sea, are yielding treasures which carry us back to ages long anterior to creation, if Bible chronology is taken for authority.

We find in the New York Telegram an account of valuable Egyptian relics. gathered by that prince of archaeologists, Emil Brugsch Bey, and lately added to the Leland Stanford Museum. said to be the most interesting and valuable group of antiques in America. These relics formerly constituted the private collection of the collector, lately retired from the curatorship of the famous Gizeh Museum. Brugsch Bey spent a lifetime in exploring among the buried cities of the Nile, and in retiring to private life sold to Mrs. Stanford the present consignment.

The collection consists of about 350 pieces, arranged in six large cases, and includes some of the most remarkable archaeological remains ever taken from the Egyptian field. There are specimens of the handicraft that shows by its finish and delicacy of workmanship that even in that remote period civilization had long ceased to be young. There are stone images of men and gods, some wonderfully wrought in detail. There are toys with which the little brownskinned Egyptians amused themselves 5,000 years before Christ, miniature wooden boats, carved, painted and manned by sailor figures, just as the little ship that delights the little twentieth century lad.

There are implements and articles of the toilet from which some of our modern vain conceits might easily be traced; small stone mortars, for instance, in which pigments were prepared for blackening the eyebrows and heightening the complexion; metal mirrors, in which young Egyptian girls gazed upon their own beauty; beads of carnelian and of the precious lapis lazuli, silver bracelets of the most delicate structure and wonderful rings of soft, pliant gold that almost crush in the hand.

Then there are many household utensils and warlike weapons, amulets, baster, marble, stone, silver and bronze, are preaching a crusade, like those of all making up an array that is like a momentary kaleidoscopic glimpse back through Roman culture and Greek art to the very threshold of civilization, where that culture and art were taking first shape; back to the time when great cities stretched along the Nile, when the ancient Egyptian empire had just begun, and Menes, the first king, yet

ived fresh in the memory of his people. Doubtless the most historically important piece in the entire collection is a small, rude clay model of a dwelling, such as was built during the twelfth dy nasty, about 3000 B. C. It shows a cubical two-storied house with exterior stone steps leading to an upper chamber, in which a human figure reclines upon a mat. In front of the building is

Three large canopic vases of alabaster are especially fine. They are crowned by carved lids representing human heads and were used by the Egyptians to contain the viscera from bodies that were to be embalmed. These were put in the tomb with the mummy. There are also several mummy masks painted and decorated in brilliant designs, with colors that all the ages since have scarcely dimmed.

One entire case is filled with statuettes and small human figures, some made of red unburnished terra cotta, others of hard enameled porcelain, colored in light green nale blue vellow and brown and bearing hieroglyphics. They are funeral figures and buried with the dead. The inscriptions upon them correspond to the modern tombstone inscriptions. One of them reads, "In the name of Psametic, born by Amenixites," Psametic being name of the king of the twenty-sixth dynasty.

There is a necklace in the collection taken from the mummy of a daughter of the great Pharaoh. One of the rarest specimens is a clay stele, or writing tab-let, covered with hieroglyphics which represent King Amosis, of the twentysixth dynasty, making an offering to s

An Angel of the Lord.

As illustrating the result of accepting and obeying the voice of an "angel"so-called, without using one's reason and careful judgment upon the teachings of the voice, the following item of news may serve to point a moral:

"Pomona, Cal., Sept. 20.—After a fast begun Aug. 5 and lasting forty-five days, during which he suffered agony that nearly drove him insane, Frank Rich ards fell into a swoon to-day and died within an hour. He was warned a few days ago that a longer continuation of his abstinence from food would likely end in his death, but he declared that the Lord was with him and would not let him die in any event.

"Richards was 55 years of age. About Aug. 1 he announced that he had a vision and that an angel of the Lord had told him that he could not have salvation unless he purged himself of food for at least sixty-seven days."

There is a disposition on the part of many mediums, and others also, to yield implicit credence and obedience to "the spirit"-without exercising their own judgment upon the reasonableness of a spirit's dictates. They yield their reason and judgment to the control of "the spirits," not knowing who or what sort of characters "the spirits" are. Of the same sort of persons was this man, evidently of some Christian persuasion, to whom an "angel of the Lord" appeared in a vision, and virtually commanded him to starve himself to death, to gain "salvation." Spiritualists and mediums, as well as Christians, should appreciate the necessity of using their best reason and mortal-nor the one more than the other. Even one who comes in the guise of "an angel of the Lord" may be a very unsafe adviser.

Kahunas and Christian Science.

It is interesting as well as instructive to take note of the various religious cults that spring up and flourish wherover congenial soil may be found in existing mental conditions. In this respect it may be mentioned that, according to a special press correspondence from Honolulu, Christian Science is the new cult of the Hawaiian kahuna. So, at least, says the only kahuna now in captivity, who charges also that Rev. J. Kekipi, the head of the native branch of the Christian Science church, is the head kahuna or sorcerer of them all. There are 2,000 members of this church and every one of them is said to be a kahuna and to have the power to cure by prayer.

There is also a Christian Science church here among the whites and they do not recognize the native branch The natives originally belonged to the white organization, but finally branched out for themselves. So widespread has become the practice among the natives of attempting to cure by prayer that methods are being discussed to put a stop to it. It is said here that the natives take the Bible too literally; they do not understand its mysteries and consequently their beliefs are leading them to refuse medical assistance and depend entirely upon prayer.

This is a comparatively new craze among the natives, for their old kahunas had methods entirely their own, and, though they claimed to be able to pray a person to death, they never used the same means in their cure and incantations. There were comparatively few of these kahunas, while the new religion teaches that anyone can become a kahuna who takes the trouble to join the church and learn how to pray. Then again the old kahunas were very secretive in their methods, while the new witch doctors are perfectly willing to tell all they know.

Makaio, a native, who was brought to Oahu prison Saturday to serve a term of two years for manslaughter, is the man who makes these revelations. He was perfectly willing to tell just how he perfected his cure. Though there have been many arrests made for violation of the kahuna laws, Makalo is the first man who actually was brought to serving a term in prison for his crime. And shrines, vases, bowls, etc., made of he was not convicted under the kahuna baked earth; enameled porcelain, aladegree.

He is the witch doctor who sought to bring a man back to good health by beating him over the head with a heavy edition of the Bible. Moses Hoakimoa, an old native residing in Puna, on the island of Hawaii, was taken suddenly ill and the government physician was called in. His medicines did not appear to have the desired effect and the man's wife then called in the kahuna, Makaio.

who prescribed liberal doses of prayer. This had no effect and then, according to the man's widow, he ordered her to beat the patient over the head with the Bible. The patient died, the kahuna was arrested and found guilty of manslaughter by a jury, which recommended mercy. Judge Little sentenced Christ Protestant Episcopal Church of a courtyard with high walls of terra the man to prison for a term of two years and told him that he might just as well practice medicine with a shotgun as with a Bible. The prisoner told the judge that he differed with him as

> This kahuna is not at all like those pictured in the popular belief. In the first place, he is neither old nor grizzled.. He is only 24 years of age and says he has been in the kahuna business for six years, or since he was 18. The man looks to have the ordinary native intelligence, though his eyes are bloodshot. He does not look insane.

> 'Yes. I am in the kahuna business. 1 cure the sick by prayer," said the kahuna at the Oahu prison yesterday. "I did not kill this man; his wife did it. I did not tell her to beat him over the head with the Bible: I made rules which she did not obey. I told her not to drink, not to gamble and not to go with other men. Then her husband would be saved. What I told her was to place the Bible upon the spot where her husband was sick. She was to put it on his breast, but not to hit him with it.

> "I learned kahunaism from Rev. Mr Kekipi of the Christian Science church in Honolulu. That was when I was 18 years old. I am a brother in the church and I learned to cure with the Bible. Yes, I have cured many, more than fifty, only by praying. They had all kinds of diseases and hurts.

> "I can cure anything by the Bible. pray with the Bible, putting my hands on it and then telling the sick to keep the rules. They must put the Bible on the place that is sore and say: 'Your word is of fire, hammer and sword.'

"I charged nothing for curing people I worked for the haoles and lived that way. Rev. Mr. Kekipi made me a kahuna by reading the Bible and praying I can make kahunas, too; everyone that elongs to the church is one; there are 2,000 altogether. No, I never prayed anyone to death. I always prayed to make them live. If you pray and be lieve in God you are a kahuna—it is by swearing to God and showing people how to pray that I teach others to become kahunas. If I die praying with the Bible it will be all right; if I stay in prison it will be all right. Praying to God on the Bible is better than any thing else and it cannot be wrong if I Giving up a luxurious home, where she had every comfort, Miss Emma Goddard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Goddard, 2719 Prairie avenue, is living in the University of Chicago settlement,

In marked contrast to the settlement quarters, with its odors and insanitary conditions, is the home of the Goddards, where the young woman was "visiting," as she expressed it, last night.

"the yards," but the carriages which rolled over the asphalt of "Millionaires" Row" could scarcely be heard as Miss Goddard was telling of what she says will be her life work.

Out at the settlement there was the noise of a tinpanny piano, the song of a man who was celebrating Saturday night in a saloon and the cries of chilfrom the Goddard home there came the gentle voice of a woman and the faint melody of a harp.

Yet Miss Goddard says she is giving up nothing—that she is the gainer by her decision. Great Privilege to Aid Poor.

"It is a great privilege, I think, to be llowed to take up this work," said she. What may be a temporary discomfort is forgotten in the smile of a mother for whom you've done some little act. It is a great artist, but think how much more you have done if you have saved a boy from some crime.

As Miss Goddard talks she becomes animated. Her merry, infectious laugh punctuates her sentences frequently The moment she begins to speak you gers, are at your ease. She is what is called trary. in the slang of the day, "a good mixer."
It is plain she will be a valuable aid in the settlement work. Already she is planning far ahead into the winter Clubs are to be organized, entertainments arranged, and now, with the opening of the schools, she is looking out for the children whose parents have not fitted them with suitable clothing. Helps People to Live Right.

"Yes," said Miss Goddard, her laugh ter rippling again, "I am a truant offi-cer, sanitary inspector and a score of things beside. You see these people out there are ignorant of many of the laws which were made especially for their protection. If a woman is sold poor milk, or bad meat, she doesn't know there is any way to punish the dealer.

"But once we have won their friendship they tell these troubles to us. We report them to the city officials, and the dealer is made to pay the consequences. They seldom offend more than once after they learn we are watching them, for we can close their shops.

"Then there are babies to look after thousands of them. A little one is taken sick, but the mother thinks the illness will amount to nothing and does not send for a physician. Often she cannot afford a doctor. But we provide one and perhaps save a life.
"Don't you think that's worth working for? It think it is far more interesting than making a round of calls, of recep-tions and afternoon teas. I only wish that we could make more young women understand it.

"My mother thinks this notoriety is awful. She's a great deal more worried about what the newspapers will say about me than about any danger from infectious diseases. Oh, yes, you are mother," she repeated as Mr. Goddard tried to deny it.

sought, day or night, one of us always will be ready to act." "But don't you find the change from this neighborhood to that of the settlement distasteful?"

"No, indeed!" laughed Miss Goddard. Why, we're just as cozy as the traditional bug in the rug." "Yet after associating with-

An Appeal to the Spiritualists of the United States.

In most of the large cities of the United States there are certain local ordinances imposing a license tax on the practice of mediumship. As Spiritualists we consider such ordinances unjust, illegal and in direct violation of the religious right and privilege guaranteed to us by and under the Constitution of the United States.

On the 14th day of June, 1903, I entered upon my duties as pastor of the Seattle Spiritual Association, of Seattle, Wash., and in connection therewith my parlors, 49 Vendome Hotel. On the 25th day of August, 1903, I was served service of the warrant of arrest and am issue to the supreme court of the state in a test case of the legality of the Seattle ordinance licensing mediums and in defense of my religious rights and privileges; and that I would be backed in my stand by all true and loyal Spiritualists of the state of Washington, of the United States and of the National Association if necessary.

DEATH A FRIEND.

Dr. T. Wilkins' Poem on "A Friend,"

It is one of the tests of good authorship that it contributes to suggestion. Dr. Wilkins' gem of a poem, in No. 721 of The Progressive Thinker, suggests another thought than that which is ex-

The "Friend," in the poem, is Death. The thought suggested is that so few die a natural death. Hardly more than one in a thousand is natural. To pass over by disease is unnatural. The natural demise is to go out as healthy as we came in. Even the graduated doctors have their souls so steeped in the false, through ages of fanciful tradition, that they tell us some measure of disease is a necessary accompaniment of the final act in the great drama.

The cause of so erroneous a view is not far to seek. All the various systems of human endeavor have been built on a substrata of speculation. Theology, philosophy, art and literature have had speculation as their source.

And the noble struggle has continued. Speculation is the stepping-stone to experiment. It is the crude path that leads to the royal highway. It invites closer observation. With the untrained mind it is the easier process. The child is aglow with imagination, a most useful faculty, yet untrained. Reason comes later. It is born of maturity. Science is thereby introduced. From this the acme of wisdom emerges. not science progressed so far, the foothold of modern Spiritualism would have been an impossibility. This is demonstrated by the many failures of Spiritualism in the past.

Mythology has recounted a Golden Age in the remote past. There is no substantial proof of any such age. It is far more probable that the Golden Age is ahead of us. Until man lives and dies in perfect health it would be folly to claim a Golden Age.

It is universally admitted that death is as natural as birth. Why, then, should man be tortured with one more than the other? Under past conditions death has been smothered with fear, dread and anguish. Clearly do reason science and Spiritualism point to an absence of correct knowledge. It is every way easier and pleasanter to live rightly than wrongly. Science and Spiritualism, walking arm in arm, with the strength they have at last attained, promise the first Golden Age. And the speed of its coming will not be so slow. We advance more now in a year than the past did in a century.

Nature is the all in all.. This could not be learned from speculation. Comparatively speculation is play and science is work. Theosophy is attractive to so many, from being so easy, affording so much play for the child imagination, resultant from the ingredient of so large a degree of speculation. Spiritualism has demonstrated the falsity of the supernatural. Science had aiready partly done so.. Science has become popular. With Spiritualism its popularity is but a question of a little more time. No other movement so great ever grew so rapidly, due largely to the spread of science. Both teach the truth of nature. Both make this the fundamental study. Both proceed with care and caution. is first with each. The correct knowledge of mental law is favored by each.

Life is paramount. Speculation said, "seek ye first the kingdom of heaven." Science and Spiritualism say, "seek ye first the law that sustains heaven." With this knowledge, heaven will come to us. Then life will be rose-scented, throbing with the vital principle, exultant in solid happiness, and all discord will be changed into melody. Under past conditions the wonder is they did so well. In the Golden Age to come sickness will be a forgotten quantity. Death will be like the rising of the sun. Fear and anxiety will be by gone dark bubbles. Then life will be a

Socrates said: "That, Confucius, is also my great puzzle. I am peculiarly anxious to know whether I am, as the people say, a wise man, for I really do not know. I only know that also looking under and questioning things, coveting wisdom, the rest are fools, and their judgment not worth a bit of copper. But my opinion is that those who adopt Buddha's ideas will end in conceit and hypocrisy. When they think they have given up all things, then will they be most completely slaves to notions, and whims, and beliefs, and feelings; and that, you know, Confucius, is worse than to be a sensualist. The sensualist lives like a beast, and is happy in his way; but the self-deceived are happy only in a lie. The world is full of devotees who give up its affairs, yet they pray and look for another world. I do not see that they differ from the rest of us. I pray, also, but even as I would throw a crust to that hungry dog here. For I think the gods may be hungry for a little attention, and what I have to spare I give them, also a cock or some trifling gift. But my opinion is, a man is saved or made better by nothing of this sort, and that he is made better by not anything else but things. I would question the trees, and the stones, and customs and laws, and all sorts of men, hoping to find out | Then I went down to the brooklet, all my troubles there to something to a certainty. Then I hold that a man, knowing something will never be content without knowing more, and that sets him on the road to be, after a while, master of the universe. Then, becoming master of truth, he is no longer slave and so he is free. Now, this, O Buddha! and O Confuclus! seems to me clear, that to know, and that alone, will save a man."

Confucius, with the elegance of an orator and a man of the world, said: "Now, having heard the views of both my wise masters, gracious lords of wisdom, I nevertheress differ from you both. In my opinion salvation is neither by praying and meditating, nor by knowing, but by doing. Do not ask me what mystery have you solved, but what have you And the daisies and the clover winked and nodded free and accomplished. One may grow a cup of rice before he can pray one grain of it into his bowl. My ideal is the nation where all men do their duty, from the prince to the humblest of the poor. Nature is our mother; all we have to do is to find her bosom, and drink the milk she furnishes. Where praying abounds, idleness and poverty abound. Whatever men may say in their prayers, they practically assert that the salvation of society depends on the school. Yet to-day the theory which is becoming supreme is that of work. Curiously, Confucius is coming to the front. The world is to be saved by honest deeds, by justice and industry. Shall we pray for more? Yes, most certainly. Shall we give up study? We shall only study the more. But our praying will become an uplook and an onlook, of those who trust in the victory of right doing; Light of Life! O Life of My Soul! Illumine me! ABRAHAM LINGOLN.

Good evening, my kind friends. This little sensitive has just sung for me one of my favorite hymns of my past life on earth. This is a great joy for me to communicate through your sensitive, receptive brain, so well equipped by the blessed munificence of Nature's divine gift, to thrill, and to respond quickly to our slightest spirit whisper. For some time have I been watching and waiting with eagerness, this favorable opportunity to control Your recent development, my dear little lady, is well known, and joyfully hailed, among the residents of the higher, progressive spheres, as each one of the good spirits who have lately visited you, have reported their success in words of appreciative commendation, of the delightful ease with which they control. Fear not, my little sensitive child of nature and music, you are soon to emerge from the dismal depths, into the serene heights of cloudless splendor, and live once more in your rightful sphere. This obscurity in which your gentle spirit has been so long buried, has added a greater brightness to the diamond nature you possess, which will in time, scintillate and sparkle more brilliantly than ever. Rest assured that the divine power is sending you constantly angelic influences to guide and protect you o'er the rugged path of life, and will bring you eventually to a condition of perfect peace, when you will finish your life-work, nobly and grandly, before you are called to these higher spheres above. Now, my dear lady, I am very thankful for this privilege given me by the noble spirit of your loved one, Mr. Porter, who escorted me to-night to this seance-room.

Like him, I accepted the higher truths of this spiritual philosophy long before I left the earth plane, and now hand in hand with him, and many other noble, advanced souls, I am carnestly working for a speedier promulgation of these grand truths, over the whole world.

I come to-night, to this quiet seance-room, replete with peace and love, with an earnest desire to voice a message to all humanity. So, like my predecessors who have visited you lately, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Bishop Brooks, and others, I choose a theme which is vitally interesting to my whole nature, and enlarge upon the many points and virtues it may contain, hoping its perusal may throw some light. and assist in the opening of the spiritual vision of those who may read my words. With many hearty thanks, and my spirit blessings to you, ladies, for this kindness. I now close my chat with you, and commence my discourse, which is

THE POTENTIAL FORCES OF SPIRIT POWER.

To my Friends of Earth, also to the General Public:-

This open door between the two worlds, this shining bridge of light, o'er which I pass, this wonderful connecting link between the seen and the unseen, my spirit gladly recognizes, and accepts this chance of communication with my many earth friends, and humanity in general. As I pause for a moment upon the threshold of this open door to this quiet, peaceful seance-room, I sense keenly the magnetic and electric vibrations of the atmosphere enclosed therein, and feel a responsive echo to my heart thrills, and am inspired with a great desire to give to the world some portion of a wonderful truth. The theme for my spirit message is now one of my most interesting studies in my busy home in the spirit land. The "Potential Forces," as I now perceive them, are constantly at work, in the rapid development of the powerful spirit forces of the universe. In more simple language, for the comprehension of the unobserving, and the cruder, undeveloped type of man, I will reiterate this truth in these plain, matter-of-fact terms, that the power of spirits to control and guide the affairs of earth, is a potential fact in nature, and a divine law, which only those whose spiritual vision is opened, can witness its daily demonstration. Some But, instead of your orthodox God of the Bible, instead of your God of hate and vengeance, who dooms to eternal punishment so many of His loving children, I have thankfully discovered a God-like Center or Source of all Being from which radiates all the higher virtues of love, truth, mercy and justice, whose powerful thought waves of love extend everywhere, permeate everything, and in the spiritual education of many ripened souls in the Universe, chooses many loving angels to send to the world as messengers of light. and instruct the higher minds of earth in wisdom and spiritual knowledge. For many years upon the earth plane I was deeply interested in the phenomena of this modern spiritual philosophy, and firmly believed in its higher truths. I often felt the powerful influences of spirit friends, and many times, through some worthy medium, did I listen closely to the spirit inspiration received, and tried to obey the advice given. Had I not so believed, I would never have had the courage to emancipate the downtrodden black race of the South. For that courageous act have I here received a heavenly reward, commensurate in proportion to the good it accomplished. Glad as I was then for the power given me to throw off the shackles from so many suffering souls of humanity, still more glad and eager am I now, at this period of my existence in my ripened life in the spirit spheres, to help throw off the shackles from so many on the earth plane, who to-day are blinded by the creedal errors of the orthodox faith; those who are so bound, so steeped in ignorance, and blinded by the idolatrous faith of their forefathers, so fearful of their God of vengeance, and paralyzed by old-time customs and the prejudices so ingrained in their very natures. My earnest and most enjoyable work now is for the enlightenment of humanity.

Now, right here, comes in well my interesting theme, "The Potential Forces of Spirit Power." How few upon earth today can realize the immense power in the "Potential Forces" underlying spirit control! Where do all these great inventions originate?

From what source comes the divine inspiration of the great poets, seers, artists on the earth? Their inspiration comes from above, from this realm of causes, from the spirit influences ever surrounding and inspiring a sensitive, receptive brain. In your world of effects only, you cannot see, nor realize fully, the source above, from which flow these divine influences. The potency of thought-force is beginning to be felt and understood more clearly than ever before, Many of the terrible happenings, the direful calamities which come to the world, are caused sometimes directly, and sometimes indirectly, by spirit power, which brings good results in the end. Does not a loving parent sometimes find it necessary to correct an erring child? Gently sometimes. and yet according to the disposition, sometimes a sterner hand must be used. "According to the nature of the offense. and the disposition of the child, should the correction be tempered, in order to yield good results. So thus do the "Potential Forces," the silent workings of spirit power, apply a needed lesson to earth's people.

Here in this glorious spirit land, where my spirit is happily progressing and developing all the higher attributes of my soul, here do we assemble, twice a year, and help adjust the affairs of the nations of earth, by rightfully using and controlling these "Potential Forces" of the higher spirit realms. This assembly is called "The Congress of Nations." Here do I assist many powerful progressed spirits to direct and control, with the wiser light of our spiritual experience. the unsettled affairs of the nations of the earth. The members of this Congress are of all nationalities, but all united upon this one important work, the purification and uplifting of humanity.

And in order to meet the needs of the earth development, in order to control, to guide, and to inspire certain receptive minds upon earth, we send intermediary spirits, or rather, messengers of light, with full and clear instructions to follow, upon their mission to humanity. Sometimes they are sent singly, sometimes in groups, who concentrate all their thought forces upon receptive minds fitted to receive their

But, my friends, I hear you say, "We cannot perceive such a state of affairs, how can we believe your words are true?" Tell me, first, can you see the gentle breeze, which fans your hot cheek, cooling and refreshing you with its gentle, unseen waves of air, in rapid, vibrating motion? Tell me. can you see the sweet fragrance of a flower? and can you perceive these many, subtle, unseen, silent and potent forces of the world in which you live? Can you see a thought? or grasp with your material hand, the bright flashes of sunlight which enter your open door? Yet still they exist. Though unseen, their power is felt. So with the spirit forces, the powers of the unseen are plainly visible in the materialization of thoughts, demonstrated in powerful acts, which move the material forces in your world of effects. But back of them all exists the realm of cause. Without a cause, there could be no effect. Without the existence of the spirit world, and the powerful, "Potential Forces" used by the good spirits, there would exist naught upon your earth plane. In fact, there could only be a world of nothingness! Have I made it clear to your mortal vision? Can you embrace this fact of "Potential Forces," this power which the spirits use to guide and inspire the denizens of the earth plane?

My time will admit of only a faint outline of the grandeut and depth of this important theme. I wish to assure my many friends of earth, as well as the general public, that the wisdom and experience gained by my progressive life in these higher spirit realms, has enabled me to reach the hearts, and to brighten the lives of many upon the earth plane, who have felt my guiding influence, which has helped them to throw off the shackles with which they were bound, and to come forth from their troubled path, and enjoy their new-born freedom in the practical realization of these higher spiritual truths. Many ripened souls above, are now my brother co-workers in this cause of truth, and rejoice with me over the rapid growth of the spiritual seeds of truth, sown upon the receptive brains of earth's best and noblest men. Many of them have changed their views completely, since their birth to this higher life. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, President McKinley, Colonel Ingersoll, Bishop Brooks, Emerson, Longfellow, Whittier, and countless other noble souls, are all of them over here working for this same noble cause. The "Potential Thought Forces" of their spiritual powers, are felt plainly in an ever-increasing and widening circle of influence. They unite with me in this earnest work of love, for the uplifting of humanity. And each and every one of us do gladly accept every good chance to voice our thoughts to the world, through some fine sensitive, some medium whose brain receptivity is capable of voicing our highest thoughts. Such an experience I have now gratefully enjoyed, and will close my message with heartiest thanks to this lady for her patient kindness in allowing me this use of her time and vitality. With fervent love and blessings from my arisen spirit to all, I am truly now, as ever in the past, the living personality of ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

"Why don't women vote?" asks the Syracuse Post-Standard. The answer is easy-Because they don't want to,-Rochester Post Express.

In reply the Troy (N. Y.) Press says: "This answer is more easy than accurate. Women do not vote because prohibited by selfish laws enacted exclusively by the other sex. In proportion as civilization advances, they vote more and more, and we have sufficient faith in evolution to believe that she will have every political prerogative which men enjoy to-day. In several sovereign states, she has already this legal right. In Australia and other important foreign lands woman suffrage is triumphant, and throughout Christendom not a year passes but what the sex has made substantial gains. It is the reactionist looking backward who sneers at equal suffrage for both sexes, and voices the hackneyed fallacy that women don't want to vote."

The Press might also have added the fact that women do vote in as great a proportion as do the men in every state and country where they have full suffrage and that more petitions have been sent to Congress and the various state legislatures asking for the right to vote than all the other petitions combined. In one year the women in the state of New York sent to their constitutional convention petitions signed | Elevating, Fascinating, Instrucby 600,000 citizens 21 years of age and above.

If it is true that women do not want to vote, will some of these wise heads tell us how it happens that there is never an effort made to repeal woman suffrage where it has been tried? If the women do not want to vote they would be only too glad to be relieved of the responsibility. I think it is about time that some of these fogies ceased repeating, "women do not want to vote," and give them a chance to show whether they do or not.

WHERE WILL-POWER IS MOST NEEDED.

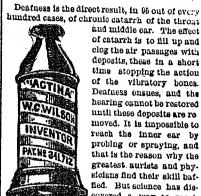

There is no greater difficulty than in making every day for say, three-quarters of an hour, a considerable physical effort that is not connected with any game or sport. People will ride a wheel now and then till they are no longer human, or play tennis till their very features seem to be melting off their faces, but ask them to spend three-quarters—only three-quarters—of an hour every day of the week, Sundays included, in the physical culture of their bodies, and nine out included, in the physical culture of their bodies, and nine out of ten of them will look doubtful, and begin to murmur something about the "difficulty of finding time to do it."

Where the best doctors fail these exercises will succeed, if they are persisted in. But the curse of laziness, which makes so many thousands of peevish invalids, must be combatted. Will power must be used. Regularity must be observed. The task must be a daily one, and to do it will require resolution.

The exercises adapted for women are beautifying. They create fine figures, and, naturally, slim waists. They remove the superfluous fiesh which is so distressingly ugly in either man or woman; they clear the skin, brighten the eyes and cause the appearance to become almost absurdly youthful.—Chicago Examiner.

WRITE PLAINLY .- We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.-Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will nerally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Moses Whisler writes: "Thousands of Progressive Thinker readers are now patiently waiting to hear Mr. Jamie son's reply to the proposition from Mr. Sweringen regarding Mr. Jamieson's admission that Mr. Hudson states his position exactly when he admits the genuineness of so-called spiritual phenomena. Will he side in with Mr. Hudson on orthodox lines, or will he shoulder the spiritual hypothesis, or will he continue to remain mum? And how is Mr. Jamieson going to dispose of that 'condistent body of relations, to which Mr. Howe has so logically called his attention in your issue, No. 721. We are anxiously waiting for Mr. Jamieson to carefully analyze this pill which Mr. Howe has suggested, and is labeled 'consistent body of relations.'"

The Paris Academy of Medicine has examined two remarkable discoveries. The first is that of Dr. Braudein, who has succeeded in condensing wine as much as milk is condensed, a whole barrel being reduced to four gallons. The second discovery is serum found by the famous Surgeon Doyen, who separated the twins Radica and Doodica. F. N. Burk writes from Denver, Colo. "The Spiritualists of Denver are enjoy ing a great treat in having Georgia Gladys Cooley with them. This is her first visit to this city and we all look forward with pleasure to her return next year. Her work is fully appreciated and has added quite a number to those who are not ashamed to let people know they are Spiritualists. As the Rev. Minot Savage, of New York City, says: 'Those who have not investigated Spiritualism only show their ignorance. What the Spiritualists of this city need is a strong organization and a place to meet in that they can call their own. Changing from one hall to another is not conducive to good conditions."

The Chicago American says: "Ghosts in a student dormitory! This is the latest announcement made in Evanston which has caused excitement among the students of Northwestern. Worse than that, it has been planned to use the dormitory to house the girls, but the announcement made yesterday that the place was haunted has caused the curator to change his mind. The building is of brick and has stood in its present place for many years and of late. since the attendance at Northwestern has increased so rapidly, it has been turned into a sleeping place for students. Being near to Willard Hall and the other women's dormitories it was determined to use it for girls this year, and the men who have occupied it during the summer were to seek other quar-Queer stories have often been told about the place, and the rumors that it was haunted reached the girls, who refused to consider any proposition tending to house them there.

A regular campaign against mediums has begun in Germany at the direct instigation of Emperor William, who is annoyed at the rapid spread of Spiritualism among the aristocracy. Frau Franzel, a famous Saxon medium, has just been sentenced to six months' imprisonment, while her husband is held for perjury. Similar prosecutions are proceeding in other cities, and a panic has seized the Spiritualists, for they are convicted as swindlers, even when high S. A., now close at hand, I wish to add placed friends testify in their behalf.

The Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky., reports: "After the recent ceremonies connected with the conferring of the pallium on Archbishop Farley in New York, a short time ago, there was a dinner and speeches. One priest had for his topic, 'Our Schools,' and in dilating on his subject he said: 'Protest ants are finding out that there is a mistake somewhere in their system of education.' Another speaker went into statistics, saying, 'In the eight months of the working of the Children's Court, 65 per cent of the children were Catholics. In a year, of the 101,000 prisoners in the eight municipal courts, 70 per cent were Catholics. Of the 25,000 confined in the workhouse, 70 per cent were Catholics."

Wm. Griffith writes from Buffalo, N. Hulbert. There were many strangers in the audience, and we received five applications for membership into the society. We expect to do excellent work in our new surroundings this fall and winter. Dr. Beverly writes: "Lakeside Hall was filled Sunday at 3 p. m., to listen to Mrs. Dr. Agnes Chester See, on the Higher Life, and How to Attain It Here and Now. Every medium in this city should attend these lessons and spread the highest truth revealed to man to day by the angel world. Mrs. Daniels spoke in the evening on the Power of the Spiritual Life, in the Home and Business. Come every Sunday at 3 p. m., and enjoy this feast."

R. C. Baird writes from Elyria, Ohio: "On Sunday we had Brother and Sister Kates with us. It was their first visit here. They both lectured to large audiences, and Mrs. Kates gave fine messages, every one of which was recognized. On Monday evening occurred our annual election of officers, a new set throughout as follows: R. C. Baird, president; Mrs. L. E. Merthe, vice-pres dent; George Merthe, secretary-treas urer; Miss Laura Winslow, lyceum conductor. Our one great aim will be to increase our membership, and our angel friends, I am sure, will help us to do it.'

Investigator writes: "I attended the newly organized Society of Spiritual Truth, which held its first meeting, Sunday afternoon, September 13, at Crosby Hall, 423 Closson, Brooklyn, N. Y. During the meeting Geo. A. Deleree de-clared that philosophy of life is back of the phenomena of speaking with the unseen, and that sowing seeds of kindness in life brings out the divine that is in us. Mrs. Henderson, a medium of Jersey City, after giving a number of messages, suddenly turned to Mr. Deleree and said to him: 'I see a big black dog, like a Newofundland. He seems to be leaping against you repeatedly, as if in great joy. Do you recognize him?' I had such a dog in my youth,' he replied. Mr. Rasmussen then gave several messages. A child wanted a flower delivered to a person in the audience and he took one from a jar on the platform and delivered it. Another message in German was delivered, also with a flower; it was the spirit of a man who had shot himself. He wished to talk to his sister, and was instantly rec-ognized by her. Antrim Davis writes: "I have read all the spiritual papers published in this country, from the Spiritual Telegraph to The Progressive Thinker, the most thorough-going, out-spoken of all of them, and for which I shall continue to renew my subscription annually while I remain during the few years that are left me to do the work assigned me. And while we Americans are now considering the prospective work of the N. my voice in favor of our B. Warne for president. His characteristics qualifying him for the place have been ably set forth by Dr. Wilkins and Ervin A. Rice in 721 of The Progressive Thinker. His true love for the genuine medium and for the angel world is one of the inducements that call my pen to write his name high on the scroll for N. S. A. president."

The recent marriage of Andrew Lundy and Marguerite S. Ware was followed by a reception to their friends at the residence of the officiating minister. W. H. Harrington, 2937 Queen ave. N. Minneapolis. A violet storm did not prevent a large number from paying their respect to the popular couple. Mr Lundy stands at the head of his profession, electric engineering. Mrs. Lundy, daughter of Mrs. M. N. J. A. Toren writes: "The meetings at the hall of the Psychic Forces, corner of Cottage Grove avenue and 47th street. are being well attended, both at the conference in the afternoon and the lectures in the evening. New innovations are being planned for these meetings in the near future, and every effort will be made to make visitors feel at home. Mrs. Isa Cleveland has been doing good work as a test medium and many are being led into the pathway of truth and knowledge by the clear-cut and emphatic messages presented to them by 'White Star.'"

The Western Electric Campany has posted the following notice: "Playing the races and all other forms of gambling, immoral conduct, and the excess ive use of cigarettes greatly impain one's usefulness. The best business houses in the city do not desire the services of those who practice any of these things. Notice is hereby given that any employe so abusing himself is subject to dismissal." This way of discouraging vice is more effective than either sumptuary laws or sermons.

An East Liverpool, Ohio, item dated August 29, reads: "Kneeling in prayer, asking that death might be averted, George Buchelt, aged about 65 years, was struck by lightning and rendered unconscious for ten minutes. He says his mother taught him to pray during every thunderstorm and that prayer saved his life, as it had done on numerous occasions. His house has been struck by lightning three times, but this was his narrowest escape. Mr Buchelt's theory is not sustained by facts. he has prayed every time it thundered and has drawn the lightning four times, while millions who never pray do not know what it is to have lightning strike within a mile of them.—Truth Seeker.

anctimonious face to make people hink he is pious." The American Federation of Catholic societies [whose work has the "im-orimatur" of President Roosevelt] recently held its national convention, and took occasion to show its teeth as an enemy of free speech. Among other resolutions, it has the incredible insoence to demand "the exclusion from public libraries of books that are offensive and erroneous to the treatment of Catholic doctrines and practice." Does not this pass the bounds of patience These societies, representing the sentiment of the Catholic church in this country, demand the right to control our libraries, and they are not far from having their way. They would impose on the entire American people the barbarous Index Expurgatorius to which they trust as a means of keeping their own deluded followers in darkness and ignorance. And yet the nation slumbers on the menace to free speech. The public library of New London, Conn., actually refused, even as a present, several standard Socialist works, including Karl Marx's "Capital," prostitution of public libraries to the service of the ruling class is one of the most subtle and despicable phases of the conspiracy against free speech .-

The Demonstrator. H. Madson, Chicago, writes: "The poem quoted in your paper of September 26, by Elizabeth Richardson, and I believe, rightfully credited to Father Ryan, the poet priest and mystic, is so beautiful and soul-uplifting, that I regret that she omitted the last three verses. Perhaps she thought they were not needed for comparison, but for the benefit of those who may not be familiar with the poem, I submit them here with. Some years ago I heard it recited by a lady and thought at the time it was given under inspiration, but a short time thereafter I happened to run across it in J. M. Peebles' volume, mortality and Our Employments Here after,' where the full poem is quoted with due credit given to Father Ryan as the author. These are the three last verses:

But far on the deep there are billows That never shall break on the beach; And I have heard songs in the silence That never shall float into speech; And I have had dreams in the valley Too lofty for language to reach

And I have seen souls in the valley-Ah, me! how my spirit was stirred! And they wear holy veils on their faces-Their footsteps can scarcely be heard;

They pass through the valley like vir-Too pure for the touch of a word. Do you ask me the place of the valley,

Ye hearts that are harrowed by care? It lieth afar between mountains, And God and His angels are there; And one is the dark mound of sorrow, And one the bright mountain of praver."

M. L. Bradley writes: "The argument of Dr. Brownson in regard to personal liberty, I think, assumes a trifle too much. If I saw my neighbor across the street being robbed by a highwayman should consider it my duty to put a stop to the proceedings if I could, although in doing so I should be quite likely to interfere with the personal liberty of the robber in like manner. If] should see some other scoundrel still trying to rob my neighbor of his health as well as his money, to say nothing of the untold misery inflicted on his family by filling his stomach with iquor. I should still think it my duty to fight the robber, that is, the sale keeper, by every legitimate means my power, which I have always consistently done. The learned gentleman is, however quite right and consistent from a doctor's standpoint. If people could be induced to live sober and temperate lives there would be little use for doctors, even in the wilds of Arkansas. The fact is the liquor business as at present conducted among so-called civilized nations, proves indisputably that somewhere in far distant ages the human race descended from monkeys. and has kept right on descending ever since.'

A Word in Defense of Catholics.

I have been reading the articles published from time to time in The Progressive Thinker, treating of the foolshness of popes and priests and the Catholic religion, and the undesirability generally of having the spirits of former Catholics influence us in any way. Some very oumpoken, not to say uncharitable and illiberal things have been said; this, notwithstanding the fact that some of our most progressive and intellectual men have been Catholics and even priests, and regardless of the fact that many of those who compose the bands of spirit workers with our best mediums have been of the same belief in earth life and are sensitive, perhaps, to the unkind and sometimes coarse remarks, though in the march of eternal progression of spirit life all religious beliefs fade away in a measure with the life to which they pertained. It is said there are always two sides to a question, and I wish the pleasure of presenting a picture of the other side. Ever since I have known of spirit return and mediumship, which has been between eight and nine years, my husband and I have known a spirit who called himself Jack, whom we soon learned to consider our most dependable friend. Anything especially difficult or important was discussed with him and his advice asked. If he made a prediction it was sure to be fulfilled He declined to tell anything about himself that would reveal his identity, saying Jack was a good enough name for the purpose. We learned later that he was important enough to occupy a few inches space in the Encyclopedia Britannica, but the thing most important in this letter is that he was educated for the priesthood and sometimes now appears in the garb of that order; but in time of war, during an attack on the seminary in which he was then, he showed such marked ability in the defense of the place, which chiefly devolved upon him, that he entered the army to give further vent to his military genius. He is as liberal in thought and as kindly toward other beliefs as any Spiritualist I have ever known, either in the body or out of it, and shows no narrow-mindedness in anything.

He has proven to be my most intimate guide, talking with me about everything and at all times. Upon one oceasion when I had spoken of him as my control while talking to a lady, he reproved me for using the word control, saying he was a guide, not a control, and wished me to be freely myself. He is jolly and happy, and is a spur to my mental life, helping me to see the hu morous and pleasant as well as the lofty and serious.

When I expressed myself as weary of so much ranting at his sect, as if there vere nothing else to write about, he united and said: "The views expressed are not in accord with the high and spiritual policy professed by the writers. It is seldom that one from the priesthood ever returns to influence any except those of his own church, and if he does so wrongly, he is no more fitted to be a guide than any other spirit whose intentions are not good, though he may possess all the other requisite

His high-mindedness cannot be attributed to him on the ground that he is ancient, as his spirit life began thirtyseven years ago last June. It is not the particular pattern of our religion but the manner in which we wear it that counts most. We may be Catholic or Protestant. Mohammedan or Spiritualist, but we ourselves must be all in all. MRS. IDA G. ASHENFELTER. Covina, Cal.

We (myself and wife) wish to offer a few appreciative and sympathetic words. If your valuable paper was run upon lines and methods which some of your contributors at times sugest, it would not be a "Progressive Thinker," but a "Retrograde Mover." For myself, I can only thank you for your independent, noble consistency in issuing your paper as a fearless, persistent advocate of free thought along all lines. The many brilliant writers who contribute to the success of your paper deserve our best thanks. Next to my dear wife (a good public worker and medium second to none) your priceless paper is my inseparable companion, and its weekly advent is always looked for and welcomed as an indispensable factor in my life. With its pages before me I can at any time sit and enjoy the company of the mental world's benefactors, enlighteners and inspirers. My sincere wish is that you may be spared for your noble work many years that we may be introduced weekly to the company of so-called atheists, materialists, liberals, radicals, blended occasionally with conservatives, so that after giving one and all a hearing we may assimilate that which is in accordance with our mental make-

Some short time since a few of the Spiritualists of Spokane appeared before the councilmen of this city to present their (the Spiritualists') demur to an ordinance which it was mooted would be passed to inflict a tax upon or to stop all mediums from exercising their gifts. At this meeting it was suggested by one of the would be representatives of Spiritualism, that exception should be taken in the case of any one endorsed by the First Spiritual Society of Spokane. In view of the fact that Mrs. Priest and myself have singlehanded, at our own expense, kept open public institution (reading-room). held our public meetings, etc., and given phenomena and philosophy, and have given light and knowledge to hundreds in this city, and been the means of scores starting their private investigation, we demur most emphatically to any such assumption of any society to reserve to themselves the right (before the general public) to a claim of that description, viz., authority to decide who shall or shall not be worthy to exercise natural spiritual gifts.

MEDIUM IS NOT FORTUNE TELLER. Spiritualists Win Victory Over City in Dayton Street Police Court.

That Spiritualistic mediums are not fortune tellers or astrologists, and can practice without taking out a licensewas the decision of Judge Wm. Jefferson Pollard of the Dayton Street Police Cont. Saturday. The case was that against Mrs. Antoinette Rosenbaum, of 116 North Fourth street. Mrs. Rosenbaum was charged with telling fortunes without license. uty Inspector O'Connor testified that one month ago he visited Mrs. Rosen baum's home and she gave him a reading, for which he paid her 50 cents.

He said she did not ask him any set price, but that persons consulting her were supposed to pay her prices ranging from 25 cents to $1. He said that while she gave him the reading she went into what appeared to be a trance. In this condition she spoke of his past and future, communing while so doing with an Indian of the Mohawk tribe. Rev. Thomas Grimshaw, pastor of the First Spiritual Association at 3015 West Pine street, testified that Mrs. Rosenbaum was a regular attendant of his church. He said that while the association of which he was pastor condemned the use of gifts for gain, it did office.

not consider it wrong for a medium to charge for the use of time. "He said: "Spiritualists believe that mediums are the instruments used by spirits to communicate their knowledge and wishes to those still of the world.

How Medium Differs From Quack. "Persons must have certain physical and psychical gifts before they can be come mediums. It is not wrong for a medium to accept free will offerings for her time. It is wrong for her to engage in it as a business for the purpose of finding lost heirs, missing valuables or such things. Therein lies the difference between a medium of religious gifts and a mere charlatan."

Mrs. Rosenbaum pleaded not giulty. In giving his decision Judge Pollard said that he had as a precedent a similar case in Los Angeles. The medium in that case was fined in the lowe court, but the decision was reversed in the higher court. He said that the laws of Missouri and California were much alike in defining religious liberty. Witnesses stated that Spiritualists believe in "Infinite intelligence," and that the phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expressions of infinite intelligence, that complete understanding of infinite intelligence and living in accordance therewith constitutes true religion. They affirm that the expression and the personal identity of the individual continues after "the change called death," that communion with "socalled dead" is a fact scientifically proven by Spiritualists, and that the highest morality is the practice of the

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beau-tiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.
Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora

The hieroglyphic of material shows, herceforward he would paint globe with wings." globe with wings."
The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which numanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that sented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to so be morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wids ful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

O. G. Richards: Q. How can the flood which has come in the usually droughty regions of Kansas be accounted for?

A. The droughts and rains depend on the directions of the air-currents, and the hitherto prevailing currents end the inquiry. It only explains the over the more arid regions of the West method—a small part of the method. are not charged with moisture. While in the main subject to regularity, they vary, as do the currents of water in the ocean, only to a greater extent. Many meteorologists see in such changes the trons," of "atoms," about which the magnetic influence of the sun, and the leading men of science talk and write future will undoubtedly prove their contention correct.

There is periodicity in the fluctuacharacter. The dry winds give place age in rain. The arid west has apparently passed the seasons of drought, or dry currents, and is now receiving in its upper atmosphere, the humid south-west winds. I predict that for several years to come there will be a much greater annual precipitation there, than in the last score of years. There may be partial droughts, as there are in more rain-favored countries, but the average rainfall will be greatly increased.

The conditions of saturated currents, suddenly drawn upward into the colder and hence condensing region, thus producing such enormous precipitations, may be impredicable, and of rare occurrence. In passing, a few thoughts arise as to the tremendous energy displayed by such downpours. Of the late storm the weather report is that nearly six inches (5.65) of water fell in 72 hours. It is difficult to comprehend the volume of such a rainfall. A little calculation may assist in giving some idea of the infinite power of nature's forces. Six inches of rain means that on every square mile of earth's surface there fell 434,589 tons of water. This would require for transportation, over 10,000 cars carrying 40 tons each. But this is only a fraction of the power expended. The vapors which furnish the rain clouds, are drawn up according to metethree thousand miles away. The vapor is elevated to a minimum height of one mile and brought these three thousand miles to at last be precipitated in rain. The work of a horse (or the dynamic unit used in calculating power), is able to elevate a little more than one and a half tons one foot in a minute. It is stated more accurately as 550 foot pounds in a second. If one horse power can elevate one and a half tons one foot in a minute, it would be 88 hours in pulling this load to the height of a mile or placing it on the mean level of the rain clouds. Or to place a rainfall of six inches on a square mile in the clouds would require the united work of 289,736 hourses for 88 continuous hours. Multiply this by the several hundred square miles over which the storm ex- I never in all my earth life was so very, tended, and the amount becomes incomprehensible. All the engines and power-giving means employed by man,

A. The photograph shows a foot belonging apparently to a reptile of the saurian type, but it is not possible from the picture, to more than express a tentative opinion. It appears to be a remarkable petrifaction or cast and has great interest as coming from an age in which if they existed, have left few and uncertain traces of their fossil remains view of this the position in which the "foot" was found should be carefully witnessed, and at least a portion of adhering slate preserved. Its scientific value depends on this evidence. This correspondent suggests that it is a "deformed human foot," but this inference undoubtedly grew out of the similarity of the elements in the feet of all verte brate animals. The human foot is a type to which all the others more or less conform. A departure from this type appears to the observer as a de-As man did not exist on the earth until untold millions of years after the formation of the coal, it would be impossible for this foot to be of hucossitated a vibrating medium, or other, pervading the universe, of almost infl nite tenulty and elasticity. In this, when vibrations were set up, according to the legth and rapidity of the waves, the sensation of light, heat, electricity,

While this vast field has not yet been more than entered on its border, experinental research of the most wonderful conception and execution, gave the data for mathematical calculations, as to wave lengths and velocity. The real demonstration is mathematical. Matter at "rest," that is without motion, 1. e., vibrations, might exist but would not be cognizable to our senses. If such matter-at rest-were set in vioration by a constantly increasing force, as burning coal, or an electric current, it would first throw off heat waves, as the temperature continued to ise, the vibrations becoming more rapid at 600 degrees C, it will begin to glow with light, and increase to incandescence at 1500 degrees C, or the pure white or complete light of the sun. Continuing to a still higher temperature the vibrations are those of chemical action (actinic) and electricity. But it must be borne in mind that simply saying that the cause of phenomena is virations, explains nothing. It only puts a new word in place of an old. Then can be no vibrations without a cause e., an expenditure of energy. The vibrations of the ether of space sent out by the sun beat on the earth as light, heat and electricity. As heat they set the particles of the earth in vibration, and with light build up all living forms.

This vibratory theory is applied to the brain as an instrument of setting up that peculiar series of vibrations which are known as thought or mind, and the analogy is well sustained when comparison is made. Yet it must be confessed that so far as demonstrative proof is concerned there is none whatever. It is a plausible solution; a theory which covers the known facts and unites them into a consistent whole.. In this manner it may be said to be well sustained. Admitting that force in its various forms of heat, light, electricity or thought, goes out in vibrations does not method-a small part of the method. The cause is as concealed as before. The relation of these vibrations to what is called "matter," is entirely conjectured. The theories of "ions," of with such complacent assurance, the hearer or reader infers are as deter mined and demonstrated as mathemattions of the aerial tides and changes of ical propositions, are as baseless as fairy tales. Possibly they may be true, to moist, which discharge their surplus. yet even their exponents, brought directly to the test, admit that their theories are only "scientific dreams."

A Thoughtful Plan for Spiritual Propaganda.

The action of the delegates to the coming convention of the National Spiritualists Assocation by all those who hold a fervent and unselfish regard for the cause, will be watched with much solicitude. With judicious deliberation, and acis strictly in harmony with the best interest, much good will be done, and Spiritualism receive an impetus which will tend to tide it over the shoals, and place the wavering cause upon the solid ground of respect and prosperity.

It is well to consider that, in the in vestigation of Spiritualism, each individual represents a different plane of development, or mental growth, in a channel most comprehensive to himself, and in this regard in fact is a law into himself, which safely may be considered the basic principle of an advanced conception in the realms of spiritual laws. The philosophy appeals largely to the mystic faculties, the wonder sense, a deep rooted instinct in our nature, and such appeals are never in vain, and will command attention of even those who would fain deny the truth or possibility of the grand phenomena which lie just beyond the narrow scope of their intellectual horizon. what can be of more interest than obtaining some facts or a clue to some great mystery, especially one which has not only confounded the sages of the past since the early dawn of his reasoning faculties, and to the common multitude, as alluring as the mellow glow of a morning sunbeam.

Error has no friend like prejudice which falsely lays claim to all the tenets of virtue, and the weaker the judgment the louder acclaim and stronger the prejudice. Progress is not achieved by unoccupied space. Now with all this vast space before us, it is impossible for us to conceive of the commencement of time. Time is as endless in duration as space is in existence. Can you think of or imagine a place where space does not exist; I think that any mind that has not been biased by that hypnotic spell in which we are so early in life surrounded will acknowledge that my premise of time and space is cor-Now the point I am trying to reach is, that if anyone created time or space, where were they before time existed? Dear reader, take your own time to answer this.

Forever settle it in your own mind, but be sure you are right, for unless you commence right you will have trouble to end right. Now, then, take these particles of sand and drops of water and let nature bring two of them together every trillion years and you can have some concept of the time this wonderful world has been in forming.

I said nature. That is a word I use emphatically, instead of the word god. I don't know anything about a God, and but very little about nature. God is first spoken of in the Bible. In John 1:18, is recorded the words, "No man hath seen God at any time." In Ex. 33:20, "and he (the Lord) said, thou canst not see my face; for no man shall see my face and live." Gen 32:30, "and Jacob called the place Pe-ni-el; for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." At another time he was seen by seventy-four (Exodus 24:9, 19, 11), Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu and seventy of the elders of Israel. They saw God and did eat and drink.

Now taking the Bible as a record, we could never come to a reasonable conclusion as to any of his attributes. He is represented as a God of love, and a God of vengeance. He is a creator of good and evil. So to prove a God would be the most difficult task of my life. Hence the heading of this article. Thou is no God.

But in the laws of nature we can see some of its attributes at least. None of us have ever seen nature, nothing but the attributes. We can not see conception, but we see the fruits of it. Nature is perfect. It is one word to which we can add the word perfect. Nature is always the same. It never changes. It always was, is, and will be the same, without the shadow of turning. We cannot open our eyes without beholding nature's handiwork.

To illustrate in a plain manner, I once saw two parents who were so near what is termed idiots that their two children born to them could not talk, merely grunted and made signs. Now nature had nothing to do in making those children such pitable subjects. It was the conditions of their parents, wholly so.

I am so ignorant as to nature that in speaking of it I do not know whether to say he, she it, or they, but many socalled wise people call God, he, his, or him, always in the masculine gender. I understand that the learned Moses Hull has said that the word god is derived from the word good. That may be so, yet I can use it only synonymously with the word idol. I have been chagrined at lecturers and mediums closing their services by singing, "Praise Father, Son and Holy Shost," and the repeating of the Lord's prayer, etc. Now I will never object to hose who want to do these things, but for me, no, never. It breaks the conditions at once for me. Are we in partnership with the orthodox? Do we have to pattern from them? Are we so weak we cannot stand alone? If not et us die a natural death. I can't stand it to be strangled. And such worship does completely close my mouth. This world would have been much better off if it had never heard the words God, Bible, creeds, etc. have caused more wars, more bloodshed and superstition than can possibly be

Some would be willing to be called Spiritualists away from home, but they don't want their church to know it. They think it will hurt them financially and socially to let the truth be known. Friends, if you are not honest to your convictions you cannot benefit your selves nor any one else. If I am wrong will be honest with myself and acknowledge my wrongs as fast as I find

What do our dear departed ones care as to what false ideas we may have. It is the true ones they are anxious for us to know. They who have tried the realities of another life, know the true condition and if we love them and are anxious to pass once more into their society, let us search diligently for the truth, the right way, then we will come in rapport with them and enjoy their sweet communion here on earth. doing this we will be certain as to their conditions. Whilst our hearts bleed for their presence once more, we miss them all the time, yet when we hear them say, "papa," "mamma," oh, I am so happy, glory, glory, glory, it makes our hearts rejoice with joy unspeakable.

Thanks to pature's powers for the reve-lation of facts. We cannot fully realize anything. only as we experience them. Experience is the true grand teacher. I cannot portray any of the beauties and glories of that higher sphere into which our loved ones have reached, but am sure they come to us, and they bring us great for and peace. A joy and peace that no earthly power can bring, then as it were a foretaste of that nobler and grander life

Oh, that we all may be lifted to a higher altitude of thought and life. Let us try to make the best of conditions for our angel loved ones. Their natures remain the same; they rejoice when we reinain the same; they jejuge when we rejoice; they weep when we knew, they sing when we sing. As we progress, it enables them to progress. And when the reaper, death, thrusts in her sickle they will come and take, away the sheaves. sheaves.

We have only a short time to remain in this state, so let us not only do good to ourselves, but also to them. ourselves, but also to others.

There is nothing bad in true Spiritualism. To-day it is the only ennobling thought on the face of earth; in fact it is all in all. Oh, for that power that will unhypnotize the world of mankind. That they may see and know the privilege they have. Oh, for that power that will give mortal man the courage to think and act for himself. A Spirit Message.

Friends:-If a friend with whom you had lived for many years went away to visit, or to make his future home in some other city or country, he would have a desire to write, to let you know that he was well and contented, and to tell you about the things which he had seen and heard in the country about which you had talked and wondered when you were together. So it is with me here in the land of

When I had passed through the change called death and found that I still lived, the desire came to me, to send messages to my friends and to assure them that I was not dead.

To my surprise I found that I could be instrumental in doing so, through the aid of my grandson who was more strongly inclined to the belief of spirit return, than any other of my dear friends on earth, and it is through the aid of him that I am permitted to do so and trust that my messages may benefit the world.

I do not want to give rise to false opes, or to give testimony to anything which is not absolutely true, but desire to deal candidly and honestly with every one, for this is a matter of vital importance.

It is one of my greatest desires to impart the knowledge which I acquire to those of earth who are hungering and thirsting for spiritual truths, Now if you of earth should read from some paper or book communications from different ones who have safely reached the spirit land and all acounts do not exactly agree, do not blame or disbelieve them, for it is here as in the material world, different persons look upon the same object differently, and while one might describe it in one way. another might in an entirely different way, and this might make it seem like an untruth but it is not so, and why?

FIRST GREAT CAUSE.

Thoughts of a Fool, According to the Bible.

This article is written by a fool, according to the Bible, and it may be it will prove so foolish that it will find its way to the waste basket. But, my dear editor, I have such great love for you in that you are so courageous and firm in your manner of editing our paper, The Progressive Thinker. I am truly glad that our cause is backed by such men as you. Our paper reaches us promptly as you. Our paper reaches us promptly each week, laden with the brightest jewels of thought. I am utterly surprised that anyone professing to be a Spiritualist should be finding fault with it. My sincere desire is, that your life may be long spend to publish it. may be long spared to publish it. have read many articles in it that have been worth more than ten times the subscription price. Of course I have a preference among the writers, and probably reading something that I did not fall in harmony with has prompted me to write this article.

I have been studying for the last fourteen months about the First Cause—as some say it, the First Great Cause, and I feel sure at last I have been rewarded for all my meditations. And whilst it is a great source of joy and comfort to me, I am anxious and willing to help others, if possible, to overcome these superstitious and false ideas.

I am sure that the first great cause is based upon ignorance. In the first place, time and space have always ex-Take each grain of sand of the earth, each drop of water of the mighty oceans and place them millions of miles apart, and yet there would be plenty of gliding smoothly in a harmonious rut, but by the conflict of opinions bright gems of thought are scattered along the rugged pathway of life, hatch and brood and become the torch which guides the footsteps of the coming gen-

It is an unwriten law that the now must plant for the future, and the laggard is the barnacle on the bottom of the great ship of life. Reformations of the past in church and state have been achieved only by an appeal to the minds of the masses. Agitation separ-ates the chaff from the wheat and destroys the occupation of the chaff venders.

The pathway of those who were by nature endowed to carry the white banner, and through their sensitive organism offering to the dogmatical world a sup from the fountain of truth, has not not been of a roseate hue, nor strewn with the choice garlands of appreciation; but footsore and soul-hungry, with face to the mountain of error many have fallen by the way side.

While others stimulated to greater exertion by the spirit world, have tramped, tramped, tramped while intellectually or soul-famishing for the want of that understanding and sympathetic touch which only knowledge can bring have for years endured the shock of innuendoes and cruel vituperations.

This cruel opposition mainly arises from prenatal conditions and is not confined to any creed or standing in society, and can only be eradicated by education.

Man mentally becomes or grows with his environments, and his thinker expands just in accord with the advantage he may have of thought food, and his power of assimilation. Reading causes man to think in a new channel, and in time, just in proportion to his ability in casting off the myths of childhood, and digesting truths new to him, will he set about the work of testing, and analyzing his stock of old ideas, and reorganizing them into a comprehensive shape, in harmony with the new order of things.

In the very order of our being, these changes are of a slow growth might be the very ones dwelt upon by | not be produced by a flashlight process, nor stereoscopic views, but by thought food and through the process of the laws of growth, the desired result will

> It may be considered stale, but will bear repeating, that no cause profane nor divine, science nor historical, has ever been blest with literature to compare with that of the spiritual philosophy. In fact the cause is so very ably treated, and from every comprehensible point of view, and in that peculiar inter esting manner, that each and all may partake according to their own liking and power of understanding. Now there is not an intelligent Spiritualist in the land, nor in the scope of the influence of The Progressive Thinker that > will not say, "that's true."

> Now please consider that all this grand philosophy of life given to us by the spirit world yet remains in the hands of the few. And with the pulpit and secular press whose influence largely shape public opinion, holding antagonis tic views, in all reason is it any wonder that our lecturers and mediums find a rough road to travel. Yes, they, workers, for years have been forced to row against a turbulent current, and the many heart-aches will forever

When every public library in our land is well stocked with literature that will set thought to work, develop the inner life, and teach man that he is the little God which is behind the throne, uncap the brain cells of the reading public, teach them a comprehensive idea of the laws of vibration, which will enable them to grasp the thought of what is.

> meant by condition. Then our lecturers and mediums will not enter the lecture and seance room in fear and trembling, but with joyous expectancy that their audience may have appreciation for the grand feast to be received from the spirit world.

And as ignorance is dethroned by reason and knowledge, and a more general comprehension of natural laws, Spiritualism will gain that respect due to all truth, and the ooze will cease to disembogue from the pulpit and secular press. Can this be done? Is it practical, and as this subject has in the last few months found space in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, what, if any thing, has been done to start this ball of

I will say first that this work is entirely practical, every one will say it is necessary" and can be accomplished much easier than first thought would indicate. Also I speak from knowledge gained from some experience, that the promoters of this work will receive a hearty and substantial co-operation from the Spiritualists and Freethinkers throughout all sections of the coun-

I will also say, that as a slight beginning our library of late has received over forty spiritual books, which includes Brother Francis' wonderful premium list, and The Progressive Thinker now finds a weekly welcome on file in the reading room of Akron's public library.

Money is also in sight for the purchase of all books of the kind necessary, which will be given a special corner or niche in our new library building. Akron for years has been unable or unwilling to support or maintain a spiritual society. Yet every one with whom I have talked, Freethinkers included, heartily endorse the work and offer matorial assistance.

In this proliminary work, as yet financial aid has not been solicited and none received. Yet it affords me pleasure to publicly acknowledge the liberal do-nation of books from Sister C. C. Bacon, of Elyria, Ohio. Sister, for the cause, many thanks. This work to be brought to a successful final must have organization, and behind it push, vim and vigor, and who should be the nestors of this grand movement but the paternal organization.

The dissemination of the true philosophy of life "here and hereafter," through the public libraries, the most available channel, will open up a wide avenue for the inflow of vitalizing information, which will maintain a sturdy growth that can't be neutralized by press nor pulpit.

When a more full understanding of our philosophy, wherehumanity in general recognizes the truth of Spiritualism, then from the different spheres of intelligence and character societies will be formed, each gravitating to their own kind, and enjoy the bliss that their natures will permit. The operation of this law may be easily observed in all grades and ranks of society. And, friends, the accomplishment of this grand work which to some may from first view appear gigantic, will wield a wonderful invence in smoothing the rough pathways, stimulate the lagging interests to a desire for knowledge and investigation.

It will also strengthen the vertebra of the weaklings, by giving them moral courage to step from the shadows and bask in the warm sunshine, and give our cause that standing of which our optimistic sisters and brothers have ong since dreamed.

All true Spiritualists desire to see the cause flourish, and take its rightful place, adored as the gem of truth in the hearts of all humanity; there is inspiration in the thought. But from a logical point of view, this result cannot be ac complished along the lines of what may be termed conversion. Not as a pendulous, but as a permanent object like all other truths, the cause of Spiritualism must advance along an educational line. In this work all factions can unite with mite and influence, and stimulate a oneness of feeling hitherto not experienced in our ranks. And with some understanding say that a material support from Spiritualists and Freethinkers in general will be manifest from every quarter. I am in hopes that in their delibera tion the N. S. A. may see the wisdom in establishing a library bureau and ways ways and means to push this subject to a successful final.

All the above may be said about time It is self-evident, and perfectly clear, that time never could have had a beginning and cannot possibly have an have lots o ending. Such a thing as a beginning and fruits. or ending of time or space cannot even be imagined.

Then you may ask, what about God? Well, it depends altogether on what God you mean. There are people that look upon different beings and different things as Gods.

But if you mean the All-wise, Infinite, Omnipotent, Omnipresent Deity, then I say it is self-evident He is not a person He could not be a personal God in any sense we use the term person. Why? Because personality means form, shape,

There must be height, breadth, thickness. And how could there be, with an beginning or end to space?

Now don't get pious enough to throw away common sense and reason. Let us use the faculties we possess. We can only know of God from results we can measure and weigh and test, in the crucible of our intelligence. Some one says, all we know of God, is what the Bible tells us. What Bible? Well, it makes no difference. The only way we can possibly know whether or not any Bible tells the truth, is through the exercise of the faculties Infinite Wisdom has endowed us

These faculties for convenience we term reason, intelligence, judgment. I am aware that, at this juncture some self-righteous, self-conceited ignoramus will exclaim, "Oh! he does not believe the Bible! I will not listen to

Why! God bless you, my dear fellowbeing, I believe more of the Bible than you do.

But I am no worshiper of narrow creeds, bigotry and superstition. My faith in Goll is too deep, too strong and abiding, to allow me to quench or smother the faculties He has blessed me with for the sake of conforming to the stupid, senseless creeds and formalities that are drilled into the common people by a set of self-righteous, superstitious religious bigots.
God is that Infinite Principle, Intelligence, Force, Wisdom and Power that pervades and controls all things. God and Nature are one.

No man can comprehend God. It is fortunate that we cannot. We will always have something to learn. It is easy to perceive that God's govern ment is one of law. Law that is infinite in perfection. Law that never changes or varies in the slightest degree.

God's administration is so perfect in its rulings, that man is enabled to figure out results that will occur in ages to come. God's heritage is so great that light, traveling at the rate of over God's heritage is so great eleven millions of miles per minute, could never cross the extent of His do-

THOUGHTFUL THOUGHTS.

IN REFERENCE TO HOW TO LIVE.

The Cranks on Diet and Kindred Sub-Jects-Christian Science a Plagiarism.

In my opinion your pages devoted to the subject of practical hygiene and care of the body are alone worth more than the subscription price of The Times. We are having a shocking amount of ill health these days, caused mostly by error of dieting, as also by a far too strenuous hurry to get money. We eat too quick and by far too many kinds of food, or alleged food, at each meal. The poor are getting to suffer the horrors of indigestion on account of the cheapness of sugar, syrups and grease. Pie and cake "foundries" do an immense business, and when the ing candy, confectionery and delicacy stores and saloons, with here and there a stray establishment for real humanitarian and utilitarian needs. Our population is fast becoming mostly doctors, mental healers, dyspeptic cranks, fakes and faddists, mentally unbalanced and and faddists, mentally unbalanced and semi-insane pessimists. We are crowding our asylums with morpaine flends

A Spiritualist Temple has been and wrecks of all kinds. Errors and excesses in eating cause sexual abnor mities and drunkards. We have gotten far away from nature. We eat trash because it tastes good. We are not hungry, at least few of us are. We think that an abnormal craving is hun-Our dyspeptics are a queer lot; ger. they become imbued with the strangest of notions. We have our raw-food cranks, strict vegetarians, fruitarians, sun-raised foodtarians, Salisbury, or ex clusive ground-beef eaters, and hot water drinkers. Then there are our mental suggestion healers, magnetic and electric silly folks, Christian Scien-tist and faith fakirs. We have our crank dyspeptic special literature, feeding the already abnormal minds with absurd ideas, and preposterous notions and suggestions, thereby causing a constant thinking of the stomach and won-dering what horrible tricks the old hing may be up to next. We are also leaving a fearful legacy to our children in the way of a predisposition to digestive weakness, and all its concomi-Truth is reality. Yet he or she needs not therefore study "crankism." We have lots of cereals, vegetables, nuts

> If it wasn't for imposing upon your space, I would pay my respects to that preposterous, so-called Christian Science cult. Not one in a thousand is aware of the fact that "Mother" Eddy's book, "Science and Health, and Key to the Scriptures," is largely plagiarism of the philosophy of Schopenhauer and Lord Berkeley, respectively 75 and 200 years old. Christian Science is perverted Buddhism, and not Christianity. Buddha taught "idealism," that is, the unreality of matter. Berkeley, from whose works the "smart Aleck" who wrote Mrs. Eddy's book got his ideas and turned a grand philosophy into a money-making scheme, is found in nearly all public libraries. If anyone wishes to see the absurdity of the claim of originality of "Science and Health," and its doctrine of the non-existence of matter, I refer him to Berkeley, vol. I, pages 261 to 360, and he will have all of Eddy's ideas in plain, common-sense language, and without occult phraseology and Christian Science mysterious twaddle. Berkeley was a bishop of the English church, and wrote two hundred years ago. He had to reconcile his philosophy with the Bible, but he didn't deny the absolute reality of pains and sickness

"Schopenhauer, vol. I, page 1, in his Die Welt als Wille and Vorstellung' ('The World as Will and Idea')-see translation of same into English in Los Angeles Public Library-says: "The world is my idea; this is a truth which holds good for everything that lives and knows, though man alone can bring it into reflection and abstract consciou If he really does this, he has attained to philosophical wisdom. It ther becomes clear and certain to him that what he knows is not a sun and an earth, but only an idea that sees a sun and a hand that feels an earth: that the world which surrounds him is there only as idea, that is, only in relation to something else, namely, the consciousness within himself.'

"Now, although some wise men of all times have denied the absolute reality of substance and matter, yet they never for one moment doubted the reality of sickness and pains. Let me make this plain. Matter or force or energywhatever you choose to call it-is really objectified mind. You see and feel nothing but your own ideas, but your soul or mind is in a conditioned striv ing, struggling, changeable state for educational purposes, a striving for a higher consciousness of self. The body is the mind objectified, in order of realizing its being. But here is where Christian Science cleaves off: they say that the mind is of God, and therefore presto! it cannot become sick, except through illusion. Now, what is it that is distressed if not the mind? Does not the Bible teach that even in the next world the mind is subject to torments? If there is a hell, I suppose when a Christian Scientist happens to get there he will just simply persuade himself that, inasmuch as the soul has no body, and is of God, it cannot feel distress, and therefore hell isn't hell, but just nothing more or less than a foolish idea." PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.

Passed to spirit life, at Flushing, Mich., Sept. 14, 1903, Mr. Frank Carrow. The world is better for his having lived in it. He was reared a Catholic, but some years ago came into the true light of Spiritualism through the efforts of Mr. Granger and Mr. Albert Crosby, another dear friend and a prominent Spiritualist of Flushing. His wishes to have his funeral services conducted in accordance with the spiritual faith were observed. The floral offerings from far and near gave evidence of the esteem in which he was held. Assisted by the quartette choir, the services were conducted by the writer. REV. DOROTHY DAILY.

Montal and Moral Culture.

Hypnotism in Mental and Moral Culture, By John Duncan Quackenbos, Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine, Hember of the New York Academy of Sciences, Fellow of the New Hampshire Medical Society, Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Bear in mind, please, that this book treats of Hypnotism in Mental and Moral Cul-ture. It should be in every family. Price. $1,25.

A Complete System. Hypnotism, a Complete System of Method, Application and Use, including all that is known in the art and practice of mesmerism and mental healing, prepared for the self-instruction of beginners, as well as for the use of advanced students and practitioners. By L. W. D. Laurence. A good work for anyone to read: Price $1. Paper, 50 cents.

The Field of Hypnotism. Hypnotism, by Albert Moll. The author says: "Various recent researches in the field of hypnotism have rendered it necessary to remodel in part the earlier edition of the work. I have brought the history of hypnotism down to the present, and have throughout, I trust, presented the subject in its present state. In accordance with a wish which has been expressed by many, I have especially developed a chapter on the medical aspects of Hypnotism."
This is a work of over 400 pages, and is certainly very valuable. Price $1.50.

Hypnotism-Its Uses and Dangers Hypnotism, How It Is Doqe; Its Uses and Dangers. By James R. Cocke, M. D. Dr. Cocke has hypnotized altogether about one thousand, three hundred and fifty people. The greater part of these were Americans, some negroes, quite a number of French, a few Germans, and a few of the Northern races, such as Danes, Russians, etc. It has been his purpose to illustrate the differences in the hypnotic state as they occur in the various nationalities, and in that respect the work is very valuable. Price $1.50.

Its History and Present Development. Hypnotism-Its History and Present Development. By Fredrik Bjornstrom, M. D., Head Physician of the Stock-holm Hospital. This being a Swedish production, it will fit into your library very nicely, though you have all the other works on Hypnotism. Price 75 cents.

Mind and Body, Hypnotism and Suggestion.

Mind and Body, Hypnotism and Suggestion Applied in Therapeutics and Education. By Alvan C. Halphide, M. D., Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Hahnemann Modden Collage Illustrated This Medical College. Illustrated. This work treats of the Antecedents of Hypnotism; the Development of Hypnotism; the Methods of Hypnotizing; the Phenomena of Hypnosis; the Theory of Suggestion; Suggestion in the Waking State; Treatment in Natural Sleep; Clinical Hypnotism; Suggestion and Education; Danger in the use of Suggestion; Criminal Suggestion. Really, the work is very valuable. Price $1.00.

Rationale of Mesmerism. The Rationale of Mesmerism. By A. P. Sinnett. This work, too, is worthy of great praise as it contains the results of the labors of a master mind. It treats of Old and New Theories; the Mesmeric Force; the Real Literature of Mesmerism; Side Lights on Mesmeric Phenomena; Curative Mesmerlsm; Anesthetic Effects and Rigidity; the Nature of Sensitiveness; Clairvoyance and Mesmeric Practice. Price $1.25. Suggestion-A Gold Mine.

Now we present a work of mar velous utility, one that should be care-fully studied. It contains a mine of valuable information. Its title is as follows: Treatment by Hypnotism and Suggestion; or Psycho Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D. In this work, the new method, "Treatment by Suggestion," is exhaustively considered. Every branch of the subject is discussed in a masterly manner. Every healer should have it. Every physician will find it invaluable. Every one who wishes to become proficient in hypnotism will find it a valuable auxiliary in the work. Price $3.00.

Mental Suggestion From the French.

Mental Suggestion. By Doctor J. Ochorowicz, Professor of Psychology and Nature Philosophy in the University of the Unive ty of Lemberg. Translated from the French. The ablest work, probably, ever published in France on the above subject. It is certainly very valuable, and no one can read it without having his knowledge vastly increased. The author says: "Hypnotism is henceforth part and parcel of Science, and Suggestion, which produces most of its won ders, no longer surprises us." Price $2.

An Experimental Study. An Experimental Study in the Domain of Hypnotism. By Dr. R. von Kraft-Ebing, Professor of Psychiatry and Nervous Diseases in the Royal University of Graz, Austria. Translated from the German. This book gives the best German thought on Hypnotism. It will prove valuable in every library. Price $1,25.

If you wish to have a complete library on Hypnotism and kindred subjects, purchase the twelve books above mentioned. Indeed a single one of the volumes above named will prove of great value to every reflective mind. For sale at this office.

"SPIRITS IN PRISON."

A Ciairvoyant's Vision of an Entombed Spirit.

The new method of entombing a casket at the bottom of its grave may be an added reverence to the dead body but it is also an added effort to resurrect the living spirit that is sometimes buried with the body, as related by a clairvoyant, who witnessed such a "res-

·To make it graphical, I will endeavor to give it as received: "A near acquaintance of mine once passed away in whom I had sufficient

Interest to follow in spirit. "For forty-eight hours I centered my clairvoyant powers on him at intervals trying to catch a glimpse of him, even attending the funeral for that purpose. "The latter was a very solemn affair and attracted a large concourse; for the departed had many friends, being a man of the world and of good repute, but entirely ignorant of things spiritual. Despite my presence till the grave was filled I could see nothing and returned home minus the experience so much craved. But during the night after the interment I was suddenly awakened by a feeling of terror, and in the moment thought it was caused by the presence of the spirit looked for in conformity with other experiences of that "I screwed on my clairvoyant vision -a sort of penetration or peering ing through the atmosphere at short range-but to my surprise it was car ried noiens volens away from me and extended to the cemetery and to the grave in question. Around the latter were assembled some seven or eight spirits, two of which I immediately recognized—one a former medium of my wn, giving directions, and the others lifting the departed from his grave. I could plainly see by their efforts that they were having a difficult task, and even heard one remark that these new-fangled tombs were a nuisance, and gave them unnecsessary labor under circumstances as these.

"As soon as the subject was extricated, all the spirits withdrew as though they did not wish to be seen. For a few moments the newly-arisen seemed dazed, then looking around, wondered what brought him there. But as he located himself, he started for the pathway, returning via the route he had been conveyed

'Upon reaching the gate he somewhat surprised and vexed to find t locked. But presently noticing a turn-Sole he made his exit. When fairly oyliside he looked up and down the road r the street car that passes there during the day; and seeing none he took a direct course to the main road, they ran all night. As he boarded a homeward bound car, I got a glimpse of the two spirits I recogclined plane and etherealizing as they vanished from sight; and the next moment I saw two others emerging from the cemetery in whom I recognized intimate friends of the departed, several years in spirit. But as my interest was centered on the subject in question I followed him homeward.

"He alighted from the car at the right corner, soon reached the gate of his residence, walked up the path leading to it, ascended the broad stairway to the stoop and entered the house. with him in spirit I saw him go into the sitting-room, seat himself in a corner, take off his shoes and substituted them with a pair of slippers. He then arose, walked into the hall as though looking for his people, but seeing none he seemed puzzled, then looked down upon himself and noticed that he had on his dress suit. This seemed to puzzle him still more, and I imagined I could sense him say mentally that he only wore that on funeral occasions, but whose was i

"Then shaking his head as though disconcerted he returned to the sitting room, stretched himself upon a sofa and went to sleep. While sleeping three bright spirits entered, one I felt was his mother; but all three seemed cautious, only viewing from the head, and then in whispers retired again, as though they feared to frighten him. 'After a nap—the time of which did not come to me-he arose, walked out onto the stoop, seated himself in an easy chair, and peered meditatively down the path. But hardly was he comfortable, when the two spirits I last saw emerging from the cemetery, entered the front gate and began to walk leisurely towards the house and appar ently in earnest conversation with each other, without noticing our subject. But the latter saw the two visitors and recognized them as 'dead' friends. At the same instant such a feeling of terror overcame him, that he jumped up, ran into the house, ascended the stairs entered his bed-room, threw off his clothes, dropping them any where and hastened into bed, where he covered himself up. There I lost sight of him.

"Sensing his terror reminded me of my own, and wondered whether my vision wasn't a dream. But no, for not obtain the vision until after I awoke, being only one of the many of the same kind I had had under like and other circumstances. The terror which awoke me must have been caused by my guide to prepare me for the experience. But being the first in connection with the new art of entombing bodies, it gave me a light that should be heeded—a warning against that which must be detrimental to those who are ignorant of spiritual things and who live for this world only.

"From what I have seen, many spirits are temporarily buried with their bodies as many go down with those drowned. But while the percentage is small compared with those who enjoy an earlier release, it is also well to consider the few, and make conditions as favorable as possible for them, perchance they should be earthbound or very materialistic in thought.

Of course, matter does not affect spirits as they do mortals, but they suffer psychologically in the belief that they are entombed or drowned until released, when unable to free themselves by their own volition, as is readily done

TEXAS CONVENTION.

Seventh Annual Meeting of the Texas State Association.

The seventh annual meeting of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists met at the Spiritualists Hall, 206 West Sixth street, Austin, Texas, September 22, 23 and 24. The charters at Galveston, San Antonio, El Paso, Dallas, Marshall, Comanche and Austin were represented and a very good meeting was the result.

Galveston made report of the good work done there in their temple with President John W. Ring as regular speaker. San Antonio reported much good work accomplished by Mrs. Laura B. Payne. El Paso was loud in praise of the work done there by Harrison D.
Barrett. Dallas reported having held meetings the entire year with Rev. Nellie S.. Baade and Brother M. D. Tenney as speakers. Marshall and Comanche, though smaller places, reported the devotion of not a few; and Austin proved a very pleasant convention city, all members of the society exerting themselves to make the delegates comfort-

Mr. Shumate, representing Mayor R. E. White delivered a very cordial address of welcome, and Mrs. Laura B. Payne, who had just returned from a month's successful engagement at the Los Angeles, Cal., camp-meeting, very gracefully responded.

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale gave a very instructive address the second night, and Mr. Ring lectured the following Sunday night on "The Principles of Modern Spiritualism."

The reports of the several ordained ministers were an interesting feature of the convention. The constitution requires an annual report of official acts from those bearing certificates of or of meeting for next year. The officers for the coming year are John W. Ring, of Galveston, president; Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of San Antonio, vice-president; Mr. LeRoy Hutchings, of Galveston, secretary, and Wade M.

The convention heartily recommended that capable missionaries be employed during the year; and the administration desires to correspond with reputable, endorsed lecturers and message mediums who desire to spend a month or more in Texas. HISTORICAL FACTS.

Concerning the Deification of Roman Emperors.

In The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 1, I gave some historical facts in regard to the origin of Christianity, derived mainly from a recent book on the "Worship of Augustus Caesar." I now submit further extracts from the same, without comment, except to say that the aim of the author, Del Mar, is not against Christianity, but to establish the fact that several of the Roman em-perors were worshiped as Deities. "The first and most important article in the constitution of this empire was the extraordinary one of the emperor's deification. Both in Spain and in Gaul. Caesar must have heard of Hesus, the Messiah, whose effigy stood at every cross-road, whose crosses were worn upon the breast of every warrior, and whose second coming, which had long been predicted by the Druid astrolobers, coincided very closely with the period of his own invasion of those countries.

Following in the footsteps of the Macedonian conqueror, he permitted himself on Brumalia, or the winter solstice, A. U., 706, to be deified in the temple of Jupiter Ammon and hailed by its subservient priests as the Son of God, and it was in this same temple, after his death and pretended ascension to heaven that Octavius, the Augustus, his adopted son and successor, paid him the reverence due to God the Father.
"Divus Julius habuit pulvinar, simul-acrum, fastigium, flaminem, etc. The god Julius had shrines, an image, a steeple, priests, and so on. (Cicero's Oration, ii:106) * * * The temples of Caesar bore the appellation of Heroum Juleum, or Julian chapels, and contained his effigy and that of Venus, Mother of God. On certain occasions, in the exercise if his high pontifical office, he appeared in all the pomp of Babylonian costume, in robes of scarlet, with the crosier in his hand, wearing the mitre and bearing the keys.

"Augustus ascended the sacred throne of his martyred sire and was in turn addressed as the Son of God, whilst Julius was worshiped

Father. "The first bishop or chief priest of the Julian cult was Marc Antony. No person who fied to a temple of Julius for sanctuary could be taken from it for punishment, a privilege which had never been granted before, nor even to the temples and sanctuaries of Jupiter

* * * Under the Triumvirate and during the early portion of the reign of Augustus, the worship of Julius Caesar and the erection of temples, sanctuaries, shrines and altars consecrated to this worship was carried to all parts of the empire and enforced by precept, exam-ple and military power. Upon these altars costly offerings and bloody sacrifices were made. One of the latter consisted of three hundred senators and equites, who were coldly slaughtered by order of Augustus, upon the ides of March, A. U., 713, on a Julian altar at Perugia, to propitiate the god Divus Julius. This horrible rite celebrated the conclusion of the civil war, the ascension of Julius to heaven and the advent of Augustus as the Prince of Peace. In the time of Julius Caesar human sacrifices were only made to Mars; in that of Augustus they were made to

"The naming of one of the months of the year after the god Julius, which was done during the consulship of Marc Antony, is, by itself, no evidence of his deification; but the practice of other nations, the subsequent naming of a month after the deified Augustus, and the fact that the Romans never adopted any names in place of the ancient numerical names of the months, except the names of gods, lends it great significance. Many attempts were made to name the months after various emperors who followed Augustus, but they all failed. April was for a brief time called Neroius; May, Claudius, and June, Germanicus. Tiberius, who re-fused to be deifled, or worshiped as a god, also refused to permit his name to be substituted for November.

"Even the 'Son of God' did not appear to be a title sufficiently exalted to suit the devotees of the Augustus; and in numerous contemporary inscriptions both in Rome, Greece and Asia, he is termed Deos, or Theos, which means not the Son of God, nor one of the gods, but the living God, the Creator, Optimo Maximo. However, Divus Filius, Aesar (or Hesus) and Quirinus seem to have been the titles by which Octavius him-self preferred to be called.

"The worship of Augustus was not, as the ecclesiastical schools have insinuated, a mere lip-service; it was the worship of a personage who was lieved to be supernatural, omniscient, all powerful and beneficent, the reincarnation of Quirinus, the Son of the God Apollo and of the wife-virgin Maia; the god whose coming was foretold by the Cumaean Sibyl; whose sway was to extend over the whole earth; whose conception and birth were both miracu ous; and whose advent was to usher in the Golden Age of Peace and Plenty, and to banish Sin forever.

"Throughout all of Ovid's Letters Elegies, and Fasti he repeatedly addresses the then living Augustus' as God, or the Son of God, the Great Deity, the Heaven-born, the Divine, the Omniscient, the Beneficent, the Long suffering, the Mercitul God. The fact is unquestionable, not alone upon the testimony of Ovid, but upon that also of Virgil, Horace, Manilius Pliny, Suctonius and others. What is insisted upon is that Augustus Caesar, by his contemporaries, was believed to be, and was actually worshiped as a god, with bell, book, candle, steeple, frankincense, rosary, cross, mitre, ten ples, priesthood, benefices and ritual: in with all the outward marks of su perstition, credulity, plety and devotion "Some time after the reign of Justin

A Notable Medium Passed to Spirit Life

Mrs. Carrie A. Hazen, the well known symbolical medium, a native of Vermont, but for many years a resident of Ohio and for the last thirteen years a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, passed to spirit life from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Belle Spink, August 28, in the 86th year of her age. It was mainly through Mrs. Hazen's mediumship that her younger sister, Mrs. P. O. Hyzer, the highly gifted inspirational speaker, was introduced, and gained such a prominent position on the public rostrum. While Mrs. Hazen with her rare medial gifts, never graced the public platform, she accomplished great good in advancing the cause of Spiritualism through her many years of gratuitous work as a private medium, in appreciation of which Mrs. Abbie L. Pettengill, the wealthy president of the City of Light Assembly at Lily Dale, looked after her earthly comfort the past fifteen or more years.

Mrs. Hazen when in good health, made two requests—the first was for the cremation of her body after transi-tion; the second was that the writer should officiate at her obsequies. Circumstances so shaped themselves that the latter wish could not be carried out, but the first one was, and Mr. I. W. Pope, a mutual friend of both parties, conducted the funeral services at the Cleveland Crematory, where the re-mains were incinerated, a large number of friends being in attendance. Mr. Pope, after giving a sketch of her life, paid a high tribute to her great worth as a medium and a woman, having known the arisen one for many years. For such able and stangen workers as Mrs. Hazen and her sister, Mrs. F. O. Hyver, and other distributions. Hyzer, and other distinguished promoters of our cause, we should have a roll of honor to inscribe their names on. THOMAS LEES.

"The birth of Augustus was foretold not only by the Cumacan Sibyl, it was predicted by a divine oracle delivered n Ventre and by a prodigy that had happened publicly in Rome five or six months before the Nativity and was the occasion of the intended Slaughter of the Innocents, presently to be men-tioned. Before the Nativity, Maia dreamt/that her body was scattered to the stars and encompassed the universe. After the Nativity, Octavianus, her earthly husband, dreamt he saw the bright beams of the Sun emanate from her person; and when he sacrificed where Alexander the Great had former ly sacrificed and seen a miracle, name ly, a temple of Dionysius or Bacchus in Thrace, Octavianus saw a similar miracle: A sheet of flame ascended from the altar, enveloped the steeple and mounted to heaven. On the following night he dreamt he saw the infant Augustus grasping the thunderbolt and wearing the sceptre and robe of Jupiter, his head surrounded by a radiance of glory, and his chariot decked with laurel, while yoked to it were six steeds of pure white. When, before the Nativity the divine oracle at Velitre predicted that 'Nature was about to bring forth a Prince over the Roman people, the Senate passed an act, A. U. 692, ordering that 'No male child born that year should be reared or brought up.' Thus. every boy born within the Roman pale was devoted to destruction, and a frightful Slaughter of Innocents would have ensued, had not those who expected children, removed the tablets of the law from the walls of the aerarium, and thus defeated the atrocious edict When the sage and astrologer, P. Nigidius, learned that Atla had been delivered of Augustus, he openly proclaimed that the Lord of the Universe was born. While Augustus was yet an infant, he arose from his cradle at night, and next morning was found on the roof of the house, facing Apollo, or the rising Sun. On the city side of the house a multitude of frogs maintained a deafening clamor. So soon as Augus tus was old enough to speak, he com manded these animals to keep silence, and from that moment they were completely hushed. "To evince his humility, once a year, Augustus, veiled in the sacred pepium, stood at the porch of the Regia and re ceived alms from the pious. His apotheosis not only brought profound peace to the Roman world, so that the temple of Janus was permanently closed, it marked a new Aera. At his death, con-cludes Suetonius, 'there was not want-ing a person of pretorian rank who saw his spirit ascend to heaven. The name of this privileged witness was the senator Numericus Atticus. The Ascen sion of Augustus is engraved upon the great cameo, from the spoils of Con stantinople, presented by Baldwin II to Louis IX, ('Saint Louis,' King of, France 1226-1270), and now in the Cabinet of France. A fac-simile of it is published in Duruy's 'History of Rome.' "For defacing a coin which bore the effigy of Augustus the penalty was death, not because it was a coin but he cause it bore the image of the god." These extracts from Del Maris "Wor ship of Augustus," are all taken from the final chapten, VII, extitled "The Messiah."

[Continued from No. 723.] I now believed that I had imposed task upon my wife for which she was not prepared; that her weakened condition, coupled with her short stay in spirit land would not admit of her making the proper investigation, and that she had done all she could, and failed for some reason which it was impossi ble for me to now fully understand. I decided to ask no more such questions.

I now noticed a great increase in the eceived were on the clavicle bone and the great toe nail of my left foot, but now they came on my hat, on my shoe-soles, on my bedstead, and on the walls, and all without any regularity. It was impossible for me to converse with the spirits making them; they thumped and banged away as long as they desired, and then quit. As these manifestations died away, another one came. I could feel that some one other than my wife was getting control of my right arm and hand. With this spirit came a good influence. I did not fear him in the least, and encouraged him to take control as fast as possible. In a short time he could raise my hand to my breast and smite thereon, in this way I could converse with him. He would smite one, two or three in reply to my questions, the same as when conversing by means of the raps.

This spirit seemed to be ever presup at once, so I could talk with him at all times and at any place. I could energy of the good spirit, as well as that of my wife, was gradually weaken-

Now let me ask you to be patient. Do not become anxious to know how my fight with those evil ones progressed. I must go back and give you more history of my experience, in order that you may profit withal, and I promise you that when we arrive at the subject proper, you SHALL HEAR OF DEVILS OF A REAL AND PERSONI FIED KIND, AND OF A KIND WHICH YOU NEVER HAVE HEARD BEFORE. The newly discovered element, Ra dium, by Madame Sklodowska-Curie, a Parisian lady of scientific attainments, seems to be the marvel of the incoming 20th century. This substance refuses to fit into our present chemical system. It stubbornly refuses to obey all our carefully framed laws governing mat-ter. It even threatens to compel a complete revision of scientific teaching unquestioned during the last century; and of course becomes a topic of general discussion in our secular press and especially so in the scientific journals.

The paramount question involved is whether this new discovery will entire ly set aside as faliacious the Dalton the Let me tell you that the first raps ory of the atom as being the ultimate unit of matter and indestructible in character-or not. The conclusions arrived at from the study of this phenomenal radio-active substance, seems to have caused a stampede of eminent scientists from the old into a "New Chemistry." Another stubborn question or rather phenomenon to be explained is the radia-tion of force without the co-ordinate disintegration of substance and apparent loss of mass; this is a challenge to the truth of Faraday's statement: "That nowhere is there a pure creation or production of power without a correspond-ing exhaustion to supply it." This phenomenon of radio-activity has caused a change of conception as to the nature and character of the atom and the part it plays in chemical activity, which has

KADESH BARNEA.

The Beginnings of Society and Civiliza-

NO. 724.

With the sole exception of Horeb, Kadesh Barnea was the most important station of the Israelitish exodus, between Egypt and the Jordan. After receiving the tablets of the Decalogue, Moses led his people direct from Sinal to that anglest seat of religion and re-Moses led his people direct from Sinal to that ancient seat of religion and repository of sacred writings—a distance of eleven marches from Horeb, by way of the Mount Seir caravan route, as we are told in the book of Deuteronomy, 1:2. He did not resume his forward movement towards the land of Canaan movement towards the land of Canaan for a period of about thirty-eight years. Kadesh was his headquarters until the new generation had reached maturity, and the old had passed away. Then he reassembled the tribes for a renewal of of the journey which had been so long interrupted. The place derives its chief historic interest for us from the fact that it was practically the residence of Moses for a full generation. Of the movements of the tribes during that period the record is almost totally silent, indicating that it is not a matter of much significance. During his long residence there, we may reasonably suppose that he wrote a large part of the books composing the Pentateuch, since the exigencies of the long march from Egypt to the Jordan would furnish little opportunity for literary work. Unfortunately history supplies very ittle specific information concerning this interesting place, whose geography was was long in dispute; but the few. references found in the Mosaic writings, and especially the two names by which it was successively known, furnished nish fruitful suggestions to supplement our scant sum of knowledge. The first mention of the place made by Moses may be found in Genesis, fourteenth chapter and seventh verse. The chapter opens with a history of the military campaign of Chedorlaomer and his allies, to reduce his rebellious subjects in the West to due subjection. This interesting bit of history dates itself in Abraham's time, after he had reached the land of Canaan, and is the first appearance of the Assyrians as conquerors on a large scale. The invaders marched from Damascus southward, over the caravan route still known as the Hajj road to Mecca. At the head of the eastern arm of the Red Sea, known as the Gulf of Akaba, Chedorlaomer turned his course northward and struck out direct for En Mishpat, "Which is Kadesh," over the ancient caravan route from Arabia Felix to Sidon and the other Phoenician cities of the north. It is evident that the army pursued an ancient and welldefined route, where water was sure to be found.

There can be little doubt that the route followed by Moses from the head of the Gulf of Akaba to Kadesh was substantially the same as that pursued by Chedorlaomer five hundred years earlier. Their point of departure from the Red Sea was practically the same, and their destination was Both would naturally follow a route known to have a sufficient supply of water. The caravan routes of that region were ancient and well known in tne time of Abraham.

It is to be inferred that En Mishpat was a place of some consequence as a strategical point, even in the time of Chedorlaomer. It was a conspicuous and important oasis in the midst of extensive deserts. But its importance from a military standpoint is of little consequence at this day. Yet En Mishpat has never lost its historic interest. But its importance as one of the sacred places of a date anterior to the time of Abraham has scarcely been recognized. The name by which it was first known indicates that it was much more than a mere strategical position for an Assyrian despot. It indicates that it was a sacred or holy city from its foundation. The name En Mishpat signifies a "place of judgment." In time of remote antiquity, when books were rare and limited to sacred writings, they were deposited in certain places where they were entrusted to the care and keeping of the priesthood. Those books. the Mosaic writings and like the Kuran. contained the code of laws by which the tribes were governed, and the priests vere the interpreters and expounders of the law. There was no other source from which laws were derived. Their codes were of divine origin. All judgments and all civil authority emanated from the place where the books were deposited. Hence "The place of books" or "The place of judgment" was the central place of light and of civil and religious life of the tribe or nation. It was something more than a municipal seat as we reckon it. Kadesh has a similar signification. It signifies a holy city or place, that is, a place where the holy books are deposited, and the laws interpreted, and judgments rendered therefrom by the authorized priesthood. The En Mishpat of Abraham's time was the Kadesh Barnea of the time of Moses. That is to say, it was the holy city of the nomad tribes of that region. There were other Kadeshes, other holy cities. The Amorites had a ka desh at the sources of the Jordan. The northern Hittites had their Kadesh on the shore of the Orontes. There their sacred writings were deposited, and there justice and judgment were administered. The name Court House as used in some states has a like signification as Kadesh, except that the idea of the divine origin of laws and judgments has been lost-more is the pity of it. The opinion is commonly prevalent that Jehovah God first declared and manifested himself to Moses in the burning bush at the base of Horeb, "the mountain of God." It is also commonly believed that Moses received, on the stone tablets of the Decalogue, the first written revelation from God to man. It should seem no less than a monstrous assumption that civilized man had lived and flourished upon the face of the earth for many ages without a revelation from God of the laws of or-

OGGULT MYSTERIES.

The Methods, the Work, the Workers, Affidavit Made to Weird Tale From and the Place of Worship of the Most Unique Society and Building in the World.

Located in one of the prettiest of the many spots in that Mecca of Spiritualists, Onset Bay, a society composed of earnest men and women has for the last decade, been laboring in what is verily a work of love. In their place of worship, which in itself is unique in the eyes of the average church-goer, meetings have been held twice a day from June 15 to September 15 for the healing of mankind and for giving to the world such messages of love, cheer, and counsel as would come through the inspired lips of the workers.

The society is known as the On-i-set Wigwam Co-workers, whose objects the world. Pictures of famous Indians are seen in the collection, as well as battle-axes, tomahawks, hows and arrows, and other each article is an inscription, giving name and data concerning it. Scattered about among the relics are pictures painted by the president, Mrs. The top of the building was torn ope Weston, whose reputation as an artist is well known. While the lady is a thorough artist and has painted hundreds of pictures, she has never accepted money for a single one. Her cozy summer home, "Ramona," on West Central avenue at Onset, is filled with samples of her work, and friends can also testify to her generosity in dispensing her works of art. The stars and stripes are constantly waving over the building.

The Work.

Meetings are held at nine o'clock in the morning for healing, and at four in the afternoon for the reception of any messages that may come. While the wigwam will seat but about one hun-dred and sixty, two hundred people have been present at the meetings during the busy season. The success of the work has been phenomenal and has far exceeded the expectations of its originators, with the result that it is hoped to enlarge the building in the near future. One of the beauties of the work is the fact that begging by the organization is unknown. It has its annual fair as do all such societies, but money is seldom mentioned in the meetings. The expenses of the work are met individually by the members, and if at any time there arises a sudden call for money, the treasury is in excellent condition, and the members are most gen-The president, who is devoting her life to the work, never allows an opportunity for the society to do good to pass, for if necessary, she will supply any deficiency from her private funds. The Workers.

The workers in the society come from all classes: from the humble laborer to the lady or gentleman high in financial and social circles. They come from all parts of the Union, and from all parts of the Union also, come words of cheer and encouragement. They are strong believers in silent work, and it is one of the features of the morning's devotional work for the members and guests to sit in the silence for a few moments that their thoughts and strength may go out to the ill and wearled friends whose names have been handed in and read. Everybody is welcomed to the meetings, and all feeling the impulse may take a part. The member of the Gazette staff who has been selected to write the story or history, is Russ H. Gilbert, who has been connected with this paper since May. Mr. Gilbert's qualifications for the work are unquestioned, as he has a personal acquaintance with the people whom he will write about, understands the work of the society, and is a newspaper man of much experience. Aside from newspaper work, he has written for the various Spiritualist and New Thought papers, and in 1898, wrote for the Brockton Enterprise, a series of five articles upon "Spiritualism" bringing to liberal thought a broader and more tolerant hearing. He has just published by the Gazette Publishing Co., three companion pieces entitled 'The Cry of the Human," and is also the author of a book of verse, entitled "Heart Beats of Humanity."

THE DUALITY OF MATTER. CAMP AND OTHER NOTES.

Does the Whole World Exist in Dupilcate?

The "duality of matter" may be a phrase which has not been used before. As to this, the writer does not know But the idea which it represents will be come a household word during the twentieth century, will occupy the time of hundreds of experimentalists and be the subject of thousands of the vol-umes which will be written.

We are all familiar with the idea of the duality of man. St. Paul said: "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body," and this has even been a basic idea in all theology.

Emerson said that the healthy-minded man is not curious concerning immortality. This is perfectly true. The only people in the world that are personally interested in immortality are devout believers in religion and those that have loved and lost. Love is ever beating its wings against the barrier of death, and there is plenty of ground for the infinite sweetness and sadness of the belief that this beating takes place on both sides of the barrier,

The search for truth, however, is an entirely different matter. Its social importance is immense. If the salvation and regeneration of society does not lie in the solution of these problems, no thinking man can tell where it does lie.

Assuming, then, that the duality of man is a fact, the duality of all things would seem to be probable for this reason: The scientific advance of the last five years has broadened and expanded our view of life force until it now embraces all matter.. That the force underlying life and the force underlying crystallization are identical no man can now reasonably doubt. The lowers in a Winter window, and the living flowers which we know, illustrate this. And the earth on which we live is almost entirely composed of crystals.

If the duality of matter is a fact, if all things from pebbles to planets have a spiritual as well as a material body, it would seem that students and observers must somewhere have run across this truth and made some records which will serve as evidence. The mass of this evidence is surprising. Some years ago the writer, in reading over the scientific psychological record, was struck by the fact that spirits or apparitions, or whatever the reader chooses to call them, always wore clothes. In no record which exists has anybody ever seen a spirit without them.

In a Madeira case a hard-headed Englishman, from Grimsby, who had never heard of Spiritualism or psychology, woke up at night and saw a young man by his bedside. Thinking him a real person, he told the young man to get out, and not being answered, rose up in bed and struck at him, whereupon the young man faded away, seeming to pass through the door. The Englishman told the story next morning, and some older guests of the hotel'knew that a young man answering the description had died in that room some months before. They quietly induced the Englishman to look up a lot of photographs. He instantly picked out the young man who had died as his visitor, but said: "He didn't have these clothes on. He was dressed in a suit of flannels." He had never known or heard of the young man or of his clothes. In a Minnesota case a farmer died suddenly in a town to which he had been driven, and, not being identified, was taken to the morgue. The coroner clothed him in a complete suit of black for burial and he was buried. This suit included black satin slippers. Great love existed between the farmer and his only daughter. The daughter saw an apparition of her father, who gave her a message with which we are not here concerned and which turned out to be true. The point is that she had never seen him in black and described him exactly as the coroner had dressed him, even including the black satin slippers, which were an unusual detail which she could not have invented.

There are many of these cases. In fact, if anybody comes to the conclusion that man has a spiritual body he will be forced to believe at the same time that clothes also have a spiritual counterpart. As with clothes, so with other objects and with every variety of objects. It really seems, taking all the contribu tory evidence, as if the whole world may exist in duplicate. That the spiritual being moves about in a spiritual world, having cognizance of persons, towns, landscapes in their spiritual sense, exactly as with our material bodies, we have cognizance of them to our material sense. If one accepts any of the evidence at all, this ultimate conclusion becomes unavoidable. Instances could be quoted so numer ously as to fill, in small print, this entire page, if not this entire paper, that would go to show that disembodied per sonalities not only retain full posses sion of their senses, in some nonmate rial way, but that all terrestrial things have a spiritual thought-constitution by which they impress the spiritual senses in the same way as in life. The The duality of matter, therefore, appears to be a specific problem ripely waiting for authoritative investigation -H. W. J. Dam in Chicago American.

AS A LITTLE CHILD.

Oft through the dark my little one Comes stealing softly to my bed, To clamber in and cuddle down And on my bosom lay his head: hear him whisper coaxingly: "Please let me sleep with you to night";

And as he nestles close to me His childish fears are put to flight. Ah, if he knew how weak, how frail Am I in whom he puts his trust, How blindly and how oft I fail. How oft my face is in the dust.

He would not rush to me when fear Comes with her sable wings out spread; The faith he has when I am near Would cease to bring him to my bed Some day perchance they'll bring him

I long have slept, from visions free; And, weeping, they may leave him there

To lie serenely close to me Oh, may I hear him, trusting, say, As he is reaching upward then: 'Please father, I have come to lay My head upon your breast again." -S. E. Kiser.

My last hotes, i believe, left me at Battle Croek, Mich. I begin the writing of these on the train from Los Angeles, Cal., via Sacramento, Salt Lake City, Denver anti-Chicago, to White-water, Wia; Ours school opens next Week, and we, Mrs. Hull and myself, are after a long and hard summer's work rushing home to prepare for the work of the winter and spring. We learn that all of our last year's students, with one her two-dexceptions, are to return. Besides that we are to have several new students this year.

No earthly power can prevent the growth of this school. Those who have placed themselves in opposition to the school have great courage but are terribly deficient in point of discretion. They are the intellectual lineal descendants of those who opposed Roger Bacon, Galileo, and other of the world's educators. They will many of them live in the flesh to become ashamed of their work. Those who now assist the school with their influence and their means will always be proud of their

Of all the work I have ever undertaken, I am the most proud of my efforts to elevate the Spiritualists up to where they see the need of an integral education for their workers. Of all the longings I over had, I think the longings to see young Spiritualists receive that education which could nowhere be obtained in my young days, is the most holy. Of all the warfares ever made to prevent the progress of the truth, I think the one made in behalf of ignorance of any knowledge which cannot be obtained in our public schools the most unholy. Truly the that hath supped with me hath lifted up his heel against Such will learn by experience that Paul was right when he said, "for ye can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

I did not take my pen to talk about the school and its prospects but to give a kind of resume of my work since my ast report.

From Battle Creek I was summoned as a witness. After spending one day in court I went to the Marshalltown, Iowa camp meeting. I was astonished to find so good and so full a camp right almost in the very heart of the city. Besides the people who stopped at hotels and boarding-houses in the city, there were, I think, over thirty tents occupied before I left and many more to come. I predict a brilliant future for that camp. I spoke four times, and left the camp with many regrets on the part of the campers as well as myself.

He never speaks without saying something that (will make those who listen to him wiser and better. Such speakers are scarce and should be continually employed.

Here also were Mr. and Mrs. Folsom.
I saw none of his mediumship, but hers cannot easily be excelled. Thoroughly blindfolded, sheurread and answered hundreds of letters, some of them had never been within three rods of her. In all of this she made not one mistake It seems to me impossible that such mediumship could leave those who wit nessed it unconvinced.

From Marshalltown I went directly to Haslett Park, Mich. I heard good reports from that camp, but could not give a very flattering notice of what I witnessed there. The rain fell so constantly and so copiously during my stay there that the intervals between hard rains are hardly worth mentioing. Of course this made the audiences small. On Sunday morning the rain held up long enough to allow several hundred people to come in with teams and otherwise. On Sunday also the falling of the waters abated during the delivery of both of my discourses. With the exception of the last week I think that the camp at Haslett Park this year has been quite as successful as usual. The camp grounds are beautiful, and there seems to be no reason, except that there may not again be a camp of its former proportions.

Through the courtesy of good old Father Goff, the Spiritualists of Michigan own a good mediums' home, in Lansing. The next great difficulty will be to get our good and worn out mediums to consent to occupy it; especially under the conditions. Mediums generally object to being herded together like so many cattle. The most of them would prefer even a very small pension, and the privilege of selecting their own homes among their own friends. A mediums' home at Haslett Park has stood empty for several years and is likely to remain so. I am in favoreof a mediums' home if mediums can be trained to take to it, and then can he se educated as to tol-erate each others' idiosyncrasies. But should one or two get there who are controlled by Jesus Christ, and another who is controlled to say, as some do that Jesus nevel*existed, that would end the harmony. In Summerland, the place of all others where harmony was to be illistrated, just such a circumstance occurred; it resulted in a street fight. Such things prove that we cannot flock together very well. Let us all hope for the success of this mediums' home. home.

From Haslett Fark I went directly to Chicago, where I met Mrs. Hull, and, together We well to the Mineral Park, Los Angeles, Chilifornia, camp-meeting. So many have fourneyed across the continent that a flescription of the journey would not be of general interest. This journey out and back made my eighteenth time of crossing the continent to the Pacific Ocean.

nent to the Pacific Ocean.

Mineral Park is a new camping ground, and though two miles farther out than Sycamore Grove, the place of former camps, the cost of getting out on the trolley cars is no more, and the grove is much better adapted to campmeeting purpose than any other I have seen in California There is talk of having two camp-meetings in that grove next year. One in June and the early part of July, and one in the latter part of August and in the early part of September. One can but regret the inharmonies which prevent Harmonial Philosophers (?) from ments upon the Texts." Heston's working together, it is believed, how-drawings are incomparable, and excruworking together, it is believed, how-ever, that both camps will be largely attended.

This year, beside the local talent represented, the camp was eddressed by John W. Ring and Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Toxas; Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Prof. Eow-man, Mrs. Robeson, and others of Call-fornia, Mrs. Hull and myself.

Among the mediums who took part, were Mrs. Maude L. Von Freitag, Mrs. Cobb, formerly Mrs. Nickless, and others.

I came to the camp last year fully expecting to find in Mrs. Freitag a first-class fraud. I was offered every opportunity to investigate; she was not s fraud. I was written up, in a pamphlet, as receiving a consideration for seeing in her a genuine medium. This caused me to watch her more closely when she was in Whitewater in the early spring, and still more closely at Mineral Park camp than ever before. Whatever she may have been at other times, I would stake my life that she was not a fraud this year nor last.. A committee was selected to go upon the platform with her, and to watch her every move. The committee, non-Spiritualists as they were, were compelled to report that there was no fraud in what was done under their eyes. Mrs. Freitag is certainly one of the best mediums in the world. Those who accuse me of writing her or any other person up or down for place, position or money do not know me. They have not money enough to cause me to change the dotting of an i, or the crossing of a t unless it was deserved. Such accusations affect me as much as a fly alighting on an ox's horn would affect the ox.

The Mineral Park camp was one of the most harmonious, and one of the most harmonious, and one of the most successful camps I ever attended. All of the officers, I believe, with a single exception, were new to the business, and their failure was anticipated and foretold. But the camp was in every sense of the word successful, and all of the bills were paid in full. For the next year there is a slight change in the officers. Dr. Cobb is president. It is believed that the Doctor being a business man, and used to dealing with the public, will make the camp a greater success than ever before. Mrs. .Ashby, the former prestdent, is now secretary, and is adapted to the work. The California camps having to im port their speakers and mediums more than half across the continent costs much more than the eastern camps, but there is nothing in the east that beats it. Hoping for the future success of all our camps, I am, as ever,

'Camp-Meeting at the World's Fair. Spiritualists all over the world will be interested in the large camp to be held during the whole time of the World's Fair by the Missouri State Association

A suitable tract of land is being eased. There will be an auditorium tent to seat 3,000 persons. Also a first installment of five hundred comfortable tents 12x14, well floored, made of Army Duck, with larger ones as called for. We shall have the best speakers and mediums and give to all a hearty welcome. We desire it understood that this camp will be under the most capable business management we can procure; also there will be a genial and experienced platform president for the spiritual work.

Suitable committees will receive our distinguished foreign and home visitors who have already promised to be present and extend to all a hearty and fraternal greeting. Correspondence so-licited. DR. E. H. GREEN. 518 Commercial Building, St. Louis, Mo.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a califul comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many convertite Modern Spiritualism as this. The authors aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adiptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and commen sense, stad expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRA ST

THE CONTRAST consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish tederical Spiritualism, or find arguments against the Essumptions of Orthodoxy.

FOIGE and Matter By Ludwig Buechbook. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Religion of Spiritualism. Its Phenomena and Philosophy. By the Rev. Samuel Watson. This work was written by a modern Savior, a grand and noble man. Price, $1.00. A valuable book for the money.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. Avaluable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a plansiphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curlous. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price 81.

QUEER EXPERIENCES.

Convincing Demonstration at an Initial Seance.

Ex-Judge Copenhauer and myself met in Dr. Rickerson's office in the village of Roscoe, St. Clair county, Mo., not long igo. Dr. Rickerson has quite an amount were discussing the subject of New Thought-the power of mind over matter, thought transference, etc., and Thomson J. Hudson's theories of psychic phenomena. All of us agreed that the most of the authors that tried to explain all of the phenomena of the subconscious mind, failed. Ex-Judge Copenhauer said he had good reasons to believe that the most of it was of spirit-We asked him to state his reasons.

He complied with our request. I will state it in his own words as nearly as I can..

Judge Copenhauer's Narrative. When I was a young man I stopped at the hotel built by Captain Burgess (now occupied by Mrs. Burch of this town), working at the carpenter's trade. Captain Burgess had two grown-up daughters that I was on friendly terms At the time I am talking about, the newspapers were full of ghost stories, spiritual manifestations, etc. One even ing one of the girls asked me if I believed there was any truth in the stories. I told her I did, if testimony had any value. She said: "Why could it not occur here as well as other places?" I told her it could if conditions were favorable, and people would investigate it as they would any other subject that they wanted to find the truth about; not judge the case before it was tried. They both became anxious that would get up a seance, and try to get some manifestations. I consented, but made them promise to never ask me again to call the spirits, as there was something uncanny about it that I did To tell the truth about it, I had never attended a seance, but was simply planning to have some fun. I knew nothing about mediumship, but knew that the bureau top was loose that stood in the parlor. By pressing on it, it would crack as though some one was tapping

I decided to hold my circle at the bureau. The only thing that was on the bureau was an old clock. It was a relic that had been handed down from former generations. I got me a splinter and slipped in the bureau top to prevent it from cracking when I did not want it to crack.

The night we sat in that circle I shall never forget. I was surprised a great deal more than they were. I called old Captain Burgess in and told him to examine the bureau to see that there was no chance to play any trick.

He ransacked every drawer and said he could find nothing that any trick could be performed with. I called the family up and told them to place their hands on the top of the bureau. I let them sit a while before I extracted my wedge and invoked the spirits to visit us. At this stage of the proceedings my conscience began to smite me, to think I was making fun out of as serious a thing as death; and to call on friends that were on the other side of the stream of life to make manifestations looked like a hollow mockery to me. But I had started the game and must be the chief player, or back down. I concluded to go on with the deception that night, but never play it again. I said in a solemn voice: "If there are any spirits present, please make some manifestation." Crack, crack, went the bureau without any of my assistance. That gave me quite a shock as well as the other parties. I was satisfied there was truth in the manifestation, and I would not play the deceiver, but let the force that was making the bureau rap, take charge of the game.

After the astonishment wore off a little we began to ask questions. The anwere satisfactory in most cases. Whilst they were asking questions I happened to turn my eyes towards the old clock. To my utter astonishment the hammer drew back as though it was going to strike the bell, but went back slowly. The thought occurred to me, would that clock strike if I requested it to. The hammer drew back again and went as slowly back.

I was convinced that it would, and asked the parties in the circle if they were not convinced that spirits rapping? Old Captain Burgess said "he was not. It was electricity generated by having our hands on the top of the I asked him if electricity possessed intelligence and understood the English language? He said, No; if the bureau had spoken any English he had not heard it."

Said I, "Captain, if I would request my spirit friends to make the old clock strike would you believe spirits did it?" "Yes," he replied, "or the devil, for it has not run for forty years." "Well," said I, all of you express i strong desire to know the truth and be convinced without any doubt whatever, and it shall be fulfilled. Close your eyes and pray for light." They sneered at this. I said, "It doesn't make any difference if you jeer. My spirit friends have power enough without your aid." "Spirit friends," said I, "to convince these sneering skeptics, please cause the old clock on the bureau to strike."

Bang! she went, and they fled in ev ery direction. I went, too. Instead of striking one it kept pealing away. I went upstairs. Old Captain Burgess yelled at me to come down and stop that old clock. I screamed back at him, "I cannot control the spirits."

It struck one hundred and four times after I began to count. How many more I do not know, before I began to

The next morning the household ooked at me with an eye of wonder. None of them looked as though they had had very refreshing sleep. I had not slept very soundly myself, yet I was not frightened. I was amazed be-cause I had been skeptical about immortality. The truth dawned on my mind that death was not an eternal sleep; that our friends might be near us and our dull eyes could not see them, nor our dull ears catch the loving mes sage they wished to convey to us who are still in the flesh, unless we made the conditions favorable. "Boys, I have told you the sober truth. You can view it as you choose," Judge Copenhauer is a Republican, but was elected judge in a county that is Democratic. He suffered imprisonment rather than sign bonds that would saddle an unjust debt on the people. This will show that he is a responsible man

Spiritualists, we do not know of a sin gle thing in science, in the arts, in the domain of physics, in medicine or re ligion, that has attained perfection. Imperfection everywhere-perfection nowhere, so far as one can discern. Such being the case, it is well to be charitable of the opinions of others. It is wel to be kind, generous, forbearing, trusting that the right will triumph, and that the world will advance in the right direction; hence we say, PREPARE FOR THE FEAST-prepare for a rich treat in the next and succeeding issue of The Progressive Thinker.

The Great Psychological Crime which has stirred up a veritable intellectual cyclone of diverse views, comments and criticisms, will afford the grand basis for the delectation of the intellectual giants ranged pro and con.

The forthcoming numbers of The Progressive Thinker will be among the most instructive and interesting ever issued.

The articles cannot fall to be rea with intense interest by every medium and every Spiritualist, and every one interested in Spiritualism as an investigator, a would-be believer, or an opposer. They will stir thought in our ranks, and we have no doubt will result in good to our cause.

Ours is the Hermit Nation.

Wm. E. Curtis, the distinguished correspondent of the Record-Herald of this city, makes a sorrowful showing of the working of our Chinese exclusion laws. Whilst the object of the law was to shut out cheap labor from competing with American industry, he shows in its workings, it excludes by strict and even strained interpretation, "students, teachers, merchants and travelers," class of people it seemed to have been the intention of the law to favor.

Mr. Curtis cites facts in support of his statement, and says we are quarrelher government intends to shut us out of the ports of Manchuria, while we are closing our ports against China, though that government has appropriated $600. 000 to nav for the display of Chinese productions at the St. Louis exposition. It would be supposed the policy of the United States is to allow the youth of China to visit America, learn our language, our manners and customs, to the end that our trade with the oldest empire on the globe would be facilitated. and our civilization would be imitated. Instead: By our exclusion laws, so far as China is concerned, we are the hermit nation. We desire to traffic with her people, but it must be on her soil, through American agents who understand our language, and not through theirs, who are, by absurd decisions, denied an opportunity to learn our tongue. Mr. Curtis cites the following facts to show the unjust workings of our lows: "Last fall Mr. Tong, one of the wealthiest merchants in Shanghai, sent his son to the United States to secure an American education. He brought certificate furnished him by the tatal of that city, verified by Mr. Goodenow, the United States consul, in perfect form, but he was sent back to China on the pretext that the explanation of his purpose in visiting the United States indefinite. The certificate described him as a student, but did not state what branches he intended to study. The Treasury Department took all that trouble to prevent an honest young man obtaining an education. Young Mr. Tong employed an attorney to contest the case, and paid $2,000 in fees and costs, but the immigration inspector was sustained by the Secretary of the Treasury, and this young man, whose only offense was a desire to take advantage of the schools of this country, in order to increase his usefulness was treated like a criminal or a lunatic or an anarchist and prohibited from landing. And yet we pretend to be a great civilized, Christian nation."

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

Homes and Books in the Spirit World.

I think this time I will tell you, my dear grandson, of the home to which my father and I returned after partaking of the bath in the spiritualized waters of which I told you some time ago, hoping that the thoughts which I am about the given will decrease. about to give will do some one some good, as they pertain to the truth and nothing but the truth.

After we had reached the house we entered first a room, I should say that it was facing the South and West, as it was a corner room. Within this room there were a number of nice large windows, by which there were seats of different kinds, upon which any one who might wish, could sit and rest or

In one of the corners of the room there was a plane, in the center of the room there was a table upon which there were placed pictures and books. In the south-east corner of the room there was a handsome bookcase which was filled with choice literature to be used by any one who might want to gather wisdom and truth regarding the spiritual world, as well as how to make the conditions of earth better.

There were books which would help a newly-born spirit to gather wisdom and understanding, and when that spirit had made advancement or had mastered their teachings, or was in the condition so that these books would be of no great value to them, they are generally taken away, and placed at the disposal of some other spirits, who might be getting a home ready for some of their dear ones, who may be almost ready to come to the spirit life, or it may not be any of their very own, but some stranger that they are getting a home ready for, for we in the spiritual world do not confine our work to our very own, but work gladly for one another and for those who are worthy of

There are many whom we are most riters are many whom we are most willing and anxious to help, that may be considered in the eyes of those in earth life not worthy, or far below the high standard of man and womanhood. But, friends, they many times have noble thoughts and desires, of which the world knows nothing. They are compelled by their surroundings to remain in the condition from which they have no power to remove themselves, and for that reason we do not confine our work to our very own but to every one who is worthy of our help.

When the books have been disposed of for some good purpose, their place is filled with other books of a more advanced nature, which perhaps another spirit has got through with, as the new-ly-born spirits are through with the books which they find waiting for them on their arrival at their spiritual home.

Let me say to those of earth, those who desire and wish to do so need not wait until they pass through the change called death, before they can read and study books of a spiritual nature, for there are a great many spiritual books which can be obtained at different publishing houses, which have been writ-ten by spirits through the aid of mediums, and there will be many more. Knock at the door of spiritual wis dom and it will open unto you, my friends. Do not wait until you pass through the change of death before you try to become acquainted with spiritual things, but commence now to learn what you can of the country, its beauties and its people, before you go there where you expected to make your home, would you not have the desire to read spiritual world? There may be some uncertainty of your going to a foreign land while in earth life, but there is no uncertainty of cannot be otherwise if you would have it so.

So, Irlends, I would advise you to learn as much as you can, and by so do-ing save a great deal of time when you get over here, and not have to study and learn that which you might as well have done while on earth. But I will go on telling you a little more about the house in which I was to stay for some time. Back of the room that I have told you about was a smaller one in which, to my delight, I saw the likenesses of many o the dear ones (whom I loved and did still love) who remained on earth, and it was a great joy to me to know that the tie of love was not severed even though I had passed through what was called death. My father said, to this room I could come when I wished to be alone or needed rest-for spirits want to rest and be alone at times, as well as you of earth, especially those that have not been in the spirit life very long.

From this room we went upstairs to the rooms which strangers were to use should they want to tarry with us for a while

Above these rooms were, what I will call a roof garden, although I never saw one while on earth.

I call it a roof garden because there vere a great variety of plants and flow ers which I cannot describe, for their beauty and loveliness surpassed anything I had ever seen.

. Within or among these flowers were placed easy chairs of different kinds for those who wanted to, could read talk, visit, or view the grandeur of na ture which lay before them not as you behold it on earth, but as it is unfolded before us in the spiritual world or realm. After staying there for a little while,

Friends, I will not now tell more o what was said or done at that time, but hope to at another time. Trusting that I have told you some things which will benefit the world, as I am for truth, and the advancement of the spirit.

"I live! O ye who loved me! Your faith was not in vain: Back through the shadowy valley I come to you again. Safe in the love that guides me, With fearless feet I tread-My home is with the angels-

Pittsburgh, (Pa.) Spiritualists. To the Editor:—Your bright and enterprising journal meets with much favor with our people as you may presume from the number of copies seem The Pittsburg organization of Spiritualists is a large and flourishing Miss Margaret Gaule opened our season of regular services on September 6. Her work this month seemed to surpass all previous efforts with our society. She has been a worker on our rostrum a portion of every season during the past six years. Her platform tests carry force and conviction that rarely falls to the lot of mortals to give to the lot of mortals to give.

The gates of heaven seemed to swing wide open. Our large auditorium could not accommodate the anxious seekers after truth; scores turned away. Added interest was shown in our meetings during the month through the assistance rendered by Brother Richard F. Tischer of our own society. He spoke from 20 to 30 minutes each Sunday evening. His inspirers are fluent and expressive, teaching pure and prac-tical spiritual truths. If his guides continue to handle him aright we bespeak for him a successful future, and good credit to Spiritualism.

Miss Gaule closed her month's engagement September 27, to return to her New York Society, where she is permanently employed. We doubt it there are any in public work as there are any in public work on the Spiritualist rostrum to-day that have more appreciative friends and admirers than Miss Gaule. She is kind and be-nevolent. Appreciating our efforts to raise church funds she kindly offered an extra evening seance which netted $24.50. God bloss her.
One of our wealthy members desiring that our cause should stand in the minds of our Pittsburg people where it belongs, offered to contribute a sufficient amount to guarantee first payment on a church where we could com-mand the proper recognition of all classes. A substantial proposition was made; we seized the opportunity. A real estate agent was applied to, who soon found a large two-story brick church situated on Boquet street, which is in the residence section of our great city overlooking the famous Schenley Park and Carnegie Library. It has a large room on the first floor suited to lyceum and Ladies Aid work, with every convenience capable of Beating 800 people. The large auditorium upstairs with its complete equipment of pews, chairs, platform and side rooms. makes it an ideal Spiritual church. Contractors estimate the total value at $30,000. Certainly we did not agree to pay that much for it, but the amount agreed upon was nearly all raised within one week. Even if we owe $5,000 the interest at 5 per cent would be less than half our present rental. Prospects look bright. We have weighed the costs from a business standpoint, and fear no defeat in our purpose to own our own beautiful church. The deed is being prepared the title examined, and we shall make final settlement so we can dedicate Nov. 1. If Spiritualists would assert their rights success would be ours everywhere. Too many are afraid of their shadow, fearing it is the spook that their neighbor might criticise. If a man will not respect his own convictions, no one else will.

Brother Clegg Wright began his engagement October 1. He has a multitude of friends here, who recognize his genius as an orator and philosopher. He is greeted with large congregations, which testify to his able and interesting discourses.

L'THE BURSTING OF THE SHELL: THE CREED OUTGROWN.

A Short Story, Founded on Fact. By Dr. J. H. Randall.

About fifty years ago Jacob Ormsby and his wife, Jane, leved, for she made his home as much of a paradise as it is young men were respected by all who knew them.

The Ormsbys were quiet, unassuming and industrious ience, good order and neatness. Jacob and Jane lived altist church. During childhood, having been surrounded with the influence of pious people, it came natural to them to be ardent and devotional workers for Christianity as they understood it. It was their aim to practice every duty imposed upon them by the discipline of the creed and church.

At the time of their conversion, their boys were aged respectively, six and nine years. Religious exercises, consistthe household head. With mild but steadfast persuasivethe church.

twenty-first birthday, both boys listened to what was said to them quietly; Jerry occasionally would say in reply, "Father," or "Mother," whichever it happened to be that cornered him, "I don't think as you do."

The home was often visited by the leading members of the church as well as the pastor, and every winter a revival was inaugurated and conducted from ten to thirty days, at which the father, mother and the boys were nearly always present. They were invariably hospitable to their visitors, them; but the boys never exhibited any serious interest, and were apparently indifferent to all these efforts made to make them hear the doctrines of the religion professed by people, which had been formulated by the John Calvin and their parents. As regularly as Sunday came, parents and boys usually went to church together, unless sickness in the man, total depravity of every human being born, the inevitfamily or duty to a sick neighbor prevented; and this con- able destruction of infants, and the certainty of eternal mistined until Jerry left home, and after that time until Oliver passed his twenty-first birthday.

life, he got the horses and carriage ready for the family, which then consisted of himself and parents, to go to church, as that had been his especial chore for some time previously. Having assisted his mother into the carriage and given the reins to his father, he turned and went into the house, instead of taking his seat with them to ride to church. His father stood waiting for him several minutes, under the impression that he had forgotten something that he wanted, but as he did not return, he called, "Come, Olly, don't keep us waiting, its time to go."

Coming to the door of the house he had entered, Oliver replied: "I don't care to go to church to-day, father. to stay at home and read."

"You don't want to go to church, and you're going to stay and authority was about to be antagonized.

"There's nothing the matter with me, father, except I do not think as you do about it."

"I am a man, father," said Oliver. His face, eyes and manner revealed that burning thoughts manly form, being over a head taller than his father and broad in proportion, came to meet him. When within about three feet of each other they stopped simultaneously, and gazed into each other's eyes. Bitter as was the idea to him of accepting the inevitable, he however, so fully realized that his son in a physical sense at least, had the best of the argument, that he turned from him, entered the carriage and drove off. The loss of his dear ones, and the breaking up of his family circle had the effect to draw him frequently to his mother.

Jane Ormsby was overflowing with expressions of sympathy by words and deeds for the unfortunate; she was, however, made up of such a peculiar physical constitution and and exceptionally accommodating to their neighbors. "My son, my heart aches for you. I pray God for you daily. But oh! my son, my first born, you still seem blind to the awful fate impending over the unrepentant. Your child taken from you; your wife taken from you; your home destroyed; your life so full of comfort and the promise of joy a few months ago, now desolate, and I believe it is because you have not served God as you ought." Here she visibly trembled, tears filled her eyes. Mother and son were seated near each other. Under the impulse arising from the intensity of her emotions, she clasped one of his hands and in a pleading manner continued: "Oh! my son, why do you not see the righteous judgment of God in these afflictions; receive the Savior, repent and believe beat home all day and read. Why, what's the matter with fore it is too late? I know you are not a Christian. My God! you?" said his father, whose face reddened, and his eyes ex- My God! His mother raised her head and looking at him with her tear-dimmed eyes and an expression of astonishment said. "How strange you talk. I can't help believing you, my son, for I have always found you truthful. How happy such an piness, while broad is the road that leads to destruction."

"We don't agree about this subject, mother," said Jerry. "I don't see God's laws governing us as you do, and if I've other angels with you would quickly quench the flames of purgatory and hell with tears, and stop the misery and human suffering we are told is in them."

Deeply touched by the thoughts he suggested, yet shadowed by the creed of her professed religion, his mother said:

"Demnition"; this being the only word approximating to profanity that he ever used, "Mother, I'm only human. I man to believe what he knows he can't? How's he going to isn't natural for God to curse his own work when it is as good as he could make it, and torture his own creatures besides. Talk about it being divine, just and holy. It isn't. It's brutal. It's more brutal than the act of that old sow we once had that ate all her pigs. You're mistaken, mother, God is in better pusiness than that of increasing human misery-running a hell and purgatory, and through some of the preachers around here trying to keep in the minds of naturally rational people pictures of the meanest qualities of character in human nature; but, little mother, I love you, anyhow, and always shall."

Oliver Ormsby on leaving his home thought himself very fortunate in going into a position as fireman on the same engine run by his brother; his ambition was to qualify himself for the position of engineer. Thus it came about after being separated over four years, the brothers had got together again. They lived in the same boarding-house, worked together almost daily, riding on the same engine, and occasionally visiting the "old folks." Life glided along very very smoothly with them for several months, when the approach of spring brought heavy storms that resulted in a great washout occurring at a place on the railroad, over which Jerry had ridden almost daily for over four years, and where it was never dreamed possible for such a thing to happen to the road. Just after the breaking away of the soil beneath the track, Jerry's engine with a heavy freight train struck it. It was a very dark night the wind was fierce, and the rain was pouring in torrents. Where the washout break took place, and for several hundred feet each way, the road extended along the side of a steep hill, it being forty to sixty feet to level ground on the lower side, the upper side being the sloping hill extending some hundreds of feet above. By some unusual vibration of the big steel, iron, brass and wood machine, alive with fire and steam, that he was guiding, Jerry had a sudden sense of danger; he whistled "Down brakes," and at the same moment warned Oliver to prepare to jump. It was too late. He had barely uttered the warn ing when feeling the sensation of tipping he jumped from his engine, that with its twenty freight cars was running at the rate of thirty miles an hour, just as the mighty machine with its load, turned on its side, and plunged down the embankment, making a mass of broken and bent steel and iron, with wood broken, smashed and shivered into splinters, scattered around for several hundred feet.

When Jerry jumped he happened to strike the ground vithout sustaining any serious injury. Help and lanterns were soon obtained; hunting and overhauling the wreck was proceeded with through the night and part of the next day, until those that were injured, and those that were killed were taken from it. Oliver was crushed to death between the engine and tender. Jerry was so deeply affected that he could hardly talk, while those to whom disaster had come were being looked for, though he directed and tenderly assisted in handling the remains of his brother, and taking we are utter-indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all them to the old homestead

Oliver had always been vigorous, healthy and overflowing with activity; his sudden death was a terrible shock to his parents, particularly to his mother. Jerry was opposed to having a formal and ceremonious funeral, though he finally consented to arrange all the details pertaining to it, in compliance with the wishes of his parents. His mother at the time being in poor health, he feared that the strain and shock to her emotional nature would be more than she could pass through and live.

The Rev. Joshua Mather, physically, was a tall, well-proportioned man. The general contour of his features was of the Andrew Jackson type. . Aged about sixty years, his hair originally black, was considerably mixed with gray; he had piercing black eyes. He kept his face cleanly shaved, habitually dressed in black broadcloth, and wore a standing collar, with a steel spring stock, black silk-covered, which aided him to keep the muscles of his neck and head rigidly set in one direction. To the casual observer he appeared very dignified and exceptionally pious; careful character-reading people of the world, however, believed this artificial, unnatural, and affected for private reasons of his own. He especially experienced great satisfaction in alluding to himself as a "soldier of the cross," and a "champion of the true faith." Nothing suited him better than conducting funeral services among the people not of his creed and church; on such occasions, in his own estimation he towered to great importance, for he was fully aware of the opportunity it presented for him to make a profound and lasting impression on those whom he wished to convert, and if he was not successful in converting, he regarded as lost in their iniquity and sins forever, and doomed to eternal tor-

He was the pastor of the Baptist church of which old Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby were members, and had been officiating in that capacity over thirty years. A modern Theosophist familiar with his ideas would have said he was a reincarnation of the combined spirits of Cotton Mather, who lived in the time of the Salem and Danvers "witchcraft craze," and of whom he was a descendant, and Jonathan Edwards. He was one of that class of preachers that was quite numerous fifty years ago, but are very scarce now, that assume to know all about God, Creation, and the destiny of the human family, as set forth in Calvinistic theology. He did not believe in any half-way measures in talking to sinners about their inherent total depravity. He taught that a person to be saved from the "wrath to come" must be old enough to understand the naturally iniquitous origin of all mankindthat he must acknowledge himself a vile creature and worm of the dust; must openly repent of his sins; confess belief in the Lord Jesus Christ as his Savior, and his acceptance of the Holy Bible as a revelation written by the finger of God, and handed down to Moses from heaven as an all-sufficient guide in all the affairs of human life, and that there was no knowledge outside of it worthy of a moment's consideration. Any person who would not do this, in his judgment, was of no account, except to make him feel and think about the misery and suffering he would have to endure from the wrath of an avenging God, who knew just what he would be from the beginning of his life.

As the pastor entered the home of the Ormsbys, on the occasion of Oliver's funeral, the talking in low tones among the friends and neighbors assembled to pay their last respects to the deceased, ceased. He looked the people over from room to room, conveying in the expression of his countenance the thought: I have a very important duty assigned me, and by the help of God I'm going to do it, though this house and the heavens fall; and woe be unto any one that shows levity, or tries to divert attention from these solemn

Selecting and marking a chapter in the Bible, then taking the hymn-book he arose and in a stern and solemn voice,

> "Hark! from the tombs a doleful sound: Mine ears attend the cry; Ye living men, come view the ground Where you must shortly lie.",

. . . . "Great God! is this our certain doom?"

The manner in which he emphasized every word in the first stanzas, and the first line of the third stanza, of this oldtime hymn, and the long-dawn-out tune in which it was sung. cast a gloomy shade over the thoughts of the audience. It was evident to the worldly-minded people present that they were going to get a tongue-lashing such as they had not had in some time—that he had no sympathy to waste upon this occasion, and that he could not have selected any hymn better calculated to intensify the grief, and thus torture the heart and life of the mother of the deceased. He then read a chapter from the Bible and made a prayer so long and so tedious, and so of confessions of the awful wickedness, sinfulness, viv. as and absolute worthlessness of himself and the people in the sight of God, that probably not a person who heard it, not professing his creed, that possessed good common sense, to have escaped listening to it would

"There is a never ending hell, And never dying pains, Where sinners must with demons dwell In darkness, fire and chains." "Have faith the same, with endless shame

To all the human race; For hell is crammed with infants damned, Without a day of grace."

This having been sung in the same soul-harrowing manner as the previous hymn, the Rev. Joshua Mather had the appearance of being, in his own estimation, fully armed and equipped as a "soldier of the cross" to make a deep and lasting impression upon the worldly people present, in the interest of religion and his church. There was not a sign of sympathy in his face, nor a tone expressive of tender consideration for the grief of the mourners in his voice; he was firmly poised under the influence of the theological dogmas he professed to believe, in one sense as an iceberg, and in another as a tyrant. In a slow, very impré.... o manner he read the following:

"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

"As we said before, so say we now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."-Galatians Ist chapter, verses

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned."

Laying down the Bible and straightening himself up to his full height, he said, in part:

"What I have read to you is the language of the Holy Bible. The first is from St. Paul, and the last is from our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, as recorded in the 16th chapter and 16th verse of the Gospel of St. Mark. The meaning of these texts is very plain; no controversy is possible that can alter the decision that has been reached by the men of God in our faith in relation to their meaning. God, and His Son, the Lord Jesus, in this holy book, say what they mean, and mean just what they say.

"The decisions that have been reached are, 'By the decrees of God for the manifestation of His Glory, some men and angels are predestined to everlasting life, and others are foreordained to everlasting death.'

"Our first parents, being reduced by the subtlety of the tempter, sinned in eating the forbidden fruit. By this sin, they fell from their original righteousness and commission with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of the soul and body; and they being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed and the same death in sin and corrupted nature conveyed to all their posterity. From this original corruption, whereby good, and wholly inclined to evil do proceed all transgres-

"My beloved, these are the foundation principles of our most holy Christian religion. To repent of sin, believe these principles, and accept the Lord Jesus as our Savior is the road to salvation. To reject them is the road to eternal misery.

"Every unbeliever and infidel I have ever known of, that has dared to raise his voice or use the pen against the holy scriptures, and these doctrines of the Christian scheme and plan of salvation, has incurred the wrath of our everlasting, just and merciful God; has been cursed in life, to the gateway of death, and doomed to suffer in torment eternally. There is no escape, my unconverted hearers, for you, unless you make your peace with God.

"Voltaire, that great French philosopher, so-called, and an infidel, with all his scholarly ability, lay upon his bed in disease and suffering for many months, and then died in agony, as the judgment of God in his wrath, whom he had blasphemed; and yet how merciful is God to his fallen and totally depraved creatures that are constantly sinning against His kingdom and glory.

"History shows to us that Tom Paine, probably the wickedest man that ever lived, and the boldest infidel, because he dared write 'The Age of Reason,' had meted out to him an awful punishment. He was visited by the judgment of God, and made to suffer a terrible death, and finally buried like a common pauper. This, though, was not the worst of it. God in His infinite love and wisdom, in our behalf, pursu after he was dead, and not only cursed him, but cursed and blasted the lives of his infidel friends and admirers, as I shall be able to prove to you.

"Some years after the death of Tom Paine, one of his friends, that defended his life and book in which he criticised the holy scriptures, who resided in England, came to this country and incurred the expense of taking up his remains, designing to take them across the ocean and re-inter them in England, and erect an enduring monument over them. But God would not have it. He brought disaster upon this man's business from the day he got Tom Paine's bones in his possession.. He was brought to a bed of sickness with one of the most loathsome diseases, and from which he was taken to the debtor's prison, by his creditors whom he tried to rob, and there died, screaming and calling on God for mercy. After his death, his effects were seized by the law and sold for the benefit of his creditors at auction. Among these effects were found the bones of Tom Paine, stored in the garret of his house, and when offered for sale under the auctioneer's hammer, were purchased by a button-maker. Thus did God doubly curse him, in his wrath, by having his bones made into buttons.

"Thus we see to what a low and despicable end God was able to consign this wicked infidel, and his friend and admirer, who tried to reflect honor upon his memory.

"Just think of what it would be to your bodies, and your souls? to be sawed, cut, turned on a lathe, bored, filed into buttons, shavings and dust, and at the same time cursed to endure everlasting misery, in a lake of fire and brimstone. And yet this is no more than a just punishment for the presumption of daring to reflect against the holy decrees of God, as expressed in the doctrines of our religion.

"This, however, is nothing to what it is possible for God to inflict upon unrepentant sinners. It is a sad duty we are called upon to perform this day. We have come to the house of mourning which is better than the house of feasting. We are here to perform this solemn rite of burying this young man, who has been cut off in the full bloom of a promising life of usefulness, by the wrath of an avenging

At this point there was a very perceptible sensation among his listeners, particularly the mourners. Some of those present looked at each other as if they would like to say, "Do you believe that? I don't." The preacher pro-

"The grim destroyer, death, has claimed his own in this case in a horrible manner, and it should be a terrifying warning to sinners. There can be no doubt this is a judgment upon him because he did not repent, confess belief, receive the Savior and make his peace with God. Oh! my hearers, what a calamity is this among you, to be thus suddenly and unexpectedly summoned to answer before the bar of the eternal God, our sins upon our souls, with no goodness in us, knowing that if a just judgment is rendered, we will be cast into outer darkness, from His presence, into hell—a lake of fire—a seething fire, there to suffer forever and ever.

"I beseech you to solemnly think at this hour of the punishment that God can inflict upon you. The torments you will have to endure will be immeasurably greater than being in a brick-kiln, or a flery furnace. In view of the terrorstriking fate of the deceased, I beseech you all, to take warning in time, and flee from the wath of God to come. Oh! my hears, my bowels yearn for you. When death, grim monster that he is, comes to you who do not believe, and may be cut off out of the fold of the church, as this young man has been, your souls will be tormented alone, that will be hell enough for them, but at the last great day, when the sea and the land shall give up their dead, your hodies will foin your

and physicians either advise costly and painful operations for these complaints, without any guarantee of success, or else doom the victims to wander through life, behind a pair of spectacles. Science, however, has discovered a wonderful remedy for these disorders of the eye, whereby torturing operations are eliminated. This great remedy is in the form of a pocket battery and is known as "Actina." It is a home treatment and self administered by the patient. By its use thousands of people have been cured of these disorders of the eye after eminent specialists have pronounced them incurable. "Actina" also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, by removing the weakened and unnatural conditions, and these cures are permanent. "Acting is sent on approval post-paid. A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. nis appeal to the exportence of common life. This characteristic endows his style, with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS A compondium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1. New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher. M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, be lieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand however to we might desire to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY,-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will nerally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown has served our so ciety the past two Sundays. Too much can not be said in praise of this charming little lady. Her work as a speaker and a missionary has no equal. She has strengthened our society and made many new converts. We should regret that more of our public speakers and missionaries are not like Mrs. Brown Saturday afternoon she spoke to the in mates of the Home of the Aged. Her only recompense was to see those dear old faces light up with pleasure and hope at the beautiful sentiment ex pressed. Such has been her work while here and our one regret is that we are not able to keep her. A Characteristic Selection From His Writings.

"Welcome evermore to gods and men is the self-helping man. For him all doors are flung wide; him all tongues greet, all honors crown, all eyes follow with desire. Our love goes out to him and embraces him, because he did not need it. We solicitously and apologetically caress and celebrate him, cause he held on his way and scorned our disapprobation. The gods love him because men hate him. 'To the persevering mortal,' said Zoroaster, 'the blessed immortals are swift.' Again: The world exists for the education of each man. There is no age or state of society, or more of action in history, to which there is not somewhat corresponding in his life. Everything tends n a wonderful manner to abbreviate it self and vield its own virtue to him. He should see that he can live all history in his own person. He must sit solidly at home, and not suffer himself to be bullied by kings or empires, but know that he is greater than all the geography and all the government of the world; he must transfer the point of view from which history is commonly read, from Rome and Athens and London to himself, and not deny his conviction that he is the court, and if England or Egypt has anything to say to him, he will try the case; if not, let them forever be silent. He must attain and maintain that lofty sight where facts yield their secret sense, and poetry and annals are alike. The instinct of the mind, the purpose of nature, betrays itself in the use we make of the signal narrations of history. Time dissipates to shining ether the solid angularity of facts. Babylon, Troy, Tyre, Palestine, and early Rome have passed or are passing into fiction. The Garden of Eden, the sun standing still in Gibeon, is poetry thenceforward to all nations. What is history,' said Napoleon, 'but a fable agreed upon.' This life of ours is stuck round with Egypt, Greece, Gaul, England, War, Colonization, Church Court, and Commerce, as with so many flowers and wild ornaments grave and gay. I will not make more account of them. I believe in Eternity. I can find Greece, Asia, Italy, Spain and the -the genius and the creative

Santa Croce and the dome of St. Peter's Strasburg cathedral is a material counterpart of the soul of Edwin Steinback. The true poem is the poet's mind; the true ship is the shipbuilder. In the man, could we lay him open, we should see reason of the last flourish and tendril of his work; as every spine and tint in the sea-shell pre-exist in the secreting organs of the fish. The whole of heraldry and of chivalry is in courtesy. A man of fine manners shall pronounce your name with all ornament that titles of nobility could ever add.

This is Emerson! When a man thinks deeply he goes below the gurface of things, and reminds us that it is well to get inspired; while the tone and quality of his thought, at once partakes of the solidity of the man,

PAINE AND HIS WRITINGS

What Is Monarchy7-The Christian "Falth.

Although a firm believer in one God, Paine has been, and still is, accused of atheism becaus he devoted all his powers to denouncing the false doctrines according to which church and state ruled, expressed, insulted and beggared the people. The "Fathers of Freethought" were all Englishmen. Sometimes they are called the "English De-ists," and their ranks include such intellectual giants as Locke, Shaftesbury, Tyndall, Chubb, Hume, Gibbon, and Paine, the son of a Quaker staymaker, of Thetford, in Norfolk.

The seventeenth century was a transition period, during which a reaction set in against what was considered objectionable in the teachings of Luther and Calvin, such as that "good works" were "mortal sins," and ignored by the Almighty A remarkable race of independent thinkers in the eighteenth century. They taught that the kingdom of man was at hand. Their object was to establish the supremacy of Reason and the Moral Sense and to vindicate for man the liberty to use his faculties free from the dictation of myth, bigotry and theological dogma. Their argument all turns up whether or not the account of the ways and will of God, as revealed in the Scriptures, is reasonably consistent with the sublime and holy attributes associated with divine majesty. Paine was born in 1736, and after a struggling career, emigrated to America. He became one of the workers for the independence of the states, served as a soldier under Washington, and when the Republic of the West was established returned to England to stir up his countrymen against monarchy and aristocracy. His motto was, Where liberty is not, there is my country." To "open the people's eyes," he wrote the "Rights of Man," in opposition to Burke's diatribe against the rev olution in France. In this book, which the Government did its best to suppress, he foreshadowed political princioles which are now generally accepted: he set forth that every man had a natural claim on society and the right to equality of opportunity and treatment. Religion and the state had but one duty to make people happy, and a religion and a state which neglected this ought to be overturned. For these views he was outlawed. He fled to France, where this so-called firebrand was nearly guillotined by Robespierre because he opposed the execution of the king!

In France Paine wrote the "Age of Reason," which so inflamed the public that even his friends deserted him The work represents the Deism of the eighteenth century—that is to say—the belief that there is One God, but that the revelation of Him in the Bible is false. He wrote from the point of view of a Quaker, who held that, all religions are in their nature mild and benign" when not associated with political systems. In a beautiful style, but with considerable coarseness he ridiculed superstition, cant, ecclesiastical humbug, and gave as an excuse that thus only could we arrive at a pure morality as the basis of the state, and secure for man the right to exercise his reasoning faculties. The enormous influence of this book made Paine the incessant object of attack by an ignorant clergy and of prosecution by a governthat feared lest England might follow the example of France and establish a republic. As an indication of the development of modern thought, it is interesting to note that Paine's argument against revealed religion or the divine origin of the Scriptures, is mere modesty compared with the onslaughts made by the new Biblical criticism and Oriental research. Paine wrote many political and theological essays, and in his later days he endeavored to introduce into Europe. Cobbett is said to have disinterred his remains and brought them from America to the mother country.

What is Monarchy? "But, after all, what is this metaphor called a crown, or rather what is mon-Is it a thing, or is it a name, or archy? is it a fraud? Is it a contrivance of human wisdom, or of human craft to obtain money from a nation under specious pretenses? Is it a thing necessary to a nation? If it is, in what does that necessity consist? What services does it perform, what is its business and what are its merits? Does the virtue consist in the metaphor or in the man? Doth the goldsmith that makes the crown, make the virtue also? Doth it operate like Fortunatus' wishing can or Harlequin's wooden sword? Doth it make a man a conjurer? In fine, what is it? It appears to something going much out of fashion. falling into ridicule, and rejected in some countries both as unnecessary and expensive. In America it is considered as an absurdity; and in France it has so declined that the goodness of man and the respect for his personal character are the only things that preserve the appearance of its existence

'If government be what Mr. Burke describes it, 'a contrivance of human wisdom,' I might ask him if wisdom was at such a low ebb in England that it was become necesary to import it from Holland and from Hanover? But I will do the country the justice to say, that was not the case: and even if it was, it mistook the cargo. The wisdom of every country, when popularly exerted, is sufficient for all its purposes; and there could exist no more real occasion in England to have sent for a Dutch stadtholder or a German elector, than there was in America to have done a similar thing. If a country does not understand its own affairs, how is a foreigner to understand them, who knows neither its laws, its manners, nor its language? If there existed a man so transcendently wise above all others, that his wisdom was necessary to instruct a nation, some reason might be offered for monarchy; but when we cast our eyes about a country, and observe how every part understands his own affairs; and when we look around the world, and see that of all men in it, kings are the most insignificant in capacity, our reason cannot fail to ask us -what are these men kept for? "If there is anything in monarchy which we people in America do not un derstand, I wish Mr. Burke would be so kind as to inform us. I America a government extending over a country ten times as large as England, and conducted with regularity, for a fortieth part of the expense which government costs in England. If I ask a man in America if he wants a king? he retorts, and asks me if I take him for an idiot. How is it that this difference happens? are we more or less wise than the others? I see in America, the generality of people living in a style of plenty unknown in monarchical countries; and I see that the principle of its government, which is that of the equal rights of man, is making a rapid progress in the world.

"If monarchy is a useless thing, why is it kept up anywhere? and if a neces sary thing, how can it be dispensed with? That civil government is neces sary, all civilized nations will agree; but civil government is republican government. All that part of the government of England which begins with the office of constable, and proceeds through the department of magistrate, quarter sessions, and general assize, including trial by jury, is republican government. Nothing of monarchy appears in any part of it, except in the name which William the Conqueror imposed upon the English, that of obliging them to call him 'Their Sovereign Lord the King.' It is easy to conceive, that a band of interested men, such as placemen, pensioners, lords of the bedchamber, lords of the kitchen, lords of the necessary house and the Lord knows what besides, can find as many reasons of monarchy as their salaries, paid at the expense of the country, amount to, but if I ask the farmer, manufacturer, the merchant, the trade man, and down through all the occupations of life to the common laborer, what service monarchy is to him? he can give me no anwer. If I ask him what monarchy is, he believes it is something like a sinecure."-Paine's "Rights of Man."

The Christian Faith.

"What are we to think of the Christian system of faith, that forms itself upon the idea of only one world, and that of no greater extent, as is before shown that 25,000 miles, an extent which a man walking at the rate of three miles an hour for twelve hours in the day, could he keep in a circular direction, would walk entirely round in less than two years. Alas! what is this to the mighty ocean of space and the almighty power of the Creator.

"From whence, then, could arise the solitary and strong conceit that the Almighty, who had millions of worlds equally dependent on his protection, should quit the care of all the rest and come to die in our world, because, they say, one man and one woman had eaten an apple. And, on the other hand, are we to suppose that every world in the boundless creation had an Eve, an apple, a serpent and a Redeemer? In this the person who is irreverently called the Son of God and sometimes God himself, would have nothing else to do but to travel from world to world in an endless succession of deaths, with scarcely a momentary in-terval of life.

"It had been by the rejecting of the evidence that the word or works of God in the creation affords to our senses, and the action of our reason upon that evidence, that so many wild and whimsical systems of faith and of religion that, so far from being morally bad, or in many respects morally good, but there can be but one that is true; and that one necessarily must, as it ever will, be in all things consistent with the ever existing word of God that we behold in his works. But such is the strange construction of the Christian system of faith, that every evidence the heavens afford to man either directly contradicts it or renders it absurd."—Paine's "Age of Reason."

Cause and Cure of Societies' Weakness. I have been thinking considerable of ate as to what is the cause of the limited financial condition of many of our local Spiritualist societies. To my mind one of the principal reasons is a lack of harmony among our members. We talk incessantly of lifting up the fallen and lending a helping hand to those in dis-

We preach love and charity, and when those of our household of faith dare to take a stand for what they believe to be right, if it does not coincide exactly with our ideas, we are ready to slander them by every means in our power. I have known of this being done repeatedly. Another reason is, too great a love of the marvelous, a desire for what we call tests. As long as we can get a message from the other side through some medium we seem to be content. It seems to me time to awaken to the knowledge of the dear spirits on this instead of trying so hard to hear from the loved ones on the other side, to heed the cry of our dear ones in distress that are with us here and, who long for our love and sympa thy. I firmly believe that if we were as anxious to know the truth as to secure tests from the other side, and would cultivate love among ourselves, banish the Demon of Slander, and harsh criticism from among us, our societies would not be in the condition they are to-day. I sincerely believe that even though some of them should sink into oblivion, out of their ashes will arise a nobler grander condition of affairs.

We talk so much of the golden shore Of the land of bliss on high Where our loved ones dwell forever more. And we sing "sweet bye and bye." We talk of the flowers on heaven's bright shore,

Of the music of angel spheres, Where no note of discord is heard ever

Through the ages of future years-Forgetting, it seems, the needs of to

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beau-tiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, rett Browning," Cloth, $1.00. Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel Not one, but every day, feast, fast and working-day. The spiritual significance burn through

The hieroglyphic of material shows, herceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern sciences. the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseem realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus galning a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that sented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide

A Mourner: Q. Should mourning

A. The believer in this beautiful apotheosis should not shadow the joys of the departed by putting on the weeds of woe. To those who regard death as the king of terrors, it may be well; but for the Spiritualist it is contradictory to the belief expressed. We know the feelings of the lacerated heart, and deeply sympathize with its agonized throbs when robbed of its idols. Over the grave the mourner gazes sadly and wearily, the senses crushed and torn. and the spirit perception dimmed by the pelting rain, insensible to impressions of the invisible world.

The dark clouds of the physical senses obscure the spiritual sun; and we cry out from our rack of torture to those who are gone, and over the void We would pay them respect. nate," was "elevate," We would change for them the order of our lives and constantly give outward expression to our grief. We give such expression in our garments. The sackcloth and ashes of the heathen devotee becomes with us crepe and black raiment. If the dead are dead; if they go down to the grave as a final goal; if they pass to an infinitely removed heaven where they forget us in the new scenes with which they are surrounded; if death destroys all human emotions and feelings, and if we meet on the shining shore our departed ones as cold, intellectual passivities,—oh, then, let us put on not only mourning gar-ments, but the hair cloth of the ancients, that its irritation may constant remind us of our irreparable loss! Let us wear it not for a year, but for our mortal lives, till it cuts through nerve and sinew and the bones to the

If on the contrary we receive the spiritual philosophy, and believe that death is only the gateway to another and higher life; that the spirits of the departed are constantly around us, and all that is required, is a channel, for us to receive words from them assuring us of their unchanging affection, why meaningless

If our grief repeats itself in the minds of the departed, and they assure us that it does, it is selfish for us to repine, and pain those for whom we grieve. Mourning garments perpetuate and keep alive this unwarranted grief. They are fitting for barbarians or believers in doctrines descending from an age of barbarism, but not for those who know that death is the usher to a higher plane of existence.

Respect for the dead-not to be paid with crepe and solemn faces, sighs and tears, but by a well ordered life that reflects the purity of the loved ones who look down on us from the vernal heights of immortality.

Isaac Sabrion: Q. Are our spirit friends conscious of our sorrow over their departure? Do they hear and understand what we say when we are talking of them in our loneliness?

A. The belief that spirit friends share with us our sorrows, griefs and joys, is one of the most helpful. If we accept what all spirits teach, that the next life is a direct continuance of this and all faculties are preserved, this cannot be otherwise. The argument that a spirit mother would even in heaven be made unhappy by the knowl edge that her children on earth were going astray and suffering, is applicable to the earthly mother who is grieved by the actions of her children. Yet we may consider the spirit filled with broader ideas, and soon strong enough to feel that suffering is for the best.

As has been previously explained spirits are united with friends by a cord of communication, and however distant, they may, as it were, be present, as they are cognizant of every thought.

Not alone passes the spirit to its new domain. Those it loved, gone before, are there to welcome it. From the threshold it is led by welcoming friends and introduced to a new life. It has lost nothing; it has gained nothing. It is the same individual, with no faculty diminished or increased, before whom extends the same interminable ocean of progress, to be navigated only by the culture of its own inherent pow-life cannot be maintained. The rare faction at some point, reaches the limit and beyond is the vacuum of space termined, but from observation of mete ors it has been found that when these bodies reach within at least 500 miles of he earth's surface, they meet with an atmosphere sufficiently dense to raise their temperature to incandescence This most extensive portion is probably formed of hydrogen, and other, perhaps unknown guses. It is probably at least 1,000 miles to the absolute limits. Only those who are ignorant of the emonstration of the law of gravitation which has been achieved by mathematics, would assert that it is unproven.

In the universe, all the bodies sus pended mutually attract each other The sun attracts the earth, and the earth the sun, exactly in proportion to the mass of each. It is true, the sun being so much larger, the point on a line drawn from its center to that of the earth's, would fall within its circumference, and it is around this point both revolve. The same is true of each planet, and hence the real center of revolution of the whole solar system is common center of all these which by the constantly varying position of the lanets, is as constantly shifting so the palance of the whole may be preserved. It follows that if a body should be projected into space toward any other orb, if thrown with sufficient velocity to reach a point where the pull of such orb became greater than the one it left, it would be drawn toward that orb with constantly increasing velocity. There is, however, no energy yet controlled by man capable of imparting the requisite velocity. The tremendous forces impelling stones from volcanoes fall far short of this achievement.

George L. Nixon: Q. Will you give the date and occasion on which Disraeli, then premier of England, made this statement: "It is the mission of the higher Jewish race, to exterminate the lower Gentile races"?

A. There is nothing more certain than that Disraeli never uttered this quotation. He was one of the shrewdest, politic and far-sighted statesmen and diplomats of Europe, and it would be impossible for him to have uttered a sentiment so prejudicial to his race and his own official position. his great ability was universally acknowledged, and in opposition to the prejudices arising from his being a Jew, he was given the actual control of the government, there was a continuous expression of race hatred, which the great minister sought to allay by every means available. That he should pub licly utter a threat that would intensify the ill-feeling and hatred of every one even echo refuses to answer. If not a Jew is not believable. What he we loved the living we worship the did probably say, instead of "extermi-

GOING BACK TO GRANDPA'S.

"August 12, 1903, Julia Eliza Burnham entered into rest, aged four years and nine months. August 5th, she started with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Burnham, on a trip down the hell, or, almost equally deplorable, to a St. Lawrence, for health and pleasure, and their tired brains and bodies seemed all responding to the exhilarating change when quite suddenly little Julia became seriously ill, and after four days entered the kindergarten of the Lord."

She was the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Tilinghast, and Ruth is a daughter of theirs, who passed to immortal life in early young womanhood, several years ago. The little one was fond of "going to grandpa's," and while on the St. Lawrence thought she was on Lake Erie, sailing to them, where she longed to go.

I did get back to grandpa's-My Aunt Ruth took me there, Because I liked it always The best of anywhere. I thought the big boat, sailing, Should get there very quick Where all of us are happy,

And Julia never sick. But it was such a long time. And we were not there yet Aunt Ruth, she hugged and kissed me. And said, "Now, come, my pet."

Away we went together, Not in a boat at all, But somehow in a momen We were in grandpa's hall.

O, I was glad to be there, And cuddle down to rest; It seemed so nice to see them;-They all love Julia best!

We went before the others, And then we went away, For many friends were coming To celebrate my day.

Aunt Ruth seems very lovely,-Just like my own mamma; She talks to me about you, And grandpa, and papa. She takes me down to see you,

And lets me kiss you, too, We do not cry in heaven, We've such nice things to do

Your little girl still loves you. And she will grow to be An angel body sometime; -This Aunt Ruth tells to me.

The little heavenly children I play with every day, And I am not so sorry I had to come away,

For I can go to see you. And you are coming on To where we live, Aunt Ruth says, And I'm not truly gone. So do not cry about me; I am not shut away, But still your little Julia,

And growing every day.

"Could this cold, mangled corpse speak, which we are soon to consign to earth as food for worms, it would testify to its misery and to the misery of the young man's soul that he is now suffering and must suffer for his unbelief, and in consequence of the neglect of Christian duty on the part of his parents."

"Oh! God have mecy on me," groaned Mrs. Ormsby. Tears were flowing down her cheeks; sighs and moaning more and more frequently escaped her that were audible to the assembled people as the expounder of the religious creedwarmed up to his work.

There was manifested a very general uneasiness by the hearers. Whether it was caused by the instinct of the real human nature present, aroused in antagonism to the doctrine being promulgated, or by the moaning, nearly heart-broken mother of the deceased, let the reader decide. In the midst of the sensation stirring the people, Jerry arose from the side of his mother, evidently to those near him, to leave the room, but was persuaded to take his seat again by interceding friends. He was very much excited, and cast upon the preacher an expression of eyes and countenance that indicated he would like to throw him out of the house. The flutter, however, fully subsided, the powerful psychological influence of the preacher prevailed, and he continued:

"My skeptical and unbelieving friends, in your natural deprayity you will say that no earthly parents, truly human. His work, that the weak and suffering—the ignorant and bigwould inflict such treatment on a child for any act it might; oted-may be strengthened and educated so that the ideal do, and how can God? Even the old hell must and and endure. No. It is not natural. We must remember will be made a comfortable place for everybody we have that our first parents violated His commands, and there is no good in us; we are at His mercy, and our only chance for, salvation is belief and repentance. In accepting our creedfounded on His holy word, we may hope through the atone. ment and the mysteries of godliness for salvation. The woes of sinners will not be the cause of any grief to the saints on earth or in heaven, but rather of great rejoicingthe fruit of an amiable disposition, perfect holiness and conformity to the requirements of our faith."

rectly he said: "Yes, my beloved in Christ, and our faith, after you shall have seen your son, now cut off in his single called attention to what that preacher had said, and stated and wickedness, in the misery of his punishment for millions of years, you will praise God more carnestly than ever for the glorious knowledge and experience of religion, and that? His justice appears satisfied in the punishment He is capable? of inflicting upon unrepentant sinners."

"It's a lie! It's an infernal lie! The whole of it is a demnition pack o' lies!" exclaimed Jerry Ormsby, in a tone of voice loud enough to be heard in all parts of the house, as he rose to his feet.

His father, with head bowed in his hands, groaned, "Lord, nave mercy on us.

Mrs. Ormsby, crushed in spirit, and heart-broken under the agony of her grief, screamed, fainted, and would have fallen from her chair to the floor had not Jerry caught her in his strong arms and carried her into another room and placed her on a couch, where with some of the neighbors, he made every effort to restore her to consciousness.

Some of the faithful and solemnly disposed people present indicated that they were horribly shocked at the extraordinary audacity and boldness of Jerry in this daring with such impious language to interrupt the services.

"The awful sinner; the wicked wretch," said one.

"Did you ever in all your life see or hear such a specimen of hard-heartedness? And just think of it, too, at his brother's funeral. He's a dangerous infidel," said another.

"He's worse 'n that," said an old lady. "He's a blaspheming reprobate, and heretic. He's one o' the kind some o' the preachers tell about that God made 'n they was that mad that they turned 'n spit pizen venom in His face. He ought to be burned at the stake."

The Rev. Joshua Mather, so unexpectedly and emphatically broken in upon, at the moment that he was using all the power of eloquence that he could put into his subject, in the hope to pierce as with a hot iron the consciences of his audience, exhibited by his change of position, and the expression of his countenance, vexation and astonishment that he could not put into words. No incident in all the battles he had fought to extend the influence of his religion ever mortified him as this did. No person before had ever presumed at his services, or in his presence to put into language such an opinion in opposition to his theological doctrines.. From his standpoint, the unpardonable sin had been committed against him as well as God. The worst feature of the situation which he realized, was the conduct, and the facial expressions of the several members of the audience near him. Notwithstanding the comments audible to him which were made against Jerry, he was convinced that the sentiment of the majority was opposed to his doctrines. He made no further effort to continue the services, but left the premises as quickly as he could.

Mrs. Ormsby physically revived, but mentally was shocked \overline{J} into insanity. At intervals for many months she was a raving maniac. Some of the time she was confined in a hospital for the insane. Gradually, however, she became rational, and the enthronement of reason took place. Her husband is and her son secured the best medical advice obtainable, and | were watchful that she should be kindly and tenderly cared for during the hours that bread-winning duties made it impossible for them to be at her side. The last few months of an a go her affliction, sometimes in her sleep, and sometimes when a second she was raving over the horrifying pictures in her mind, rep. the days resenting the condition of her deceased son, that had been left there by the funeral services, a smile would suddenly light up her face; she would appear quiet and act as if she saw something very pleasant to her; then at other times when this mood was on her she would say aloud: "Oliver, you there? and so happy? Jerry's wife and baby with you? and all so happy?" To whoever happened to be near her at these times she would say, "There's Oliver, my boy. God is love. He didn't take him away from me. Can't you see Oliver? I can." Again she would appear as if gazing into space, but bright with the thoughts that animated her , and say, "There he is; and there's Jerry's wife and her baby, and they're so happy; oh! so happy."

Over the way the funeral terminated Jacob Ormsby liad but little to say, except to ascertain what it was necessary to do for his wife. He virtually consented to Jerry's course of reasoning and action in everything. As the months rolled by of Mrs. Ormsby's sufferings, he grew indifferent about going to church, and towards the members of his denominaJerry's interpretation of his mother's visions, and the voices that she said she heard, encouraged her to tell her experlences in this direction. Several years had passed since Oliver's funeral. Father and Mother Ormsby, with Jerry, were seated in their home offpeace and pleasantness on the side-hill farm with a view of the Connecticut river and valley stretching to the south that would have charmed an artist painter of landscape scopes, and inspired a poet capable of interpreting great Nascapes, and inspired a poet capable of interpreting great Nature in language of the soul. They had been having a good visit, because Jerry had not been home for several weeks, and had got to a subject where the old people seemed willing to prefer to listen rather than to say anything.

Note.—The statements made in this story put into the mouth of the Rev. Joshua Mather, about Francois Marie Arouet de Voltaire, and Thomts Paine, I listened to, at a vevivalist meeting in 1859, in a little village in Broome county, N. Y. I was fairly well enough posted on the lives of these great men to sense the falsehood, and at the close Turning to Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby, and addressing them dim of the sermon, when a call for testimony, and for those desiring prayers was made, I got up, and in a courteous manner, I was sure he was greatly in error in relation to what he had said about them. For my, what he called presumption, he opened the Bible, and read to the audience the verses from I. Galatians given as part of the text for the funeral sermon n this story.

The other strong theological and doctrinal points set forth in the sermon I heard at a funeral in 1860, and the mother was driven insane by it. A Poem With a Moral for all Slaves of Precedent.

A calf walked home, as good calves should,

One day through the primeval wood

But made a trail all bent askew,

A crooked trail, as all calves do. Since then two hundred years have fled, And I infer the calf is dead. But still he left behind his trail And thereby hangs my moral tale. The trail was taken up next day By a lone dog that passed that way: And then a wise beliwether sheep Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep. And drew the flock behind him, too. As good beliwethers always do. And from that day, o'er hill and glade, Through those old woods a path was made. And many men wound in and out, And dodged and turned and bent about, And uttered words of righteous wrath Because 'twas such a crooked path; But they followed-do not laugh!-The first migrations of that calf: And through this winding woodway stalked Because he wabbled when he walked. The forest path became a lane That bent and turned and turned again. This crooked lane became a road Where many a poor horse with his load Toiled on beneath the burning sun, And traveled some three miles in one. And thus a century and a half They trod the footsteps of that calf. The years passed on in swiftness fleet-That road became a village street, And this, before men were aware, A city's crowded thoroughfare. And soon the central street was this Of a renowned metropolis. And men two centuries and a half Trod in the footsteps of that calf. Each day a hundred thousand route Followed the zig-zag calf about, And o'er this crooked journey went The traffic of a continent.

A hundred thousand men were led By one calf, near three centuries dead. They followed still his crooked way And lost one hundred years a day. For this such reverence is lent To well-established precedent. A moral lesson this might teach, Were I ordained and called to preach: For men are prone to go it blind Along the calf-paths of the mind, And try to work from sun to sun To do what other men have done. They follow in the beaten track, And out and in and forth and back. And still their devious course pursue der by which alone human society can exist. It is plainly told in the opening chapters of the Book of Genesis, that the primeval phase of civilization called the Adamite era, was grounded upon a revelation of truth from Jehovah God

That revelation was substantially the same as the one given to Moses on Sinai—the laws of the Decalogue. They constitute the beginning and foundation stone of human society, that is of civilization; and without the Decalogue, so ciety, governed by law, could never have had a beginning. Society is not a product of spontaneous evolution From the beginning it has rested on a Divine revelation. There is no such thing on record as a herd of man-animals uplifting themselves, by the agency of their inherent mental powers, into the condition of a society governed by

Civilization must be attributed to something higher than the spontaneous exercise of mere animal instincts. Every seed produces its like. Man is not the legitimate child of an animal father. whatever may be said of the maternal principal. History records no instance of self-evolved society. Without any other evidence, the writings of Moses furnish ample proof of the existence of earlier revelations, to which he makes specific reference, and from which he has preserved quotations in his own writings. He names specifically Book of Jasher, the Book of the Wars of Jehovah, the Book of Enunciations, and he quotes bodily from the first ten chapters of the Book of Genesis from a very ancient revelation, as we are told vincing proofs of the truth of his asser-

The prophet Heber was the last of the very-ancient prophets and religious reformers who flourished before the time of Moses. By him a general religious reformation was effected. His reformation spread over the region which of old had been called Eden, the Eden of the Adamite era, namely, Arabia, Syria and the whole drainage basin of the Euphrates and Tigris. It may be compared to the reformation of Mohammed, which covered the same region. Two systems of doctrine, or two religious sects, sprung from Heber's reformation, as, also, from the Mohammedan, as we learn from the tenth chapter and twenty-fifth verse of the Book of Genesis. The Pelegites flourished in Syria, including Palestine, and the basin of the Euphrates and Tigris, while the Joktanites, or posterity of Joktan. occupied the Arabian peninsula. In Genesis xl:15. Joseph in Egypt calls the land of Canaan "the land of the Hebrews," because the reformation of Heber was accepted by its inhabitants.

Through the prophet Heber the laws of the Decalogue were proclaimed anew to the tribes who had relapsed to a state of gross idolatry. He also prepared a code of laws—a book of the law—for the government of the tribes; for in that region the tribal form of society has prevailed from the beginning of civilization. A very ancient inscription, discovered on a ruin in Hadramaut, southern Arabia, about the middle of the last century, furnishes incidental confirmation of the truth of the Mosaic The posterity of Joktan had colonized that division of Arabia. The inscription declares that the people had lived there for many ages in peace and prosperity, governed by righteous laws derived from the sacred books of Heber. The Heberite code of laws prevailed over all that vast territory until the time of Moses, who introduced a new reformation by proclaiming anew the laws of the Decalogue to a world that had again relapsed into idolatry. And he also prepared a civil and criminal code, as Heber had done many centuries before.

In the time of Abraham the code of Heber prevailed over all the land, "For the iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full." (Genesis xv:16.) But in the time of Moses the iniquity of the Heberites, or Hebrews, was consummated, and the Israelitish reformation was introduced with a new divine revelation. Not new laws, but a new revelation of the identical laws which had constituted the foundation of the Adamite civ-

We are now prepared, perhaps, in some measure, to understand the significance of Moses' long sojourn at Kadesh Barnea, the En Mishpat of old. He there probably had access to the sacred writings upon which were founded all the antecedent religious dispensations. all the antecedent phases of civilization, since they were identical. He copied extensively from the most ancient sacred writing, as we have seen, and makes specific references to some of the Heberite books. How his civil and criminal code compares with that of Heber cannot now be told, since the latter is not now extant. But it is fair to assume that they are similar in substance, if not'in form; hecause the laws of righteousness never

It is possible that Kadesh Barnen may

A SPECIAL assume new importance and new inter est in the future as a new field of exploration for ancient records. Its identity, so long a subject of uncertainty and conjecture, has in recent years been fairly established by an American possessed of a real genius for explora-tion. It is certain that the easis of Ka desh Barnea was for ages a place of great importance and the scene of some of the most interesting events of high antiquity. Possibly its soil may con ceal records of higher interest to Christians than any of the archaeologi cal discoveries of Egypt or of the As syrian Empire.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Chicago, Ill.

[Oblivaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line. I

Passed to the higher life, from his home in Genoa, Ohio, Geo. M. Rude, in the 77th year of his age. He was one of the pioneers who assisted in the development of locality; an earnest Spir itualist who put his belief into his life He leaves a wife and three children. The funeral services were performed at the residence, by Hudson Tuttle. .

Warren Russell, formerly of Lowell Lake county, Ind., passed to spirit life, at Grand Ledge, Mich, September 26 1903. He was the oldest of a family of twelve children. He leaves a family of three sons and two daughters. He was a Spiritualist, and we record his epitaph as a very conscientious and good man; the highest tribute attainable in J. P. RUSSELL.

Nancy Wilkinson, 65 years of age, of Strongsville, Ohio, passed to the higher life, September 21, leaving two sons and many other relatives to mourn her earthly loss. She was a great sufferer, but the knowledge of Spiritualism enabled her to bear all with great pa-tience. Funeral services were conducted at the home of her son by Mrs. Alice Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio. COR.

Mrs. Lydia Thompson passed to the higher life from her home in Conneaut, Ohio, September 14, 1903, at the age of 64 years. The writer officiated giving comfort and consolation to her loved ones, dwelling upon her exemplary life, the influence of which will live in other lives for many years to come.

MRS. AMANDA COFFMAN.

Passed to the higher life, at Pueblo, September 24, 1903, Chas W. Steele, of Grand Junction, Col., aged 59 years. He was at Pueblo attending to the Mesa county fruit exhibit of the state fair. While there he was taken down with pneumonia, and was sick only a few days. He was a faithful Spiritualist, energetic and kind, and one of Mesa county's most useful citizens, and will be sadly missed by all. He was buried by the Masons on Sunday.

John Lee passed to spirit life at Curtisville, Ind., September 26, 1903 at the age of 86 years. Mr. Lee was a pioneer of Tipton county, and leaves many warm friends whom he acquired by the upright methods of his life. He leaves wife and three sons. He was a reader of The Progressive Thinker for many years. Funeral services were held at the Christian church, and were conducted by the writer.

FRANK T. RIPLEY.

Passed to the higher life from Detroit, Mich., Sept. 22, 1903, Mrs. Fronia Potter, daughter of A. S. Degolia. She leaves a dear father and one son to mourn the loss of her sweet presence, but they realize she will return in spirit, and their loss is her gain. Services conducted by REV. NELLIE S. BAADE.

SPIRITUALISTS ATTENTION!

On the 15th of November the Price of Stock in Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., Will be Advanced. If Interested intan Investment that Will Pay Handsome Returns Act at Once.

At a recent meeting of the officers and managers of Dr. Peables' Institute of Health, Ltd., it was decided to withdraw the special offer in the sale of stock now being made Spiritualists, and the date set for the withdrawal was November 15. This step was decided upon because the block of stock originally set aside for this purpose has been fully subscribed.

If you have some idle capital that you would like to put where it will draw good dividends from the very start, you should write Dr. Peebles at once for Prospectus and full information concerning the very liberal offer that will so shortly be withdrawn. You do not need to be wealthy to share in the Doctor's company; the small investor is just as welcome as the large. The person investing $10.00 will use his influence just as strong as the one investing many hundreds, and it is the good wishes and moral support that is desired more than the money.

A small amount invested in Dr. Peebles' Company to day will bring you handsome dividends from the first, with every promise of much larger ones after a year, and a great increase in the value of your stock. In two years from to day money invested in this stock, as it is offered now, will have increased many fold in value, and will be worth several times as much as the same amount would if allowed to lie idle, or put away in a bank where it will draw only 3 or 4 per cent at best—this our candid opinion. If you have any amount above $10.00 you can spare for investment, write to-day for particulars. Address Dr. J. M. Peebles, Chairman, Box 2421 Battle Creek, Mich.

THE EDITOR AT LARGE.

Hudson Tuttle, One of the Most Profound Thinkers of the Present Age, Gondemns the Book, The Great Psychological Grime.

Such is the "scare-line" title to a book which under skillful advertising is creating a sensation among Spiritualists. Its author has not chosen to give his readers the assurance which comes from a writer's name. That is a mat-ter which he has the right to decide, but the reader also has the right to infer that he is not brave enough to stand for what he writes. The book is in keeping with this withholding of the name, and furnishes the only means by which we can judge of the motive which impelled him. The impartial reader after careful perusal, will unerringly come to the conclusion that the book was written for the one object of injuring the cause of Spiritualism. The attack is one of the most subtle and insidious that has ever been made. It is by a pretended friend, pretending wide experience, who comes with soft words, and extends a velvet hand, holding a stiletto to stab to the vitals.

It is reported that he is or has been a Chlcago lawyer, which is confirmed by his style, that constantly reminds of the pettifogging pleader making out his case regardless of facts or reason, and reiterating and dividing his subject to

There are scores of pages of superfluous padding written in the interests of the cult which is publishing the "Harmonic Series" of books, of which this is Volume II. It is claimed by the editor, that this series "will constitute the Phi-losophy of Individual Life as taught today by the school of Natural Science." As: this school is frequently alluded to as authority for his statements by the author, the reader ought to be informed as to its character. Is there such a school in Chicago, or anywhere? Who are its professors? Is the author president, professors and attendant pupils,

There are pages of verbiage which are added to divert the attention, incidents introduced as illustrations, with fication, and the catch-words, "science," "scientific," "scientific facts," tists," are used to nauseation. All this I let go by, and confine my criticism to the one point in the book of interest to Spiritualists. This is the black and abhorrent crime of mediumship! This is the Great Psychological Crime! It is "such a crime against the intelligent soul of man as deprives it of any of the inalienable rights, privileges, benefits, powers or possibilities with which God or Nature has invested it." In plain words, this crime is allowing another hypnotic control over the individuality. This is the condition trance, and all forms of inspiration. This is the condition of

The discussion of hypnotism takes up a large space in the book, for it leads up to the denouement. As a spirit influences a medium exactly as a hypnotist does his subject, whatever injury may come from the latter may be logically inferred to be expected of the former.

As the similarity of spirit control and hypnotism is granted, there is here no contention. With the assertion that hypnotic control, for the cure of diseases, and otherwise, leads to insanity, we decidedly object. The assertion is made as to hypnotism, that it may be reflected on mediumship, which the author claims to be identical, only a spirit hence every medium is on the brink of the precipice of insanity. He has the subject reduced to mathematical accuracy. "A fraction over nine per cent develop insanity." "On a basis of nine percent, the city of Chicago would furnish about 180,000 insane to be cared for, if hypnotism were practiced upon the entire community instead of recognized systems of medicine. The city of New York would produce about 300,000, and the city of London about 450,000." Where are the census reports, or any authoritative state-They do not exist except in the author's imagination. He makes this tremendous assertion with the assurance of an oracle, and gives not a reference to authority. If hypnotism has been such a potent cause of insanity, the reports of the insane asylums should show the fact, and as a great many more individuals are subject to spirit control than hypnotism, the asylums ought to be filled with mediums. And so they are according to this author (p. 278.)

"In one of the largest western institutions for the United States, six hundred diagnoses have been made showing with absolute certainty that in fiftyeight per cent of the cases thus examined the sole immediate cause of insan ity was mediumistic subjection." "Making ample allowance for local variations, however, it is reasonably certain that more than fifty per cent of all the insanity in the United States is the direct result of the mediumistic process."

Where is this "largest institution?" Where are such "facts" obtainable? The charge is serious and damnatory if true, and should be supported by un-impeachable evidence. Let us see if this "evolution of statistics out of his own head," will stand the test. " The reports of these institutions do not bear out the assertion, but prove quite the contrary.

in 1877, Dr. Eugene Crowell, impelled the constantly reiterated assertion that Spiritualism was filling the insane nsylums, obtained reports of 56 public and private institutions. The total number of inmates was 23,328. Of these 412 were reported insane from religious excitement, and 59 from excitement caused by Spiritualism. (See Spiritualism and Insanity, Colby and Rich.) What proportion of these 59 re-tween the author's speculative assertion and these statistics! Prejudiced as the officials of most of these institutions are, we may be assured that no partiality was shown the unpopular cause, and a case of hypnotic insanity would have been too gladly reported.

We now come to the pivotal question of mediumship, which the author says, "is nothing more nor nothing less than spiritual hypnotism." "These facts beng established, it follows with irresistible logic that the mediumistic process is inimical to individual life and the well being of society in general." "From the beginning to the end the mediumistic process involves a continued loss of nower on the part of the tion of power on the part of his con-

"Inasmuch as mediumship slowly but surely destroys the individual power of self-control, its inevitable tendency is toward animalism. The law is inexor-

In proof of this the case of a lady me dium is given, but name and every data withheld, as usual, so that there can be no verification. Admitting, however, this illustrative story as fact, we enter protest against these libelous

A hypnotist cannot control everyone. In fact only a very few, and these must have a certain sympathetic relation to himself. A spirit cannot control all me-diums, nor a medium be controlled by any spirit who may desire to do so. There must be a responsive relation such as between transmitter and receiver in wireless telegraphy. The two must be attuned alike. No hypnotic subject or medium can be controlled to do what he or she would not do himself or herself if restraint were removed. If a medium becomes deprayed, and drifts toward animalism, it is a weak excuse to charge it to the "control." The

'lady" in the story, was in her organization exactly what she became. Her excuse that her control influenced her was no justification. She could at any moment have turned from the life she was leading, if she had not preferred it. The "animalism" was dominant, and of itself is fully sufficient to provide the motive of her downward course.

Mediums are not in the hands of irresponsible demons. Yet the author says, "Natural degeneracy of the medium as a direct result of the mediumistic process: The direct and overwhelming domination of vicious controls." are the 'two distinct and separate causes." "So long as Spiritualism gives its sanction to the mediumistic process as the corner-stone of its superstructure, just so long will it be compelled to defend itself against the charge of promiscuity, moral laxity, and free love."

This is not an objection, it is an infamous libel on the good name of every Spiritualist in the world. The charge has been made by the enemies of the cause, as that of insanity, and credulity and fraud have been, and has been disproved by the lives of Spiritualists. Is there a greater ratio of desertions or divorces among Spiritualists than church members? Are there more moral failures among mediums than ministers of the gospel? I recently received the reports for the year of fourteen penitentiaries and prisons, and found not a Spiritualist or medium, designated as

Unless the facts are clear and unmistakable, such assertions, however softly made, are simply poisoned arrows shot from ambush by an enemy. Even the orthodox have ceased to make these charges. In all the books on Spiritualism, moral laxity is rebuked, and social order, individual responsibility, strength of will, virtue, and the love which is

The tendency of spirit influence is upward, and if in exceptional cases it is the other way, the organization of the medium is the promoting cause.

The most wonderful piece of "scientific" work and statistical accuracy is the classification of mediums, and what becomes of them. Seventy-three per cent "dévelop abnormally increased and uncontrollable sexual passions. Ninety-two per cent

"A fraction over sixty per cent develop hysterical and ungovernable temper, while as high as 85 per cent show marked increase of nervous debility." "Fifty-eight per cent develop dishonesty and fraud, while ninety-five per cent show lack of moral discrimination and courage."

"A fraction over seventy per cent develop inordinate vanity, while ninetytwo per cent become more or less ego

"As high as ninety-eight per cent de-velop some discernable form of selfishness, sensuous desire, emotional weakness or degrading physical appetites."
"In no instance does the process develop marked individual improvement from a moral standpoint." The great and beneficent cause of Spiritualism from its beginning through half a century of growth, from the rap-ping in an obscure cottage to world-wide ecceptance; and the evolution of a philosophy of life, here and hereafter, on the crumbling ruins of old faiths, has been the work of mediumship, which is thus arraigned, as the most destructive condition, and leading to spiritual death! Is it possible that decaying roots in a poisonous soil, can support such a glorious tree with its heaven-reaching coronal of branches bending with fruit for which mankind hungers and thirsts?

By what means have these exact per-

It is then the fancy of this author, who "just writes it out of his own head." His facility of manufacturing "facts," to meet his theories, is as wonderful as his partition of the subject to t wonderful as his putting aside facts which conflict.

whoever is enabled to receive thoughts from the spirit realm is a medium. It does not change the aspect of the sub ject to call it by another name.

Not new. I quote from a work on Spiritualism, published twenty-five years ago, where this same danger of mediums yielding passively to control is discussed: "This is a fearful state of things, it is exclaimed; yes, it would be were sensitiveness necessarily a state of passivity, which it has been, and is taught to be. It may be one of exceed-ing positiveness, accompanied by the strongest will and trained mental faculties, and then becomes an able auxili ary, an open passage to the world of light, instead of a blind master."

"As the spirit enters the spirit world just as it leaves this, there must be an innumerable host of low, undeveloped uneducated of in other words, evil spirits."

There are those who largely advertise ness which has not been subjugated (in as "mediums," who are a disgrace to the sensitive) and undeveloped characthe cause, but this author has no right to take the advertisement of the most fest themselves. That they do is well prazenly unscrupulous of these counter- established. But that we are surthe genuine. It will be thus seen that Spiritualists nay be, but these were exceptions. Un- fully understand the dangers which well know how to guard against them. A HIGHER GONDITION THAN ORDINARY MEDIUMSHIP

The Venerable J. S. Loveland, One of the Most Critical Thinkers in the Ranks of of Spiritualism, Condemns Subjective Mediumship.

A GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME. | great spiritistic movement has retained | the surrender of this highest and most

Response to Suggestion for Review.

So far as the main positions of the author of The Great Psychological Crime are corcerned, they are the very ones which I have advocated for many vears. In my works on mediumship, in written articles, in public lectures and private conversation, I have most emphatically condemned the theory and ractice of being "controlled," crime against personal selfhood; as reducing one's self to the position of a slave or tool for another's use. I have repeatedly declared that I hated the word control. The result has been that I have not been in favor with that class of mediums, and have been denounced as opposed to mediumship. I confess the charge to be true so ft. as that phase is concerned. I have the utmost detestation to hear persons proclaim themselves as only "instruments in the hands of spirits," and hence, not responsible for their utterances. They are responsible as the drunkard is responsi-ble for the acts of his induced madness. have also shown that there is a higher condition than ordinary mediumship open to all persons. I have termed it the "Higher Mediumship." My posi-tions and teachings have had but a limited influence and I am glad that the Spiritist public is at last aroused and compelled to meet their long-practiced criminality face to face before the public mind.

With these preliminary statements I now propose to restate my main posi-tions upon the question of mediumship as heretofore published, and show how the Spiritist public has disregarded them and become the creator and pat-ronizer of fraud; and thus brought the sure foundation for its ultimate extinction, and the evolution of another movement in harmony with science, and embodying the co-operative principles of universal brotherhood.

In opposition to the common notion of passivity and control, I have submitted that mediumship should be an intelligent co-operation between the me-

The same law holds as to all forms of assumed control on the part of spirits. But so far as the great mass of mediums are concerned there is utter ignorance of who, or what controls them. The claim put forth as to the personality of the control is accepted without guestion, and hence, we have mediums controlled by Henry VIII, the pirate Kidd, Humboldt, Jesus Christ, God Almighty, and nearly all the prominent characters of history, to say nothing of hundreds of lesser lights. Proof, in most or all cases, is entirely out of the question.

This widespread, ignorant credulity shows the necessity of a profound knowledge of the physiology and psychology of mediumship. This, I have in a measure, imparted in my works. I have shown that mediumistic trance is precisely anologous to the mesmeric trance, and that the physiological condition is very largely the same as in natural sleep. And one of the most signifi-cant, and tremendously important facts is that this condition is one of hallucination! The capacity for independent observation and intellectual deduction is asleep, and hence, all the vagaries of our dream life. In natural sleep, by suggestion, the dreams can be con-trolled and the subconscious self be so impressed as to act out the impression in subsequent conscious life. But who would allow their sleeping child to be manipulated by any and everybody who chose to play upon its unconscious susceptibilities? And who but an ignor-amus would allow himself or herself to pass into that condition and thus become the passive tool of any influence, might contact with their susceptible sensibilities? But this is precisely what the great majority of spirit mediums are doing; and it is only the innate integrity of human nature that hinders mediumship from being one vast field of imbecility, insanity and immoralism. All criminals are mediums; not of discarnate spirits but of the social wholeness of which they are integral units. And as boils and ulcerous sores are mediums for the discharge of poisonous elements from the personal organism, so are criminals mediums for the manifestation of the criminal immoralisms latent in the social organism. Human evolution develops the individual type amenable to the social force, which is crime-inducing. The same evolutionary force develops the mediumistic susceptibility, which is precisely the same as in the criminal class, and it is only the surrounding conditions which make the difference in the outer manifestations. control, placed in the same conditions as the denizens of the penitentiary would be with them wearing their stripes. The primary crime is the same in both cases; it is the substitution of impulsive impressions for the deductions of reason fortified by the ethical sense of justice. Our religion, Catholic and Protestant, constitutes the mighty power which fosters and keeps alive the surging, living tide of our widespread criminality.

It is a sad and sorrowful fact that the this damnable doctrine of control by ome invisible power real or imaginary. Yahveh is the supreme control of the Christian world; and it is exerted by the Holy Ghost and the Ghost accomplishes this by impressing popes, or priests in councils to proclaim the mind and law of God. With Protestants the individual can have the Holy Ghost impress him directly, and bear witness in his consciousness that he is an adopted child of God. With the Spiritists, it is the "spirit world," or some imaginary wise spirit that makes the impression and gives authoritative commands to those who accept the doctrine of control. It is simply a change of terms. The same falsehood is at the basis, and the demoralizing effect is the same whether you say God or "spirit world," or simply "the spirits." Submitting to control is a process of depersonalization. It is a renunciation of selfhood, and the assumption of an extrinsic domination of our life manifestations. It is a confession of our own inferiority, and incapacity to live a perfect life. It is an attempt to become omebody else, or something else. And the effort, thus made, is by no means a futile one. The great law of transformation comes into play, or rather is in perpetual operation, and we become molded into the image of what we constantly contemplate. "By beholding, we are changed into the same image,' whether it be angel or devil. Reason, fettered by control and suggestion, is made the servant instead of the master. Bounds are set which it is not allowed to pass, and its mightiest efforts only result in its more abject subjugation to the tyranny of the assumed supremacy of some spiritistic authority either human or divine.

it is mournfully conceded that the vast field of modern mediumship is not merely spotted, but permeated with fraud, and false and puerile communications from the "spirits." And it is also affirmed that multitudes of persons are obsessed by spirits. And this obsession leads to suicide, drunkenness, theft and other criminal and foolish acts. The majority of Spiritists fully the motion, but are no more compelled to write than is any amanuensis.

its, eager to get into magnetic rapport with persons in the flesh. Their motives are various, but thousands upon thousands have no motive but to gratify the animalism of their earthly life. Some control the mediums to get drunk, steal, become licentious sexually, rush into some wild financial scheme ending in ruin, or engineer some great movement to revolutionize the whole world. No one can fail to see that, if the position of Spiritists and churchmen is correct as to a future existence, and that of the former that spirits decarnate can influence and control persons in the form; and that those most depraved and undeveloped are earthbound, or nearest to mortals, and that mediumship is acquirable only by a course of rigid passivity, or submission to the influence of spirits, this yielding one's self to spirit domination is an open door to all the hosts of ignorance and vice to come in and work their sweet will in making mediumship a pandemonium of crime and disorder, and tools of this advent of devilism.

But I shall be told that there are good spirits, high spirits who are working for human benefit and uplifting. Very well. They can't or don't control the criminal class. They don't protect the mediums from capture by the evil ones. Instead of giving speeches "of a high order" had they not better be doing a little work in uplifting in their own special realm of being and save us from such a deluge of evil spirits?

To submit to such subjugation is not only a crime against personal integrity but also against society, as it renders the individual incapable of performing the duties owed to his fellows. Spiritist public is the principal victim but it is also the promoter of this great mass of fraud, for it teaches the false doctrine of passiveness. But there is one more most important feature of this subjejct, which cannot be passed over without especial consideration by every careful thinker. It has been demonstrated in late years that there is a widespread prevalence of psychometric and telepathic power. There is but little doubt that they are really the same so far as the basic susceptibility in the human organism is concerned. It is mental or psychic sensing, independent of any known physical organ as the sensing agent. The first forms of animal life had but one sense, that of feeling. Evolution has developed organs for the use of distinct forms of sensation, so that the eye, ear, etc., are the instruments of different forms of feeling. They recognize different forms of force manifestation. Psychometry is to the psychic self simple sensation was to the primitive animal. It is the basic psychic sense. Differentiated by evolution, special forms of psychic sensation are developed, which are termed clairvoyance, clairaudience, etc. These senses have their sphere of action in the invisible realm of nature's activities. It is the realm of energy.

The more or less perfect development of these senses constitute the medium-istic temperament, or the possibility of Dreams at what is termed mediumship. And it is state to come.—Bailey.

sacred department of our being to the domination of assumed spirits, and all other forms of unknown influences that constitute the most of modern medium ship. It is the prostitution of the highest to the basest uses. It yields the highest to the lowest position. What should serve the regal reason is made subject to the selfish instincts. No reasonable person can fail to see that a very large share of what are termed spirit manifestations are merely the results of the exercise of these innate powers of humanity. And, until we have established their limitations, it is very difficult to affirm where independent spirit agency begins. Many years ago A. J. Davis could find only ten per cent of the phenomena really from spirit persons...Ninety per cent fessed fraud! But the major portion of it is, in one sense, innocent fraud. The perpetrators—the so-called mediums really think the exercise of their own powers to be the work of decarnate spirits, and so do the dupes who receive their messages. Through hypnotic suggestion the names of illustrious characters are given as the authors of the drivel and falsehood so common in these messages. But the criminality is there all the same, despite the ignorant innocence of the actors. . Powder will explode whether ignorance or knowledge applies the match. Strychnine will kill whether taken with suicidal intent or thought to be sugar by a child.

It should never be forgotten that these mediumistic qualities are only, senses, and hence, like the outer senses, of themselves utterly incapable of knowing the character of the object impinging them.

It requires the exercise of other faculties to create knowledge. The senses are not knowing faculties. They furnish the elements of knowledge, which are used by the comparing, co-ordinating intellect to deduce knowledge. But hese needed processes are all superseded when the despotism of control is evoked and practiced. The source and meaning of the phenomena are assumed and affirmed independent of any scientific process whatever. As senses, they have no independent action. They are simply receptives and, like a mirror. reflect the impressed images, sensations upon the intellect.

It is nearly forty years since I made the discovery that most so-called spirit nediumship was simply mental reflection! That the mediums were mirrors, and very largely reflected the seeker upon himself. His hopes-day dreams, constituted, in the main, the spirit messages and prophecies which he re-

And right here I put in my protest against the unblushing, and almost universal slander of the world of spirits Spiritists, as a general custom, charge all the folly, fraud and crime of all phases of mediumship upon "the spir nothing whatever to do with the matter. The responsibility all rests upon themselves. They have gone to trolled" mirror, which has reflected the impressions, made by themselves, and in other ways, in the form of a spirit communication. The inquity inheres in the deceptive system which you create and foster as spirit mediumship.

There is one more phase to this subject, and it shall conclude this article. Many years ago, I saw that the culture and development of the psychic senses would put us in possession of most, if not all the powers manifested by ordinary mediums, and this I termed the "higher mediumship." It did not require the control or aid of discarnate spirits, and was hence open to all who would pursue the discipline of self-development of their psychic faculties. It was a step from this discovery to the natural deduction that those attaining that phase of development, having retained perfect mental independence, would be able to converse and reason with spirit persons on the same plane of equality as we do with our fellows

Perhaps I was aided in reaching this conclusion from the fact that the most important event in connection with my work in the Spiritistic field, was an experience lasting some months, during which I conversed with an assumed spirit person as familiarly as I ever did with any person whatever. I received prophecies which covered years of time and hundreds of contingencies, all of which were fulfilled to the letter. I have seldom mentioned this fact to any one, and I am sometimes in doubt whether I have done right in keeping it so closely in my own consciousness. But this I know, that we can attain to that condition where, if there are any spirit intelligences, we can converse with them as intelligibly as with our fellows, and receive predictions covering years of time. This I term "Higher Mediumship," and it is an intelligent co-operation of the two departments of numanity to effect a common purpose, It is far above all the passive siveness of one man to the behests of another. It is the proclamation of personal, independent righteousness. REVIEWS OF The Great Psychological Crime

We devote our paper this week to the exclusive discussion or review of a book published by the Indo-American Publishing Company, 19 North Kedzie Ave., Chicago. The author attempts to demonstrate that subjective mediumship is dangerous, is unhealthy, and calculated to injure the medium, and he claims there is an Independent Method which enables a person to see spirits and talk with them, and get better results by far than through subjective mediumship. The discussion of this question will prove the motion, but are no more compelled to allow their hand to the motion, but are no more compelled to write than is any amanuensis.

The discussion of this question will prove the motion, but are no more compelled to write than is any amanuensis.

The discussion of the claims there is entirely independent of all control as much so as we are in our social intercourse with each other. In reply to the objection that some forms of medium-ship like automatic writing necessarily involves control, I simply reply that no one is compelled to allow their hand to write automatically. The real reason for the omission is that the whole theory of body, soul and spirit which forms the major premiss of this book is totally unscientific, is unsupported by a particle of evidence, and is a mere rehash of the threadbare speculations of the Greek philosophers, and of the schoolmen of early Christlanity, as shown by Bain in "Mind and Body," and to be found in any history of

That which appears to menace danger when not understood, becomes a blessing to humanity in proportion to our knowledge of its nature, and the laws which govern it. Therefore the tism is but the old, old story of dogmatism opposing the advent of new truths and discoveries into the world.

This author devotes several pages to what he is pleased to call the "deadly parallel" of Prof. Quackenbos, but its deadliness disappears when it is known that no human being can be hypnotized without his consent. The author is very particular in his references on this point, giving names, dates and pages of authors quoted, but when telling us of the awful wrecks that hypnosis has made he leaves us wholly in the dark as to both names and dates and we must depend entirely upon his unsupported statement as to the facts. Whether intentional or not, this is manifestly unfair.

The soul is, in reality co-ordinated brain activity when acting normally, and any lack of co-ordination marks the various phases and degrees of insanity The word "spirit" is a misnomer, and like many other words borrowed from theology should always be used with a mental reservation.

Unless it can be shown that all insane persons become extinct at death, then the theory that hypnotism kills the ental twaddle about the soul being a soul is the "baseless fabric of a part of God, a spark from the Infinite, a dream." Because all that the most intense and continued hypnosis could accomplish would be to derange the brain and cause insanity.

pricking his fingers! Suppose he has, it is still medium ship, and if he has transformed the stage coach into a palace car, all medidiums will not only rejoice at the discovery, but will transfer at once!

But is it fair to point out all the weaknesses of frail human nature, weaknesses that pertain to all classes everywhere, and attempt to saddle them all upon a class called mediums?

If such a great percentage of medi-ums are bad, if the tendency of mediumistic control is degrading physically,

The fact is simply this: A medium, male or female, who possesses native ionesty, virtue and honor, and who demands that all spirit controls shall be of like character, will pass through all the fires of life without harm and will keep unsullied the beauty of his or her character. While a careless medium. who has not a well developed character, and who attracts and submits to undeveloped controls, will go downward. And this is not only true in this rela-of life in this world. The claim that there is a constructive and a destructive principle in nature, in the sense set forth in this book, is not scientific. There are constructive principles in nature which build, and there are destructive principles in na-ture which disintegrate all forms, but their action is purely mechanical and not teleological. And if any mediums weak. fall under these destructive principles, it is by violation of either physical, mental or moral law, and not because they are mediums. The author is only endeavoring to call back to life the old extinct habit of personifying the pro-cesses of nature. Only re-erecting an old humbug with a new outfit!

Organic chemistry causes a tree to row, and when the tree can no longer adjust its internal conditions to its environment whether it be caused by caterpillars, drouth, or a stroke of light-ning, it is disorganized by chemistry in another form. Both processes are pure-ly mechanical, natural, unconscious, and are the result of action and reacforms in nature.

But our author is brave enough to itualists themselves. ace his logic, so to earry out his theory, he tells us that a physical stone has its order: Does each particular piece of rock have a spirit, or does only the would not desire his "suppression" on whole rock have it? and Provide a Remedy. ...

For nearly one year, I have suffered from the result of investigations made by me for the purpose of determining the possibility of communicating with friends who have passed away from the earth. I began by using an instrument called a "Psychograph," and advertised by one of your leading writers, but in a short time I "developed." unfortunately, to such a degree, that I found it more satisfactory to hold a pen, and allow my hand to be guided by the unseen being by my side. I found that the pen wrote more rapidly than it ever did when I used it alone, and that the danger of making mistakes was avoided. The "Psychograph" is so nicely balanced, hat the needle will not always stop just where the writer wishes it to: that eads, as extemporary prayer does, at times, to the composer saying some-thing before he finishes, which he did not at all intend to say when he began.
It was not my belief in Spiritualism that brought me results, for I did not pelieve in it when I began to investigate. I had no faith, but I was willing to be convinced. I wished to do what so many others claimed to have doneget messages which were not of my own forging. Unfortuntely I was successful in my endeavors.

I could not help believing that the messages that I very soon began to get, were really from my father, mother and brother, as they were signed. They were full of love, and they spoke of many things connected with my life; knew that some one was writing who had followed me over the world, and watched me for many years, and who could it be if not my parents, and brother? That was the natural conclusion.

It was a wrong one, however; my in-visible correspondent soon undeceived me. He claimed to be our old family physician, a man who having lived useful and respectable life for years, had taken to evil habits in middle life, and died an inebriate. He acknowledged with paralyzing frankness that his condition and character were much worse than they were when he was on earth; that he was on the downard path, and de lighted in evil; that he was my enemy and had come to me, for the sole pur pose of making me trouble, and that he intended to "TORMENT ME TO DEATH" in time.

I did not take him seriously, for I re membered that when he was on earth he always talked a great deal for the sim ple pleasure of talking. He was very disagreeable at times, and would jerk my hand back and forth when I was try ing to write (unless I was writing to him). He loved above everything else to hold the pen, and write himself. GANDID REVIEW OF "THE GREAT PSYGHOLOGICAL GRIME."

By Dr. Geo. B. Warne, a Leading Light in Spirualism and, President of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association.

Spiritualism is rapidly nearing either taste, smell, hearing which correspond an eclipse or a reformation. The superwith those of the physical organism. when our author says that mediumship denrives the medium during its exercise of the ability to use each and every faculty and power of his mind and soul, he does not wish to be understood as claiming that every one of such powers is to be in constant and simultaneous action, but rather each one, like minute men, must be ready for the instantane ous summons of necessity.

Spiritualists will join issue with him that mediumship is, without exception, a subjective or hypnotic process, and always attended with injury to the individual who submits thereto. Jacob pillowed on the stone of Bethel, received mediumistic revelations. Similar experiences occur, in more marked degree, among our own acquaintances. One of them missed a valuable animal from his drove. The first day's search was fruitless. That night one of the family while sleeping, seemed to hear the words, "Go to Mr. G's." three-quarters of a mile away. On the following morning the owner and a companion went in the opposite direction. Finally the dreamer became restless, went to the point named and had the wanderer at nome when the earlier searchers returned. Nature, not the communicating intelligence, nor the sleeper, was the operator, or so-called hypnotizer. The former had no violation of laws to while the control used conditions it did not create.

Again, mediumistic demonstrations occur when the will is holding the mind in the most tense concentration upon problems of business, or personal interwhich are wholly foreign to psy chic thought. At such times spirit presences are unexpectedly announced by raps, touches, sight of familiar forms, hearing of words, or perhaps the busy person looks up from his desk to find a loved one etherealized at his side, when his voluntary powers, as needed, are in most active exercise. When the mind is keenly absorbed in

An interesting Experience in Resisting was very kind in explaining to me the ing the Great Difficulty in Releasing One's Self From the Bondage of Unscrupulous Spirits.

I have not only read the "Storm Center Book," but have had such experiences along mediumistic lines, as justifies me (I think) in responding to your invitation to write my views on the question.

It may interest your readers to know that although I was a medium I had never exercised mediumship for anyone outside my immediate circle of friends, and then not in a professional way. Being with a party of friends who suggested as an evening diversion that we attend a trumpet seance, and having nothing of importance to do, I went. I had never attended a seance before, and had no idea of what the phenomena to be presented consisted. In a general way I was given to understand that "the trumpet would move and voices come through it from the spirit world, and that spirits would communicate. Never having come into contact with to me, and I must confess that I had explicit confidence in the assertion made and expected to find myself in the presence of "the angels of God"; -just why communicate" that I could not help be was conducting. coming imbued with the same idea.

to do with it Some time after this experience the card of a professional astrologer fell into my hands. Here I decided was by the ordinary means used in testing any other business proposition.

I visited the astrologer and had a horescope drawn. This was better, while the greater part of the horoscope consisted in predictions which I had no possible means of verifying, and admonitions which I did not understand in stones, herbs and precious minerals; still there was given a rather accurate description of my character, habits and natural tendency which left no doubt in my mind that "there was something criticisms of hypontism may or may not be well founded; although from my lim-

At any rate when she expressed the determination of renouncing mediumship to take a course of instruction under Mrs Florence Huntley (who first awakened Miss Metzger to a sense of the dangers of mediumship) I decided to follow her into this new field of investigation, so that I, too, might see both sides of the question.

We had become so thoroughly en rapport by this time that we could communicate telepathically, and were almost constantly under the inspiration of spirit guides. We were practically living our lives along lines pointed out by the "con-trols," and felt each day a growing dependence upon them for advice and uidance. In proportion as they "solved the problem of living" for us, in just such roportion did we yield ourselves to

At any rate when she expressed the determination of renouncing mediumship to take a course of instruction under Mrs Florence Huntley (who first awakened Miss Metzger to a sense of the dangers of mediumship) I decided to follow her into this new field of investigation, so that I, too, might see both sides of the question. We had become so thoroughly en rap-

THE CIRCULAR CAMPAIGN OF G. W. KATES.

I do not desire to make you think that I am electioneering for Brother Kates in any extravagant manner. Had the Spiritualist papers seen fit to open their columns to a full examination of the merits of each possible candidate for N S. A. president, and not refused to publish endorsements, I should have nothing more to do than issue a call for endorsers of Brother Kates. As we have not been able to present his merits to the public except by private circulars I have resorted to that means.-W. J. Hicks, Anaconda, Mont.

Brother W. J. Hicks, away off in Montana, is managing the Presidential Circular and Letter Campaign of G. W. Kates. He is the only candidate who has a manager to promote his interests; in other words, he is ardently seeking the office (instead of allowing the office to seek him), and is sending out hundreds of flaming circulars condemning The Progressive Thinker and its editor, and eulogizing Mr. Kates. The various Spiritualist papers, in refusing to publish the fulsome endorsements of Mr. Kates, have all had, no doubt, cogent reasons for so doing. They know what is best for the cause.

Mr. Kates is the only candidate in the field who is resorting to political methods and wire-pulling. There is not, we are credibly informed, a single candidate in the field who is seeking the of- tal being? He must be freed from the fice of president of the N. S. A., by this galling spur of desperation. questionable method, with the excepby sending out 'circulars condemning the Spiritualist papers, and making statements in regard to Editor Francis that are wholly false. If any one of the other candidates is elected, it will be BECAUSE THE OFFICE SEEKS HIM and not he the office.

Manager Hicks foolishly thinks that because we said at one time, "Mr. Kates would make, no doubt, a good president,' ever after we must maintain that untenable position. We have cogent reasons for changing our views in regard to him Brother Hicks says in his Campaign Circular:

"Why criticise Kates' article— 'SHALL WE BE SIDETRACKED?" It was the truth, and we all know it." Mr. Kates says in his article:

"NO CAPABLE WORKERS HAVE BEEN HERALDED, but frauds have been denounced with vehemency at the Spiritualist camp-meetings, conventions and in their press."

Look that statement squarely in the face-"No capable workers have been heralded by the Spiritualist press-by the Banner of Light, Light of Truth, Philosophical Journal, and The Progressive Thinker. That falsehood stands mountain high, for all the Spiritualist papers without a SINGLE EX-CEPTION, are constantly mentioning our prominent mediums and speakers in their columns. Do the various Spiritualist papers want such a man who will make such a slanderous statement against all the Spiritualist papers, to stand at the head of the N. S. A.?

Do the delegates want to antagonize all the Spiritualist papers and place them in opposition to the N. S. A. by electing a man as president who has wilfully and grossly misrepresented them? Try it, Mr. Delegates, and watch the result.

Besides, Mr. Kates while receiving no end of favors from this office, notices of him being published in The Progressive Thinker, some written hy himself, praising his own work-while we have extended him every courtesy in our power, he has been working insidiously and viciously against us, telling John W. Ring, president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association, and many others, that we are NOT a Spiritualist. We NOT a Spiritualist, we who have been what the world calls a medium since a little boy! We NOT a Spiritualist, when we have visions, see spirits, have prophetic insight and travel in the spirit realms, and are in touch with spirit intelligences who have never, up to date, led us astray! We NOT a Spiritualist, when every day we are sending out books treating of Spiritualism, for less than actual cost to us, and alding thousands in establishing the nucleus of a Spiritualist library in their homes-sending out ten valuable Spiritualistic and occult books for the present, $150.

$3.10 (leaving only $2 for us after paying postage and which heretofore would have cost the purchaser not less than $12), and yet NOT a Spiritualist. NOT a Spiritualist, yet giving the past year $100 to the N. S. A., which put Kates in the field and paid his expenses, enabling him to travel around the country and misrepresent us. Mr Kates, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to go around the country telling such falsehoods. And again, to vary his charges against us, he has stated that we are a Theoso phist, another malignant falsehood! We are as far from being a Theosophist as we are in not being in favor of having such a man as Kates as president of the N. S A. A man who will pursue such a course is not only not fit to be president, but he IS NOT FIT to even be a missionary of the N. S. A.

Again, we know that The Progressive Thinker has the CORDIAL ENDORSE-MENT AND GOOD WILL of all the officers of the N. S. A., with the exception of Mr. Kates, and that ALL the candidates besides him have the most friendly feeling for The Progressive Thinker and the great work it has done and is doing for Spiritualism, for the N. S. A., and for humanitarian work.

Harrison D. Barrett.

In the multitude of important questions which will call for the N. S. A's. attention at its October convention, we trust that the delegates there gathered will consider all with calmness and act with the decision of convictions born of careful deliberations. It will be no time for tearful hysterics and impulses of emotion. Let every thought be for the nearby, as well as more remote advancement of our cause. Eliminate all tendencies to gush and appeal to reason rather than to impulse. The best good of the greatest number should be the foremost motto.

One of the most delicate matters which should be considered there is how to best recognize the great obligations the Spiritualists of the United States are under to Harrison D. Barrett, the retiring president. He has voluntarily voiced his convictions that it is best for himself and the cause that he should no longer hear official bur-dens. His real friends feel that this step is wisely taken. With health shattered by labor, anxiety and affliction he must have release from work and worry. It is folly for him to think of toiling on under the intense strain of necessity until the vital cord is snapped and he thereby hastens the putting aside of mortality. New energy and methods should now supplement his past achievements. Worthy successors can be found. Ten years of travel, abuse, misunderstanding and success in varying degrees have been his presidential harvest. His voice has commanded respect on countless and far-scattered platforms, while his pen has been a tire-In the years to come even his enemies will revise their present judgment of him and concede the purity of his motives and the earnestness and wisdom of many of his endeavors.

The friends of the N. S. A. boast it is a corporation with sixty thousand dollars of assets. Why not vote Brother Barrett an annual allowance which will keep want from his door and enable him to rest, rest, rest until nature shall have recuperated his physical and men-

OUR SYMPOSIUM.

The Progressive Thinker for this veek and the week following, and indeed for some time to come, will prove of especial interest to all readers and thinkers interested in Spiritualism and matters of psychic and psychological import.

The subject of mediumship in its subjective or hypnotic aspect is of vital interest to Spiritualism, and it is discussed pro and con with the earnestness of deep convictions on both sides of the question. The stalwarts of Spiritualism are not slow nor cowardly in defense: they have been used to the flercest attacks since the appearance of Modern Spiritualism in the field of public thought. They have met and vanquished theologians and scientists in the arena of discussion and investiga-

A new phase of discussion is now sprung upon us, with peremptory challenge that must be met.

We have no fears for the result Truth will win, and Spiritualism gain in the triumph of truth.

While the warriors are on the field of intellectual conflict, let us bear in mind

"Progress the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems."

AN OBJECT LESSON.

The Progressive Thinker this week presents an object lesson of deep, thrilling and impressive interest. It is an EXPERIENCE MEETING of great value to every reflective mind. It brings forth to the reading public matters of vital importance. From this conflict of thought the truth will emerge, and the right triumph. We have no fears. Spiritualists, you must face new problems! You can not hide your heads in the DRAPERY OF SELF-CONCEIT. and say, "We have the whole truth!" We have spirit communion, in many respects, grand, beautiful, uplifting; our rostrums are occupied by some of the brightest lights in the world. Our Cause has done a noble work in breaking the shackles of superstition. The world has never before seen such a light as given by Spiritualism, and that light must continue to grow brighter by the accession of new truths.

The Price of the Storm Center book, "The Great Psychological Crime," is for

This Symposium Edition.

It has been our aim, in the selection of articles from the abundance of our accumulation, for this Symposium Edition, to give both sides of the discussion equal freedom of expression, and to so arrange them as to leave ho room for just complaint of "preference," "prejudice," or that we have been unfair to anyone. We will be obliged to continue the Symposium next week, after which the discussion will be in the hands of Lyman C. Howe, representing Spiritualism, and Mrs. Florence Huntley, editor of The Great Psychological Crime.

During the coming year we shall place other relevant questions before our philosophers, to be discussed, and shall make The Progressive Thinker so interesting that those who do not take it will always regret that they were not subscribers.

Look Out! See Our Next Paper!

The Symposium will be continued through our next paper, and will even be more suggestive, more interesting and more startling than our present issue. The Editor of The Great Psychological Crime, Mrs. Florence Huntley, has furnished answers to many leading questions presented by the Editor of this paper, and the same will appear next week, with articles from many leading minds. Now is the time to send in your subscription, and thus keep posted as to what is going on in our ranks.

LYMAN. C. HOWE TO THE FRONT!

Mr. Howe, one of the Ablest Champions of Spiritualism, Well and Favorably Known Throughout the Country, in a Masterly Manner Criticises "The Great Psychological Crime." He Is Followed by Bishop A. Beals, the Well Known Poet, Lecturer and Medium, on the Pacific Coast, Who Gives the Book a Cordial Endorsement.

This is a book of unusual character, put the whole problem in our hands, from mere statements and assumptions Florence Huntley—is a sufficient voucher for its literary merit and its moral worth. But without any name, the character of the work commends it to the intelligent reader and enlists a ject to that, profound interest before a score of I infer that pages have been digested, and the inobservation erest grows with every succeeding chapter. Many of its statements are startling, and are likely to shock the reader whose opinions are fixed and pronounced where it strikes its deadliest blows. But the spirit that pervades it is so gentle and candid, and the reasoning so definite and clear, and the subjects treated are so well arranged in progressive order, that however radically one may differ from the conclusions expressed, he is charmed and almost persuaded against his will. But Spiritualists are likely to meet it in some of its aspects with vigorous dissent, if not with determined opposition; for it aims directly against mediumship as a death trap for the unwary. The first chapters are devoted to an exposure of the evils and dangers of hypnotism. The author finds nothing but evil in it, no matter by whom ap-but evil in it, no matter by whom ap-plied or for what purpose, or what the observations and in his interpretations and in his interpretations which it came.

The charge that mediumship is denoralizing is not new. It has been a staple in the spiritual diet of the ignorant, and sectarian bigots for fifty years. But I do not know that any attempt has heretofore been made to reduce it to a cientific basis, and statistical proof. But a cursory view of facts, and general observation of the lives of mediums of all phases, as compared with the avernot shown against mediumship. The author cites a few sample cases: but they are extremes, and evidently excep-

This, the author affirms, is invariably surrendered in all mediumistic processes, progressively as the development proceeds; and that it is invariably lestructive to the individual life, both in this world and the next. Still more startling is the statement that this process if continued, as it is, slowly de-

It has been shown over and over again that hypnotism is valuable as an anesthetic in hospitals and in cases of surgical and other operations.

The author of the book admits this, but denies the method as being permis sible even though the results are good. It is purely assumption, that hypnotism debases, destroys or disturbs the individuality of the subjejct. It is assumption that the hypnotist is guilty of crime, or that the hypnotists as a rule ever employ hypnotism for other than laudable, humane and justifiable purooses. If they desire to employ it for other purposes they are not and cannot become hypnotists. The author says that harmless sug-

The author very deftly and very carefully through the volume appeals to pro-fessional pride of physicians, and as said before, permits the "suggestion" and deception of physicians while explaining, or endeavoring to explain, that hypnotism sends its subjects to gradual immorality, degradation, drink and ruin. If we admit (which is only for the sake of argument) that one man is made a drunkard through hypnotism, are not thousands of drunkards made through the methods of medical observance, when whiskey, morphine, chloral cocaine and other drugs are administered to patients? Why! the streets of Chicago are full of inebriates, morphine and chloral victims, as the result of this exalted school that the author of this book appeals to to suppress hypnotism. As illustrations, instead of wellknown, honored and respected names, our very impartial (?) author-as "he" claims (using the masculine pronounvery frequently refers to irresponsible, public showmen called "hypnotists," and professes to prove his statements by citing a few cases in which people have been dragged down to ruin, as it is said by him, by this hypnotic process. Now there are other avenues by which people are dragged to ruin in public shows or public exhibitions of any kind. Unless one is very well balanced, there will be the usual human weakness manifested in a large proportion of these

Unless the lecturer or "professor" is really an intelligent man, the claim of "hypnotism" is largely assumed. In many cases it is simply a trick like the ricks of the prestidigitator or con-

It is not fair nor just to class such people as these with the intelligent hyp-notists whose words and experiences are worthy of credence. It is not fair to use cases of that kind where the persons who have been hypnotized are inferior in the control of their physical appetites, and say, that any particular weakness is the result of hypnotism.

It is well known that while hypnotism is not regarded as a valuable therapeut agent, it is regarded as one of the means by which pain may be alleviated without any after detrimental results to the nervous system or to the subject

The claim that a subtle influence remains, and that any hypnotic subject is at any time and under all circumstances subject to the will of the hypnotizer is a preposterous and false claim. Hypnotism violates none of the laws of man's well-being, but it often admits the student into a realm which, of course had been forbidden by theology and decried by science, but which is a real realm. It was at one time the only means by which the inner and higher nature of the human spirit had been revealed to men of science. It has not in any well-accredited instances been proven to be detrimental to the self-control of the tized or those who have hypnotized were adjudged insane, the superficial mind would perhaps attribute the insanity to hypnotic experience. It has not een justly attributable to that cause, but if it were the percentage would be no more than in other nominal causes. An artist goes insane painting a pic ture, therefore it is a crime to paint pictures! An inventor goes insane over some invention, therefore, it is a crime to have inventions. Somebody study ing goes insane, therefore, nobody must study any more. That is the logic of

But all this is preface; all this is carefully studied preparation. Although at the end of each chapter the reader is told that this (hypnotism) is the way of death." But whatever help anyone may derive from hypnotism the method is wrong, says the author; it is the Great Psychological Crime.

I contend, and it has been so taught through me, that the control of the spirit is not hypnotism; but if it were it would not be a crime. However the author of the book proceeds to endeavor to explain that any control of the mor-tal medium by a spirit is a crime. Using the word "control," as a dominat-ing, usurping and violent contravention of the "constructive" principle of this School of Natural Science, which the author has taken away somewhere and hidden in a closet. However mediumship and spirit control are against the

Of course, according to this book spirits that control mediums are all from the lowest, the "first sphere"; are earth-bound spirits; have all the passions and appetites of earthly life. No matter what good they may do, what exalted truths they may teach, they are all they like to be bad, or because they are not exalted spirits in this School of Nat-

There are only thirteen spheres that that author has discovered which he says have been scientifically proven. Well! that's a good many. Of course he expects in the next volume, which is very cleverly and carefully advertised all through this book, that you will be told how to get up there.

Now we are told as the result of all this wonderful and surpassing intelligence that two thirds, or at least 50 per cent of the insane in asylums are so by "mediumship." Does any sane person believe this? The records of insane asylums say to the contrary. If this person, who has such a wonderful gift of clairvoyance, developed in the closet of the School of Natural Science has seen, as is hinted, any institution for insanity in which 50 per cent are there by mediumistic practices or spiritual influences, we do not hesitate to say, that person has seen falsely.

Nothing is mediumship that is not so admitted: much is not mediumship that is so designated. If it is psychology, that is another subject. But the author of The Great Psychological Crime would saddle upon the name of mediumship every subject of nervous and other insanity that is found in the insane asylums, contrary to the facts of the case contrary to the known and admitted causes in the case, and would say, "I know, even if you do not, that that person is controlled by evil spirits

Unfortunately a good many Spiritualists think that many cases of insanity are "obsession." This brings me to the point: In some cases among Spiritualists there seems to be that which at first view justifies the thought of obsession by, so-called, undeveloped spirits; but it is not so, not only not a majority, not 50 per cent, but it is not so in one in a thousand cases.

I think you will all admit that I have had opportunity in the course of fifty years of speaking and writing as a me-dium of knowing something on this A Gifted Young Lady Speaks from Actual Experience, and Proposes subject. You will admit that even the student of Natural Science, who has been filmbing up an especial ladder for twent, years, may not have had as good an opportunity for observation. Admitting the intelligence of the writer which is something, and admitting the motives to be right, which you are bound to in the absence of other proofs. 1 have personally come in contact with several hundred persons who thought that they were obsessed by evil spirits, who labored under the dominating idea that possessed the mind, that they were spirits that wished to do them harm. in every instance where they have come into my presence for help, for aid, for advice, for counsel or protection against the so-called evil spirits, I have found wise, good, beneficent intelligences trying to aid such persons out of physical and mental diseases of their own I, for one, will not consent that hyp

A person in he delirium of fever good faces and hears voices and often the best friends near him are thought to be enemies. Therefore he must be under the control of evil spirits. That is according to what this author says. Here are people suffering from delirium tremens, their nerves are overwrought from unnatural stimulants and there is reaction; they see forms and hear the sounds which their condition creates. There are no spirits in heaven or hades doing anything whatever to them, more than that, many people are trying to help them in this world who can, and all spirits are

We have had enough of the religion of fear; the "Black Art" is wiped out by he intelligent spiritual forces, and today no hypnotist can fasten upon you or any other human being, however weak, his base, vile, malicious and unwarranted purposes. That which rises to the rescue of every human life, and ultimately comes to the rescue of all human beings is the experience that is needed, and mediums and Spiritualists must learn their lessons just like other people. It ill becomes the pen of the author of this book to say, that any medium who has been before the public manifesting spirit influence and intelligence is very depraved. It is perfectly true of individual responsibility that no one can think, live, or act for another. It is fortunate of all these spirits and mediums that to be the "controls" and teachers they cannot be "chained" to the medium; they are always governed by the law of adaptation and permission. The instruction of the medium is palpable. Every medium receives this nstruction more or less according to their adaptability. If they do not receive it it is nevertheless true that the first message received through the hand, through the table, through planchette, through the lips of a child or grown-up person is: "Be temperate, be true, be kind, be good, be harmonious; these are the best conditions for spirit communion, for human happiness." n rule Spiritualists are tectotalers; they are advocates of temperance.

There is not one medium in ten hundred that falls a victim to intemper ance. In such case it is not the fault of the spirits controlling that medium, but because the weakness was inherent in the medium. You cannot find any criminals, you cannot find in the cells of any prison-house those who have been made priminals by mediumship. Then talk about "The Great Psychologic..."

The doors of the other world have been flung wide open, it is true, but the average human being is neither an inebriate, a murderer, nor any other class of a criminal. The majority of human beings are expressing their lives in response to their highest knowledge. The law of spirit control is, that no one lower than yourself can for a magnet approach you to do you harm. It is the spiritual nature that is the dominant nature; it is the moral nature that is the dominant nature. If you have any spiritual or moral convictions no hypnotist can interfere with them. The absence of these is weakness, not power to do harm.

All people are going to be mediums. The author goes to great length—hysterically almost—in trying to prove that mediumship is not a "gift" nor "power." It is decidedly a "gift," (i. e., some-thing bestowed by the spirit world) without which modern theology and modern science would have plunged the world into worse than annihilation -which is your fate, Spiritualists and mediums, according to this book. It is a gift that opens the gateway of spiritual knowledge, that imparts both to the medium and those receiving the message of higher knowledge and love, that opens the pathway of individual prog-

The writer of this book assumes (by inference) that the inhabitants of the earth, until Spiritualism and hypnotism came were a reasonable, well-balanced, well-governed race, thoroughly capable of doing right under all circumstances; that there had never been crime, there had never been disease, there had never been anything objectionable in the world until hypnotism and Spiritualism

Now the theologians, who the author admits on the one hand, are guilty of emotional religion, on the other of denying the future life, are appealed to, to put a stop to these "hypnotic" influences, as being most degrading.
Fortunately there will be no great spiritual cataclysm as the result of this book. Fortunately your friends will continue to minister to you in both worlds. Fortunately the processes of mediumship are the justified processes of obtaining a knowledge of a future life, until the human race is unfolded to know it—not by this Natural Science ladder that enables you to climb up through evolution to find the soul principle somewhere along the way-but by the knowledge that comes from within, and from above, from the immortal soul, which always was and always will be. Fortunately until then, until the human race shall enter into its full and entire inheritance this mediumship will continue. It is not claimed as a finality; it must be the process, it does not jeopardize your spiritual, or your moral, or your physical well-being.

You are in no danger although told so by the author who holds to all the objectionable phases of this book of the second and final death of the soul."

The soul cannot die! If it can, I would rather die with the millions of human beings who are seeking to do their best; with the spiritual gences that are seeking to do their work of ministration to the human race than enter into that self-appointed, exclusive, egotistic and "persistent" heaven that is attained, or professed to be attained, by the followers of this socalled School of Natural Science!

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every undred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Dearness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffied. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the innerear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never falls to cure this distressing affliction: we have known cases of years standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headnehe; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Professor Wilson's 160 page Dictionary of Disease, also sent Free. THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS, DUINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS .- Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statemoats he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, be lieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, of Chicago, has been engaged as speaker for the society at St. Joseph, Mo., for a month. Spiritualists of that city are to be congratulated for securing the services of Dr. Hewitt. They will find in him a very able, well-informed, interesting and instructive lecturer.

L. Dustin writes from Rochester, N Y.: "G. W. Kates and wife have just been paying their annual visit to Rochester, and were warmly welcomed by their many friends. John D. Vail, of Marshalltown, Iowa writes: "Mr. T. W. Woodrow gave a course of five lectures in the hall at White Pigeon, Iowa. He is a logical and eloquent speaker. He draws good audiences and holds their attention till the close of his lectures; not only Spiritaulists, but everybody expressed themselves as well pleased with his discourses. As he will be in Iowa a few weeks, the Spiritualists of our state cannot do better than by keeping him employed, giving the bread of life to hungry souls. He can be addressed in care of me at Marshalltown, Iowa."

A. W. Belden writes from Denver Colo.: I find the most interest manifested here in this beautiful city in relation to our beautiful philosophy in the work of Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, who is now serving the Spiritualists of Denver. She is doing a vast amount of good through her ministrations here. She is a strong combination of grace, intellect and sympathy. She presents a magnifi cent appearance on the rostrum, which at once draws forth admiration of her audience. The fine quality of thought In her excellent lectures appeals to their reason and intellect at once, and her clear spirit messages given through Mayflower in the sweetest and most sympathetic manner, astonishes the skeptics and comforts the believers. She is, indeed, the soul of sunshine and brightens and cheers all lives with whom she comes in contact. In her private trance work Mrs. Cooley is exceptionally fine, the spirit friends of the sitters often taking full possession of her organism, entering into the minutest details of their lives and of their relations as well, or giving most beautiful descriptions of the spirit world."

The Spiritualist Temple at Columbus, Ohio opened the season of 1903-4, on Sunday, October 4, with two large audiences who most thoroughly enjoyed the able discourses of Brother D. A. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who will officiate during the month of October. For November Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ripley of London, Eng., will be the speakers and mediums, followed in December by Miss Elizabeth Harlow, the cream of the Spiritualist rostrum.

In the afternoon we were highly entertained by the presence of Dr. Angus, of Toronto, Can. The addresses by the first three controls were especially touching and a feeling of delight per vaded the entire audience. Italian Spanish, Scotch, Irish, Negro and Chinese controls next demonstrated their ability to come in touch with mortals through this remarkable sensitive. Dr. Angus is now on his way to Europe and all express the hope that on his return we may be blessed again by another visit from him. At the evening meeting Mrs. Cochonour delivered one of her delightfully characteristic lectures, highly appreciated by all. The tests given at this meeting by Mrs. Hodge, Mr. Ed Dierkes and Mrs. Isa Cleveland, were positive demonstrations of spirit return. On Sunday evening, October 11, Mr. Ed Dierkes will address this society on the 'Evolution of the Human Family.' These meetings are becoming more and more interesting, and we are

harmoniously situated. Our speaker and medium, Mrs, Mrs. Lillian Nagell, was at the Etna camp-meeting, and also visited the Spiritualists of Portland, Or., and she was proud to tell us on her return that the Spiritualists of Seattle are not behind the times in point of progression. Mrs. Nagell has been our pastor for the past four years, and we all love and esteem her most highly. A more spiritual and loftier soul one can not find; and we have now taken up our work and we feel our society will be a prosperous one. This author must know just the number of mediums, as well as the efforts which have been made to control their passions; how else could he know the exact percentage of those whose passions are positively uncontrollable? A Visiting Hindu Physician.

As one interested in psychic science and its practical application in therapeutics, I have naturally tried to invesigate the progress of this science in different parts of America during my present short visit. I came in contact with a number of clairvoyants, professional and non-professional, in different parts of California, New York and Chicago; but I became perfectly disgusted with almost all of them, not because failed to get any valuable information from them, but because I found that not one of them was an independent psy-

While talking about it to a friend of mine here, I expressed my regret and surprise that the educated Americans with all their spirit of independence were so easily led away by such sub jective mediums, most of whom I found as typical, hysterical and wrecks. Thereupon my attention was immediately drawn by my American friend to the new book, "The Great Psychological Crime."

I at once sent for it, and when I care fully went through it I was perfectly pleased with the book. In it the author has laid before the public many of the facts connected with hypnotism and spiritual mediumship in a very elaborate, unbiased and logical manner.

In giving these facts, most of them being his own personal observations, the author has withheld his name, doubtless because he desires the public to form an independent and unprejudiced opinion as regards their merits or demerits. The mere fact, therefore, of his withholding his name should not deter anyone from giving to them the due consideration they undoubtedly deserve.

Most of the facts stated in this book tally so closely with my own personal observations (and I dare say with those of many critical observers of psychic phenomena), that they seem to be genuine, demonstrable facts, and not mere products of the imagination of the au

The author seems to be quite familiar with the facts and principles of science, and this familiarity is sustained throughout the book. While admitting that some of the most valuable information has been secured through the agency of hypnotic subjects and spiritual mediums under control, he has very correctly shown that, from his point of view, the ends do not justify the means. The process involved in both is undoubtedly destructive, and THERE IS CERTAINLY A BETTER WAY OF GETTING SUCH VALUABLE INFOR-MATION REGARDING LIFE ON THE SPIRITUAL PLANES. As in everything else, there is always a right way and a wrong way of attaining spiritual knowledge. The Great Teachers of India ever caution their pupils against these subjective processes. The various facts set out in this book are quite in keeping with the old established Hindu ideas, and leave no doubt in my mind that the author is an independent psychic.

According to my own personal observation I quite agree with the author that in a majority of cases insanity is the result of mediumistic and other subjective processes. Most of these people, not being aware of the dangers and the destructive nature of these subjective processes, honestly believe that the course they adopt for the develop-ment of their spiritual faculties is the SUBMITTING TO BE CONTROLLED right one, and they are thus led into it

Commercial people here, from pure selfish and mercantile motives, are ever ready to make use of these subjective mediums for their own purposes, and thus mediumship here receives great encouragement from all quarters, and not the least attention is paid to the destructive results of these subjective processes upon the mediums by either themselves or those who employ them. Under the circumstances, a book of this kind was a great desideratum, and the author has really shown an amount up that not one of its denizens can in- of moral courage in placing the facts regarding these subjective processes so vividly before the American public. Every man and woman here ought to go through the book very carefully and without any prejudice, and I have no doubt that if they use their own reasoning powers they will not differ es-sentially from the author in the conclusions he has drawn from the various demonstrable facts.

Let every medium honestly, in his or hér own interest, reflect upon his or her own past experience of a mediumistic nature, and verify for himself or herself the words of the author on the

I admit that the book will give a terrible electric shock to the present rising Spiritualistic movement here, but in the nterest of humanity and for the cause of truth, I believe that the author is ully justified in placing before the public the various demonstrable facts concerning the subjective process.

With these facts before us, let us all exercise our own independent right of individuality, and seek the Truth. A HINDU PHYSICIAN.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK

The Spiritual Significance is by Lillan Whiting, author of "The World Beau-tiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Bar-rett Browning," Cloth, $1.00. Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"If a man could feel Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,

The spiritual significance burn through The hieroglyphic of material shows, Helceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautigm" continues the same argument. ful" continues the same argument pre-sented in those volumes in a plea that sented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculities and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the consant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to singher morality and increasing happiness. THE BOOK GONDEMNED

Prof. W. M. Lockwood, a Scientist of the Highest Standing, and one of the Most Critical and Profound Thinkers of the Present Age, Gives His Opinion of The Great Psychological Crime in a Manner that will Command the Careful Attention of Every Spiritualist and Medium. The Professor Stands Forth as One of Our Ablest Lecturers and an Author of Several Scientific Works.

The innate desire to "control" the | sleep, without the magnetism of the oplife action, thought, sociological beliefs, and the accruement of the human race, has ever been a dominating concent of those whose egotism and selfish ambition for social prestige have been greater than their moral motives to instruct by the demonstration of truth, or to educate through the sensory processes of the intellect.

Fear and force of arms are the weap ons this element of humanity has always employed to carry on their nefarious propagandisms, coupled with vile intrigues duplicity, necromancy, sorcery and superstitions. Taking advantage of the prevailing lack of erudition of mankind in matters pertaining to his life principle in its relation to its environment and to processes of development, knowing the prevailing tendency of the human to accept the miraculous, the magical and mysterious, or being deeply in the mire of these supersti-tions themselves, they do not hestitate nisquote history and scientific data, or to warp and construe a part of a truth into any form of thought to conserve their own selfish ends. They hypothecate "three distinct

Gods in one God," "three distinct persons in one person," "three distinct brains in one encephelon or brain, "three senarate and distinct bodies in one body with a brain suited to each body in one body," "four distinct and separate bodies in one body," (Besant) "two etheric bodies in one body," "somebody of former regal splendor in one body, and nobody in particular in all hodies from monad to man." They affirm that each and all of these hypotheses are scientific, having been discovered by the "School of Natural Science

Dear reader, just think of it. Just where these ancient schools of Natural Science were located, is only known to the author of The Great Psychological purpose of his work that he does not tell; yet one would suppose from his frequent allusions to these schools, that they are continuing in business at the old stand. When we reflect that science is purely "a method of inductive and deductive reasoning," the frequent reference of our author to such schools seems a little vapory and ancient; and our sensory system will need a more passes of his intellectual hand, before we can be put into a state of complete hypnosis, and accept the inductions of these remarkable ancient schools, or the statements of the au

This class of writers, while ignoring the idea of the original "fall of man," affirms as a working hypothesis and sci entific fact, the continuous fall of man polypode for the sake of rounding out man's karma, in the quest of his soul for justice and compensation.

These reflections were induced by a careful reading of the treatise upon hypnotism, alluded to above. Just why author should select the term "hypprogeny, but like many a parent who desires that his name shall not be known, he places his infant in the care and keeping of a lady to nurse it into being, while strengthening its spinal vertebrae for fear undoubtedly that it may die a somatic death.

The title of the book is certainly euphonious enough to attract the attention of all of the gods of the orient, and if "Universal Intelligence" which our author claims "lies back of all life," does not invoke another war in heaven and cast this abnormal monster Hypnosis out, which has such destructive designs on the souls of men which he created in the beginning of time, it will be because His pity and commiseration is so far-reaching for the sufferings of an author who seems as deficient in logical conistency in premise and sequences of reasoning, as he is prolix in method and mental somersaults in his effort to cast a stigma upon mediumship. Let us note some of his methods.

He acknowledges on page 9, last paragraph, that "he has made no attempt to conform to the specific limitations of any lexicographer." He says: "There is a good and valid reason for this seeming repudiation of established authorities. It will be found in the following brief explanation." Now note carefully his explanation.

"It is assumed that, whatever may be his (the reader's) individual views upon the various phases of the subject to be considered, he (the reader) is nevertheless honest in his desire to understand the exact meaning and intent of the writer. In order that he may be successful in this undertaking, he (the reader) is therefore asked, for the purpose of this particular work, to AC-CEPT THESE DEFINITIONS WITH-OUT QUALIFICATION."

Now, dear reader of The Progressive Thinker, are you ready to be hypno tized? Are you willing to have your will, voluntary powers and sensory or ganism" controlled by an author who acknowledges that his exact meaning and intent for the purpose of his work is to repudiate the meaning of words and terms as given by standard lexicographers, to make such new and specific definitions as shall conserve the purpose of his work, to understate authors whom he assumes to quote, to mis interpret the data of natural philosophy and scientific analysis, to give you unverified and unverifiable statistics, to introduce as a factor in the science of natural physics, "Magis," "White Magic," and "Black Magic," to hypnotize your common sense by assuming that it is not a part or "the purpose of is work to affirm the hypothesis of re-ncarnation," while devoting several)ages in his concluding chapter to the basic to this dogma. Let us analyze and amplify some of his statements. Mesmer affirmed that the trance condition of a patient was induced by the transference of animal magnetism from the operator to the patient who placed himself in a state of passive receptivity. Dr. Braid claimed on the other hand that any who desired, could make themselves passive by con-

presentation of various hypotheses

He named this sleep "Hypnotic"; af-firming that it was self-induced. Dr. Beard of New York, who made extended experiments with hypnotic sensitives eached nearly the same conclusions. The ancient Yogin of India, however

Be that as it may, let us note that the terms "Hypnol," "Hypnology," "Hypnosis," "Hypnotizm," and "Hypnotization," all and each come from the same Greek root, "Hypnos," meaning simply sleep. It does not mean "abnormal," or "artificial sleep," as our author affirms. Sleep, whether recurring in the order of rest from toll, or induced by an anesthetic, or hypnotic, is attended with analygous physiclogical phenomena in the relaxation of the tension of the functional ganglionic structure.

Neither of the terms Mesmerism nor Hypnotism is suitable to express the physiological, pathological or psychoogical phenomena attending psychological states and trance conditions; and our author is as unwise in selecting the term Hypnotism with all of the new definitions he gives it, to express in a suitable and scientific manner these varying states, as he is reckless in the application of his knowledge of physicogical anatomy through which psychic henomena obtains.

To affirm that man is composed of a physical body, a spirit body and a soul, and that the physical body has a sensory system and the spirit body has another sensory system, to affirm that the physical body registers only physical vibrations, and that the spirit can only be impressed with spiritual vibrations, is contrary to all modern scientific physics and to the science of function and physiology.

In the first place, what is called "physical matter," never registers only psychic modes of motion. Secondly, what is called in physiological anatomy "the sensory system," is at most only ganglionic tracts, connecting consciousness to objective nature, through which tracts pulsate invisible modes of psychic motion. Thirdly, a piece of tin foil, a waxen disk, or a ribbon of the hardest steel can be made to register any form of oral thought expressed in through successive retricernations, with any language; and not only do they regan locasional slump into a proteus or lister, but they reproduce the thought, voice, and largely they reflect the individuality of the speaker. Besides, these records possess many of the attributes of memory—they have no glottis, epiglottis, palate, or sublingual glands of speech, nor a cerebrum. Tell us, Mr. Author, where are "the will and notism," to show that mental psychology has a criminal tendency, may reof these divergent forms of physical main as obscure as his name; for it seems that he omitted to tack his cognomen onto the skirts of his mental gestive Hypnosis"? What a terrible thing it is, to contemplate that this psychological processing to the views of our chic (but according to the views of our author), this "Destructive Principle of Nature," can and does register its action in what our author calls physical matter, although he affirms that it can only register physical vibrations.

Then again: If I desire to send Brother Francis a telephonic message, commendatory of the literary democracy of the columns of The Progressive Thinker, even the telephone wire submits to my "overpowering hypnosis," and the ground current hypnotized by your "Universal Intelligence," aids me in this forward, downward and backward sweep of "Nature's Destructive Principles." It really begins to look as though your "physical matter" never registers anything but psychic and spiritual vibrations; therefore is physical only in its visible aspect. This being the real truth, it follows that matter is the medium for every visible spiritual phenomenon of cosmic process; and your statement that "matter registers only physical vibrations," cannot be demonstrated Equally untenable with the author's postulate of "The threefold nature of man," page 43, is the assumption of "Three Brains." Although admitting that the brain of man comprises the encephalon or contents of the skull, we are informed that "For the purpose of his work, these three distinct parts or general divisions constitute three distinct and separate brains." Thus you ee, dear reader, that with the metaphysical postulate of three hodies in one body, our author must have three brains in one brain, to operate the three bodies in one body, in accordance with the threefold nature of man's ego, in one brain. This is all very clear, and known only to that wonderful School of Natural Science centuries ago."

Why he should briefly speak of the Pons Varolii as a bridge connecting the three brains, after having said that hese three brains are separate and distinct, is one of the mysteries of meta-physical reasoning. The truth is, that the interior of the brain is a mass of connective nerve fibers'known under the erms of "projection," "commissural," and "association" fibers. When it is understood that there are upwards of two thousand millions of these fibers associating and connecting the entire cortex of the brain to every nerve of the entire encephalon, the reader can readily see how closely interwoven and associated are these divergent functional organisms, which our author claims to "separate and distinct." The kind of psychology that can be structured upon the basis of "Harmonics of Evolution," will require just the kind of state ments and counter statements that the author of The Great Psychological Crime seems called upon to make, to bolster up its antique anatomy and chameleon physiology.

On page 38 chapter VI, we find the following extract from "Harmonics of Evolution," which our author claims as the basis of his work. "The physical body is provided with physical sensory organs. Nature has conditioned these organs to receive and register the vi-brations of physical matter only." Now centrating their eyes and thought on we affirm distinctly that there are no

a visible sense. The sensory system does not register physical vibrations. Modes of motion below consciousness induce reflex action on the motor nerves and fibers connected with the sensor process. These "modes" cannot in their nature be registered. In conscious pro cesses vibrations are not registered upon the brain. They cannot be. All modes of motion inducing action in the sensory system arousing sensation, are first impacted upon consciousness before sensation is evoked. All sensations are conscious sensations, and sensation of whatever character is the result of psychic reaction. We are told on the one page that,

"Each of the physical organs of sensa-tion receives and registers a different range of vibrations." "Range of vibra-tions!" Whew! Our author speaks of the "range of vibrations in the sensory system," as though they were like those of a plano string, and could be measured with a dynamometer. Merciful heavens! what next? And "the spiritual sensory system has a different range of vibrations," also (page 89). It will amuse the modern physicist to have our author explain how it is that 'physical vibrations being coarse and here be affinity?

The "Harmon- hypnotic or mediumistic process, yet as ics of Evolution," upon which our au- a medical man my attention has been thor bases his treatise, is the product of such a brain. The few passages quoted in our author's work, are thoroughly at and soul of the subject, and to find the variance with modern treatises in their anatomical, physiological, and psychological view of man.

keeping with popular opinion fifty years ago. The magnificent discoveries made during the last half-century in anatomy, physiology and nature's psyinto theosophical platitudes of "White Magic," "Black Magic," "The threefold nature of man," and the "Three Brains." This kind of mental verbiage illy fits the grand inductions of modern physiclogical discovery; and it indicates a state of mental poverty, or a morbid metaphysical intellect

The author of The Great Psychological Crime has a special object in view in the publication of his book; and that s to cast a stigma of prostitution and intellectual blight upon every phase of mediumship. If his pen had been actuated by a monkish Jesuitical priest of the 17th century, it could not have manfested greater duplicity and cunning hatred. Admitting as he does, all of the phenomena of the philosophy of Spiritualism to be true, affirming his acceptance of its verified data, his effort to repudiate it and classify the entire ing up to control is repeated often system as a low form of mental spiritual hypnosis, borders closely on the line of mental perjury.

"Mediumship The chapters upon Neither a Gift Nor a Power," "Medium-ship Destructive," "Mediumship and Morality," "Mediumship and Affinity," 'Mediumship and Insanity," are strong witnesses of the author's duplicity and claims. All those who enjoy the antics of an author in extricating himself from his own mental tangles in his haste to convict the medium, should read the book. As a specimen of this tangled reasoning, on page 89, in speaking of the varying degrees of susceptibility of different subjects of hypnosis, and the significance of such facts, our author says: "It means that around every individualized intelligent soul, Nature or physical desires and passions, which the great God of the Universe, has run riot in so large a percentage of the erected certain barriers to protect him | mediums and sensitives. from the unscrupulous encroachments of all those who would otherwise trespass upon his indivdual rights. The words puny, sickly, sentimental spectacle of a a God our author introduces in his book, as the "Fool," in a play—a God whose fortresses of Omnipotence, a common hypnotist easily batters down. It must first "overcome," "subvert," and "paralyze" the voluntary powers, will and sensory system" of our author's

'Almighty God." But lamentable sequences are in keeping with our author's idea of his God, throughout his entire work; for he employs the terms, "God," "God of the Universe," 'Nature" and "Universal Inelligence" AS SYNONYMS wherever he speaks of the wrong use of the natural powers in such manner as to supplement and conform to Nature's structive Principle. As Nature is God. the God of the Universe and Universal Intelligence, according to our author's dictionary, it seems after all, that he makes God the real author of Nature's destructive principle, and the hypnotist and medium only confirm and supplement, Universal Design. Antique Anatomy, Black Magic Physiology, an unscrupulous Hypnotist, a degraded Me dium, ridiculous logic and an almighty poor God, as the leading stars in this Number one is often dependent on number two, and as often is number two dependent upon number one, and both of them together are dependent upon the loss of self-control that comes inevitably to those who give up their mind and soul and personality into the keeping of any person whomsoever, and it makes no difference what the motive of the controlling mind may be, nor does the purpose of the subject make any difference in the result, if the givenough, my experience has led me to believe that one or the other or perhaps both are sure to follow.

The evil effects upon the mind seem to be first a loss of the power of continuity of thought and purpose; second, the education of the consciousness to a hyper-sensitive perception of physical stimuli, and third, a loss of the ment as to the relative value or influence of either thought or aution upon themselves or other beople. The loss of continuity of thought and purpose is many times associated with the anemia and loss of the vital power in the physiical, while the acute perception of any physical irritation, coupled to the loss of or arrest of the judgment will often account for the excessive indulgence in the practices for the gratification of the

That Spiritualism has proven and is proving every day the continuity of life and individuality after the change called death, can be demonstrated by any person who will take the time and make the effort, and is not disputed by those who have made this effort for long enough time to get a satisfactory demonstration. But it is also true, in my mind, that Spiritualism will never be more to the world than it is to-day until all the fraud and fraudulent medi ums are thrown out bodily and a plat form of truth and honesty adopted upon which all who would be known as Spiritualists must stand unequivocally and ermanently before they are allowed to be called or call themselves Spiritualists. During the last twonyears neonnection with the author of The Great Psychological Crime as a student, I have had directed to me or rather referred to me about twenty cases of mental diseases which have been variously diagnosed as acute insanity, chronic insanity, moral degeneracy due to heredity, etc., every case of which I found to be either a case of obsession (a possession of the personality with a repression of the ego) or one of undue influence from outside spiritual personalities; in other words, each and every case was under the complete control or partial domina-tion of a spirit or spirits.

Two cases had been treated by pro-lessional hypnotists before coming to me, as they said by hypnotic suggestion, only to be made worse; two cases were not treated by me at all, because in one case the patient was over eighty years old und for years had been in the same condition, so long that changes had taken place in the structure of the brein

In some of the cases the subjective condition which made possession possible was produced by an attendance on revival meetings in some of the orthodox churches; several had been produced by sitting for development as mediums; two cases were caused by the use of the psychograph, while one case that I know of and was consulted about, but which was not treated by me, was caused by suggestion only.

The one thing above everything else to attract my attention, has been the fact that in every case the control or influence, however induced, has been of the most degraded character and action and that in every case the attack has been made through the sexual organs. The high moral character, thorough education, intelligence or social standing of the patient has made no difference in the class of controls. Where the controls were supposed to be friends or acquaintances, soon they were apparently driven away and their places taken by those of increasing viciousness.

Second: Have we any reasonable grounds for belief in the claim of indivdual immortality? since this truly able author definitely declares there will ultimately and inevitably be death and extinction of both body and soul On page 206 he says:

'The question before us is entirely a question of principle. Because mediumship has given to the world that which the world has desired, that is, definite assurance of a future life, is the principle and process of medium-

He then proceeds to discuss mediumship in its varied processes very extensively, definitely deciding that me diumship is not only entirely wrong in principle, but utterly destructive-bad, physically, mentally and morally—ending only and inevitably in hell, and absolute death to both body and soul!

This, it seems to me, is a morbid and sad conclusion. He does not even admonish us to try the spirits, whether they be of God, and of our own worthy and beloved associates before they were disembodied, but broadly assumes that they are such devilish and deceitful hypnotists as will invariably and inevitably lead us to hell and utter extinc-His illustration of spirit control. by the hypnotic process, is comprehensive and commendable, but his assumption that every hypnotist, either in the physical or spiritual form, is utterly unworthy and all of his efforts harmful is, we think, too inclusive to be fully warranted. It is true we should endeavor to safeguard our spiritual avenues, (if we have them) as we would conserve the well-being of our beloved children.

On pages 205 and 206 the author

says:
"To many a lonely and anxious soul spiritual mediumship has been the open door through which the dove of peace has entered, with its olive leaf of glad tidings. It is not strange, therefore, that those who, through this open door, have watched for the coming of this I and the father are one, and as Molwinged messenger of hope, should bar the approach of those who would forever close it against them."

Seemingly they should strenuously oppose the closing of that door forever, and from everlasting to everlasting; the until they know the workman's good source of all life, for he is all and in all, reasons for doing so. As one deeply interested, I have tried to compare. with the utmost fairness, his arguments istent and co-eternal with him. tion to give a greater comfort and open a higher door, than "the mere leaf of hope in the beak of a fleeting dove," un-der the claims of mediumship.

I thank the author for his very valuable contribution to the world's volumes of worthy literature, and especially in behalf of the Spiritualists, who are undoubtedly the pioneers, seeking that greater comfort, for the betterment of universal life; but there are such strange contradictions in his book as to make it amazingly inconsistent.

How could there ever be mediumship, either good or bad, if the dead are extinct, both body and soul, or why argue for immortalty either by choice or inherence, if the physically dead are also spiritually dead?

Yet he says that:
"Man holds the key to individual immortality—that persistence of spiritual life, after physical death, is dependent upon individual choice—and individual immortality is a possibility, to all appearances. Individual immortality is an achievement of the soul, and not an arbitrary imposition of God or Nature upon all mankind, without regard to individual choice!"

"Our meaning of immortality is quite a different thing from any of the definitions expressed by the lexicographer and the theologian. By choice, we may live for a brief time after physical death, but both physical and spiritual death is ultimately inevitable."

"Like the animal, man lives for a time in this world of progressive degeneracy, and then goes down to spiritual death. So far as science knows, this means the death of the soul, or total individual extinction!"

And he emphasizes this view by asserting that the work of disintegration and dissolution of the individual is so complete that all combinations are

Now shall we, who have enjoyed the comforting hope of a future life, and the sweet and elevating assurances thereof that have come to us through the means of mediumship,—shall we unprotestingly, accept these plain and painful words that, after a brief time, there is only death and absolute extinction of both body and soul before us? He pronounces all past ways of teaching and defining immortality as erroneous, because no one has lived an eter-He says: "All the material facts of Spiritualism are admitted. They have been fully verified by scientific demonstration. Then why deny immortality and say there is only death and extinction for both body and soul?

Having made his position clear to our readers we will now proceed to the consideration of the two fundamental ques-

First, Is mediumship right? Mediumship having answered the world's most momentous questions and in the most assuring way of all other known methods, we appreciate that fact as a bright blessing to the world, in stead of as a curse; and not knowing of a more wholesome and beneficent be both incarnate and decarnate, may see and know the ways and walks of our lives, and aid us by their ennobling interest in our well-being. I sincerely believe mediumship is right, even though which seems, to some extent, deleteri ous to the human organism. For there is nothing else in heaven or on the earth more sacred and worthy than the loving desire to know what ever may be known of our said-to-be dead dear ones; where they are, and whether we shall meet them again, and every effort and evidence toward that end should make us better men and better women.

Having studiously read the doctrines of the various systems of religion, I am thoroughly of the opinion that no other means of moral suasion, or private or public teaching for the betterment of the human race and universal life, may he found elsewhere than in the teach ings and practical lives of the Spiritual Admitting all the evils of which this writer complains, excepting alone his contention that mediumship is wrong in principle and utterly bad in results, yet there is absolutely nothing within the entire history of Spiritualism that will so shock the finer sensibilities of man as will the intolerance, bigotry, hatred, persecution, torture, war, and ignominious death, abounding in and resulting from every other leading system of so-called religion or reform Can any other belief or knowledge exert a more wholesome and elevating influence upon man than the positive conviction that his best loved friends in spirit life, earnestly wanting him to hecome just such a being as the very best may proudly love and trust, can know of and sadly regret whatever unworthy things he may do? May God and good men and women, incarnate and decarnate, bless and help to ennoble every means of mediumship, thus to spread the comforting convic tion of eternal life, and the golden truth that its joys spring alone from duties well done, so that men may no longer revel in sin, believing the priest, in the twinkling of an eye, can change them upon the hangman's scaffold from which they mistakenly expect to leap into heaven and glory.

Now, have we reasonable grounds for belief in eternal life? Yes. But eternal life is not "an achievement." It is in no sense a matter of choice to be accepted or rejected, as we have quoted from this writer. It is not a gift; it is not a matter of attainment: it is an inherent principle. We had no choice as to the life we now possess, and the same life must be con-tinued, to be eternal. Life is in no sense an acquisition; it is a self-existent, self-intelligent entity and eternal prin ciple, without beginning and without "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," truly, but the body alone is the physiological result and representative of those who stand in the relationship to the child as its father and mother. They are but the loving and faithful agents who gave the spirit the soul-house in which it lives here for a brief time. Call no man on the earth your father," said Christ, "for one in leaven is your father," in spirit even as chisedec, the king of righteousness, is without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life. God is uncreated, in whom we all live and move and have our being, consequently we are co-ex-

STOCK ADVANCES

On Nov. 15, Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., Will Withdraw Its Special Offer to Spiritualists, And Advance the Price of Stock

f Interested in an Investment that is NOW Paying Handsome Dividends, With Every Promise of Much Higher Ones, Write at Once for Particulars

At a recent meeting of the officers and managers of Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., it was decided to withdraw the special offer in the sale of stock now being made Spiritualists, and the date set for the withdrawal was November 16. This step was decided upon because the block of stock originally set aside for this purpose has been fully subscribed.

If you have some idle capital that you would like to put where it will draw good dividends from the very start, you should write Dr. Peebles at once for Prospectus and full information concerning the very liberal offer that will so shortly be withdrawn. You do not need to be wealthy to share in the Doctor's company; the small investor is just as welcome as the large. The person investing $10.00 will use his inducince just as strong as the one investing many hundreds, and it is the good wights and many hundreds that to declared the state of the state of good wishes and moral support that is desired more than the money.

A small amount invested in Dr. Peebles! Company to-day will bring you handsome dividends from the first, with every promise of much larger ones after a year, and a great increase in the value of your stock. In two years from to-day money invested in this stock, as it is offered now, will have increased many fold money invested in this stock, as it is offered dow, will have increased many fold in value, and will be worth several times as much as the same amount would if allowed to lie idle, or put away in a bank where it will draw only 3 or 4 per cent at best—this our candid opinion. If you have any amount above $10.00 you can spare for investment, write to-day for particulars. Address Dr. J. M. Peebles, Chairman, Box 2421 Battle Creek, Mich.

exist after the death of each body. We can neither add to nor take from the visible and invisible substances in existence, but through the ceaseless order of change, by procreation and transformation are displayed to our comprehension what we term the divinity of intelligent achievement and general progress. But all the scientists of the world could not create a mustard seed, and impart to it the principle of life, or spirit of life. forms that perish, other forms supply." The indestructible matter of a decomposing form becomes dispersed over all planetary, animal, vegetable, fossil and norganic existence, transported by the elements of air, ether, electricity, etc., and eventually transmuted or re-ab sorbed into other bodies. Now, if even matter is immortal, as demonstrated by its precipitation into forms again, how irrefutable must be the fact that Life-the invisible power which gives energy, animation, respiration, motion, feeling, voice, and full fruition of the intellectual faculties-that life, the ever-existing source of power, is immortal? That it is immortal is beyond refutation, and its permanent individualization is self-evident. Man was always a man, the bird was always a bird, and their reincarnations reproduce in kind the same sort of bodies.

The immortality of matter is sus tained through the organic energies of nature, though the form or body is re-peatedly decomposed and recomposed. The soul and body thus form a part of the power and plan, invisible and visible, which alike in all things else, cooperates with the universal agency of God and nature, spirit and matter, to perpetuate the universe in all of its forms and actions.

Matter is the eternal visible identity that forms the constituent whole of na-ture, the great integer of all visible bodies, which can never be annihilated, and the ever-living personality of man is the invisible soul-essence, with its faculties of mind incarnated into atoms of matter formed into a temporary material body. We die but to live again, a sweeter life, as we sleep to awake refreshed and and time, by and through its own invisible, indestructible and eternal powers of cohesion, attraction and transformators before the truth is the object of this tion of matter, makes its own temporary material body, not of its own free and conscious choice, but through these involuntary powers, even as our respiration, digestion, etc., is entirely free from our conscious choice or voluntary Therefore, aside from all material manifestations and corroborative evidence through mediumship, we claim reasonable grounds for belief that we are inherently immortal.

My stay was pleasantly divided between the most hospitable homes of Mr. E. R. Newton and Mr. Leon Barker, two families that give much of their substance to the cause of Spiritualism. Mrs. E. R. Newton is a medium and speaker of wonder ful promise, and I am sure the public will hear much in regard to her good work in the future.

This month (October) I am back with the most enterprising First Spiritualist Society of Battle Creek, Michigan. Judging by past experience I expect the hearty co-operation of the society, so hope to do a good work while there. I shall attend the N. S. A. convention at Washington as a delegate from one of the local societies of Michigan. From all I can learn in this vicinity I think Michigan will be quite well repre-

I have read the book, "The Great Psychological Crime," and hope later to have opportunity to air some of my opinions in regard to its contentions. However I will say here that in my opinion such agitation as it may arouse in the public mind will eventually re dound to our benefit.

I shall serve the First Spiritualist Society of Bay City, Mich., during the month of November. I would like to make engagements for February and Home address, 29 Public Square

In a wide experience with Spiritualists and mediums, I have met with many persons who have been absolutely redeemed from the indulgence of lower appetites because of the messages of warning and exhortation from their loving spirit friends through mediumship.

Among others, I have in mind a gentleman of this city, who was notorious for his profane speech, drinking habits and other indulgences of a depraved nature, who, for six years has been a mediums to be arbitrary "controls" model in conduct, character and reputaa drunkard and whose appetites generbrought to him by spiritual medium-The names of these and others can be furnished if necessary, and thou-

That sweet and good mediums have been stimulated and uplifted in the output of helpful psychical qualities, unteachers and their "spirit guides," as Tuttle, a Fannie Conant, a J. V. Thus, while the responsibilities of parentage are great, and while many human beings are brought into the world against tremendous odds, because of the carelessness, neglect and want of thrift on the part of parents, yet we know that thousands upon thousands man entities are fostered by sheltering parental care, and given the best of conditions for their intelligent and physical growth; and the parallel runs true in mediumship. For it is by no means necessary for spirit workers through the sense of binding the medium in the tion because of the light and strength chains of servitude, notwithstanding brought to him from the spirit world. the assertions of our critic to the con-Another, in Boston, Mass, who had been | trary. stay and strength, the vanguard and light of Spiritualism never lose their inlividuality nor become the prey of vicked spirits, for they have an internal light of moral consciousness that no amount of spirit "control" can quench, and their inherent individuality can never be lost.

Again I ask pardon for some elaboraion of my own experiences as a melium. In a court of law, the testimony of one intelligent witness is as good as that of another-all things being equal -and I see no reason why the testimony of an intelligent Spiritualist-medium or not-should not be as effective thor of a much-advertised book, who afirms that he knows whereof he speaks ecause of his own experience.

However, he is not a Spiritualist, not medium and by personal experience knows nothing of the conditions, pro-cesses or disciplines of mediumship. He affirms, though, that he has personally seen decarnated spirits and noted all the details of their nefarious work on mediums, but that the power by quired personally, independent of me-diumship of any sort, and that this he will explain in some future work. Now, then, I can and do sneak from actual mediumistic experience. I claim to be a trance medium, in the sense that when my organism has been used by spirits to give messages of identifica tion and consolation to their friends. the work has been done by no conscious volition of my own. I knew not what I was to say till the words were spoken, nor the name to be given as that of the "controlling" intelligence till it was involuntarily uttered by my voice. Yet,•I are degraded and only fit for "Devolu-tion" and spiritual death. sages and counsels that my lips have uttered. At the Banner of Light circles which were free to the public, for fourteen years I voiced these messages. which were taken down verbatim by a stenographer, and printed from her manuscripts; thousands of these messages were given by spirits of whom I could have known nothing; they were of, and for people in all parts of the United States and other places. Great numbers of them were accepted and verified by those to whom they were addressed—entire strangers to myself and to the Banner people. These verifications were published in the paper. I have in my possession a mammoth scrap book, containing specimens these published verifications, and have received hundreds of letters from strangers gratefully recognizing the messages of consolation and advice they have received through the Banner of Light message department; and I challenge any critic to show wherein these messages or this mediumship have in any way degenerated the medium, or proved anything but a blessing to those who thus received comfort and instruction through this mediumship. Nor is this an isolated case, since other mediums, some in similar seances, many in other fields, have been the instruments for conveying just such benefactions—temporal and spiritual to mortals and spirits alike. In my own experiences, at these same Banner of Light circles, and elsewhere, especially upon the lecture platform. I have found my own mentality expanding, and my individuality increasing under the influ nce of my beloved "guides" and I know that this has also been the experience of many others. As before said, when in the superior state, I am not insensible to what is passing around me on the mortal side, hence can listen to, approve or criticise what is being spoken through my lips, and I do not hesitate to mentally ques-tion the utterance, if it is against my wn reason or opposed to my judgment, although sometimes. I have been forcer to revise my opinion, under the patient and lucid explanation of the intelligence who speaks. At the Banner circle and elsewhere questions on all sorts of philosophical, scientific, spiritual and general sub-ects, have been presented for reply, the same having been sent by strangers or given by some one in the audience, and have not seen or known of them till hey were read for reply.

Sometimes, on hearing an abtruse or obscure question, or some-thing on scientific or other lines of which I was not at all familiar, I would mentally say to the spirit attendant, "Father Pierpont, how in the world are you going to answer that?" but in the midst of a benign influence which he held over me, and which I do not think interfered with my individuality in the least, my lips would part and the intelligent answer, as from one who knew what he was talking about, would be given and be printed without revision or addenda of any sort.

In this experience, as well as in lecture work, I have felt an uplifting, quickening of vibratory force, an illumination so to speak that has enlarged The intelligent, naturally endowed my own mentality. I have been edu-common-sense mediums who are the cated by the very spirit controls that our unknown man declares vitiate and devolutionize any medium, I know it; by their advice and suggestion—never command-I have read books that have been of value to me. By their invoca tions my naturally materialistic half German brain has developed a fair porment in the universe, and a sort of devotional aspect towards the Divine principles of life, though personally I do not think I have enough of this to hurt me. By the matter which I have writter under spirit impression or uttered when "overshadowed," as Spirit Pier-pont calls it, by my beloved teacher, I have been instructed in many things, for by the force of circumstantes, I only attended the common schools a few years, and never after the age of twelve years. Therefore I know that mediumship has been a blessing to me, that it has been a blessing to thousands through my organism, who have received evidence of its verity, and that as I am only one of many mediums, honest, not self-deceived, or destring to deceive others, and who are conscientiously doing their best for self-improvement and for human benefaction, I as sert that mediumship is a blessing to the world, and of benefit to its posses sor, if under the guidance of unselfish

Nor do I find that an unconscious trance medium need of necessity lose all individuality and personal responsibility, as I have known some of these who are good moral men and women with strong reasoning powers, and whose individuality is quite unlike in many ways, that of the spirit controls who possess them during the hours of entrancement. One might write a volume on these points, but alas, we have not the privilege of promising another book that shall explain all that is left unsaid, and which may be of the ut most importance, as our critic avows he will do. Had he paused at such important points in the book before us to explain and to teach the methods he employs in arriving at his conclusions and affirmations, we could all have given more oredence to his statements, and a better opinion of his claims, as it is, we see asked to accept this statement, that all mediumship is degrading, and that if its practice is persisted in, no matter how instructive, consoling and uplifting it may be to humanity, the mediums will be devolutionized, that is, will lose all individuality, descend shally to the animal plane, lose all soul power and go but into nothingness; that the tendency of mediumship is a corruption of mor-als, and sure descent to sensuality; that fifty-five per cent of the insane in asylums are mediums or psychics; and ever so many more extravagant affirma tions; that he is not a medium but has gained the knowledge of all this by his own inner sight and powers, and that sometime he will show us all where and how we can attain the same desirable power of looking into spirit realms and at spirit people without endangering our iduality and our eternal provided, we have the power, perseverance and opportunity to engage in such a task But I must not dwell upon the charges made against mediums and mediumship, by this man; it must be the province of other writers to meet them as mine is to point to the blessings and utility of mediumship; but I must be permitted to speak a word in defense of the "Indian controls," for while I have listened to some silly twaddle, presumably spoken by half-tutored or lenorant Indians through mediums, I have also listened to a great deal more of wisdom logic, comforting assurances and lofty eloquence of a philosophical nature utter by progressive spirit indians well-cultivated mediumship. through that I have heard from some self-con scious, egotistical would-be 'teachers, who are sore afraid that they will not be given due credit for their efforts and I find in "The Great Psychological Crime," that magnetic healers and medical mediums are attacked and traduced; as an illustration, on page 253, the author tells of some lady who he came a great magnetic healer, and that step by step she was led onward and downward by her controls, until the magnetic treatments' became only another name for the indulgence of the most deprayed passions of human nature," etc. Such a case may have occurred; we do not question it, but we also positively know that hundreds of magnetic healers and medical mediums. under the guidance of good and wise spirits, such as Dr. A. A. Kimball and nis estimable wife, the late Dr. A. S. Hayward, Doctors Richardson, Grover, and many other men and women, not excepting my own brother, who for sixteen years was a most successful and prominent magnetic healer in Boston; all pure, good and conscientious workers for the blessing of humanity, curing the sick and dying who had been pronounced incurable by the regular physicians, have done a nobler work for the world, than tongue can ever tell. Their monuments are the good deeds they have performed, the lives restored to use fulness and to health of mind and body the blessings which rise for them from thousands of grateful hearts; nor by their works, even though, as in many in-stances they dispensed their magnetic healing while under the control of some spirit helper, have they lost their individuality or their personal responsibil

But I despair of beginning to tell the olessings and utility of mediumship in one article. We need to write a book upon the subject to do it firstice. The millions of human souls that have been emancipated from the fear of death and the ignorance of superstition by its influence may bear some weight of evidence in its favor though the critic sweeps them all aside as of po value. We know there are frauds professing o be mediums, and the critic prints ar advertisement of one such in kis book, and calls it the card of a medium. Such ndividuals are no more true mediums, man the glow-worm lights are the stars of the firmament.

We deplore the trauds managerading as mediums, but we claim that they should not be selected as examples of mediumistic processes and work; when Spiritualism has so many thousands of respectable and conscientious mediums to choose from.
Our critic states that as mediums are dominated by spirits in their work, they are in complete slavery. This would be true if the psychics never could assert their own authority, but we happen to know of a number of mediums who have a goodly quantity and quality of self-will, and who do not hesitate sometimes to bring it into / peration and shut out the spirit who desired to control. I know very well that unless I am "pas sive," none of my dear band of spirit co-workers can use my medial organism, and when I have thought it not best or wise to allow them audience with the mortals around me, they have been kept away or silent, even though they gave me clear understanding of their presence and desire. I also know that many a medium has exercised the same right and privilege of decision, and some of them are of the unconscious trance phase, too. This is a fact, as many can testify. In such a case, what becomes of the charge that mediums sink their individuality and finally lose it so as to become non-immortal, and of the animal plane, provided they persist in the exercise of mediumship and do not become so positive that a spirit can never influence them? As to the matter of being controlled dominated by another power, what of the devotee of fashion, of religion, of mammon, of any of the dominant ideas and passions that may control an individual until his life is absorbed by that ruling power? Do they so lose their individuality that they are in great danger of becoming non-immortal?

What of the sheep led by the ecclesi-astical shepherd, who never think for what their hypnotic pastors tell themare they to lose immortality through the paralysis of their thinking or reasoning powers?

What of the mother whose identity is well nigh sunk in her child, so domi nated is she with the idea of constantly sacrificing self for her offspring, and of practically effacing herself for his comfort and pleasure, is she to be non-immortal because of soul-paralysis?

What of the millions, not known to be mediums in the accepted sense of that term, who walk the cities of earth, inhaling mental effluvia, moral miasma, and death-dealing destruction from the haunts, aura, and lives of the wilfully debauched and debauching monsters of vice and sin-in low resorts or in high places—sensitive to influences and conditions over which they have no control, but which are not caused by decarnated spirits but by persons and conditions of earth-are they to be everlastingly con demned, or such of them as may fall be neath the influence or the temptation? True, our author states a clause in the latter portion of his book that "so long as there remains one aspi ration for good, one cry of conscience one prayer for help, Nature responds suffering mediam, the instrument for the uplifting of humanity under the guidance of the reformers, the humanitarians and righteous men and womer of the past who so love mankind that they are willing to return from higher realms, and work with the best means at hand, for the enlightenment and comfort of the world; the psychic who prays the good angels to lead him aright, may so lose his individuality under such ministration, as to part with the soul-element itself, sink below the 'Line of Despair" where no aspiration gleam of conscience, cry for light, or prayer for help can ever come, and thus become Devolutionized, and lost

But I must close; the half cannot be told, nor have I begun to refute the statement made against mediums, and which touch the personality and character of all true mediums; not that I cannot, but for lack of space. utility and blessings of mediumship, how can they be enumerated in such narrow space as this? Are they not as many as the sunbeams of morning, as numerous as the aspirations, the hopes, the fears and the needs of humanity? Do they not come in answer to these needs and prayers? Are they not the outcome of human demands, and the responses of Infinite wisdom and light? They are the instructors, the comforters, the healers of human ills, the assuagers of human woes; they come as angels of mercy and ministration and they are sent by the Infinite Good-Nature or God, what matters the name? Tremendous responsibilities rest upon mediums and upon all of human life. To sift the false from the true, to strengthen the weak, and encourage the faltering, to instruct the ignorant and to heal the sin-sick as well as the physically ill is the work of medium ship; it should also be the work of all true teachers and physicians in their dealings with mediums, not in whole sale charges and denunciation, but in loving benefaction and in the desire to show how mediumship may be made the true co-operation of spirits and mortals for mutual progress and benedic-MARY T. TWO THOUGHTFUL, GRITIGAL IN-VESTIGATORS ENDORSE THE WORK

An Inspiration and an Authority. What does "The Great Psychological

Crime" mean to me? Taken as a text-book it gives a clear conception of the reason for liv-

It gives a working hypothesis in

It keeps daily before me Nature's two great forces, Construction and Destruction, with either of which I must consciously and intelligently work. It stays forever the indefinite 'drifting" condition into which so many of us idle interminably.

If Nature's great evolutionary scheme is true in the material world then there should be a corresponding science for the great spiritual growth of man. There is the gradual refinement of the human species, the improvement of nations, the development of intellect, of art, and of morals. But over and above there should be a scientific development of each and every soul. This is the question that troubled me greatly for years I sought long for its answer, over a wide field, and in many books. I never found it consecutively and logically answered until I came in contact with the Harmonic Series, and especially with the book entitled "The Great Psychological Crime.

The great plan of Nature unfolded itself to me when I reached the third part, beginning at page 313. I there found out on just what individual development-and consequently immortality depends. How it lies within the power of man to curb his passions, train his intellect, control his emotions, regulate his thoughts, and so develop himself until he becomes like the "Ideal" that he finds implanted within him.

This is not only what he can do, but is his business of life to do, and what as he desires life light and immortality, in its largest sense, he must do. First of all he must "know himself," that he may strengthen the weak places, eradi cate the errors, and grow strong in the virtues that are admirable.

There is no other way to attain but by the development of the four great soul-forces-Self-consciousness, pendent Choice, Reason, Independent Self-Conscious and Rational Will-power There is no other way to command your self-respect, and the respect of others, but through the absolute control and direction of these soul-forces.

Hypnotism is teaching men by the hundreds how to control others, com-pletely overlooking the great essential lesson of life which is to control one's It is putting in its deadly work on its subjects, killing in numbers, that greatest of all factors of evolutionary progress, "the human will." same time carrying no good results to the hypnotist, for his development, like that of other men, depends upon selfcontrol and not of subjecting others to his will. Moreover, when we take into consideration the great over-ruling Law of Compensation we cannot but realize that the backward swing of the pendulum must inevitably bring him due retribution in one phase or another, either in this plane of life or the next.

The book is especially welcome to me inasmuch as it lacks the "tearing down" element which abounds among new theories. "Tearing down and giv ing nothing in its place" is a very simple proposition. But this work holds out a great hope, it fills life with a great purpose, it gives a definite reason for "being" and "doing." It sounds the key-note of "Individual Immortality," and leaves each one of us to work out the great scheme personally as his reason directs, and as he can train his will to perform. In pointing out the path of development and life, it, at the same time, shows the way of retrogression and death. By carefully following the thread of reasoning there sems no way of evading the conclusion, the truth works the same in both directions.

We are here in this physical world to work out our own salvation, to grow consciously and intelligently into "Being" that forms the "Ideal" of our inner consciousness. Virtues are the same all the world over and age. Buddha. Confucius. Christ. teach the same truths. Epictetus, Paul, Marcus Aurelius, Shakspeare or Emerson there is not much differing among them when we come to essentials. And this book which shows to us, in a new light, the great psychological crime against nature, which is the dwarfing or killing of that part of man which is man, is a book which will be a gospel to many.

There are those of us not personally

oncerned with hypnotism and mediumship, and yet are struggling alone and n doubt as to what is the reason of this physical existence. We find ourselves here, seemingly against our will, and are asking ourselves what should be our most reasonable purpose in life that we may best fulfil its mission. The book tells me it is to develop those soulforces, that when we find ourselves at last out of the physical body, and yet with our self-consciousness, individual choice, reason and will-power clearer and more active than ever, we may progress upward still, to where we shall gain higher knowledge, be stronger and purer in our inmost being, more loving because of a larger nature, and more helpful to others because more loving. Following rationally this thought there would be no limit to the spiritual attainment, it rests with each individual soul to make of himself what he will.

But that which really gives the impulse to this startling book is that it is a statement of fact and not a mere theory. The book is not an argument, it is a recital. The author does not say "I think, he says, "I know, for I have accomplished this independent development. I have seen and heard. I know the fact of the continuity of life as I know life itself. I have proved this destructive principle in nature as any man of science proves a principle in natura. speak with authority, for I know whereof I speak."

Spirit land, like our heaven of old, is not-to some of the earnest, fair-minded students at least--what it appeared to be from the distance.

Remotely we saw nothing but the "pearly gates," the spires of a "temple fair," the turrets of "many mansions" and the "walls of jasper." All this ("not half has ever been told") led us to believe that it was the home of peace, joy and happiness forevermore. But when we entered by Reason's gate we found many dismal-looking cottages shrouded in gloom (some of the family being absent) and undesirable, unexpected and embarassed neighbors everywhere. A kind of foggy strange-ness made dull our sense of justice when we were told how an immortal soul, filled with divine love, can sing "Glory to God in the highest," play the accompaniment on a "harp of a thousand strings," and keep in tune with the angels, when he can plainly hear the reverberating echo of the "gnashing of teeth" or scent the smoke of an "everlasting fire of brimstone" in the basement, where, perchance, some faithless member of his own family has been compelled to take lodging. A mysterious something wthin us (conscience) told us that it was not good to be here, and we walked out. And so in the realm of the spirits our hopeful hearts are building their castles while our voices ring out-not less earnest nor more certain-as of old, There'll be no sorrow there."

Let not sentiment usurp our throne of judgment. Every top has its bottom—every day its night. There is sure to be some darkness in the dawn of Spir-

By and through scientific research ve have learned that the spirits of our departed friends and loved ones still live, can and do return to us, an are able, by a mediumistic process to communicate with us.

This knowledge, no doubt, is very gratifying to us and a source of great joy and happiness to both parties con-cerned. If, by good luck, we have made connection with an intelligent individual on the other side, it is but natural for us to attempt to get a bird's-eye view of spirit land, the condition of its inhabitants and their mode of life.

"Eternal Summer!" comes back the answer from a thousand tongues; preme joy everywhere and unalloyed appiness, even from the spirit hell" of a man "hanged in Texas" that I heard of some time ago.

How captivating the idea appears to us dwellers of a material earth! Here, where the enjoyment of our flowers is of a winter's chilling frost. Is it any wonder that the only road (mediumship) we hear of, is running "extras" and "specials," besides its until everything on wheels, from a Pullman to a hand-car is going to the gold fields of happiness? * * * Fair Summerland, have thy roses no thorns, thy skies no clouds and thy joys no sorrows? In vain do we strike the rock of wisdom of the wisest spirits. No answering stream of knowledge comes forth to alleviate the thirst of our doubting minds and satisfy our reason. We read Spiritualistic literature, -good, bad and otherwise-by the masters of the faith, until our minds either become intoxicated with the desire to travel in spirit realms via the much advertised medium route or we feel as though we had been to one of "Marmecide's [mental] feasts" and would appreciate very highly a sandwich from

Reason's lunch wagon. With what satisfaction one enjoys a book like "The Great Psychological Crime"! What a hunger, accumulated during many years in the desert of speculation, it satisfies. To me it was the first unclouded message of a future

Welcome alike, though it were given From sulphurous shades, or vales of heaven."

Its author-if nothing more-is most certainly a master of logic. With the trowel of Thought he spreads the cement of Reason; with the liberal use of the square of firmness, yet gentleness and the plumb of admonition for those who have eyes to see and cars to hear, he has erected a landmark in the Spiritualistic wilderness; a wilderness where "contest seems to have no hope and danger no glory." He points out the wrong, the danger and peril, not of the medium, but of the process employed, and tells of a better, safer and more satisfactory road to those who possess the necessary intelligence, courage and perseverance.

The awful thought occasioned by a dim foreboding of how intimately our future destinies are welded together with those of our mediumistic controls, of whom we know nothing, should serve as a palladium against all familiarity with them, as such. One must read this truly great work to fully appreciate the light, the shadow, the novelty of the whole as well as the vivid and durable impression it produces on the reader.

To the thoughtful, earnest and conscientious student, it is both stimulating and satisfying, and it can not fail to prove a lesson of high import to all fairminded Spiritualists.

> The subject of hypnotism which is so elaborately calculated from the author's code of "Natural Science," looms up before one like a picture for the reader to concentrate upon and receive impresions which will awaken a certain train of ideas that shall cause him or her to become attuned to the author's mood of mind and be prepared to receive the second dose (Spiritualism) as a part of that evil (hypnotism) and to embody every thought, every emotion which belongs to it; thus causing the reader to arrive at a conclusion which corresponds to his or her state of mind.

> Whether the author's statements are diseases of the intellect or not, and that he views the subject through diseased eyes, must be determined by our best judgment, our experiences and our associations with those who have passed over to spirit life, remembering that each has cultivated different faculties and that each has powers the other can not aspire to. Science skims the surface; soul penetrates the depths. My experiences as a psychic for thirty years, have been elevating and ennobling, my influences always teaching morality and instructing those with whom I have come in contact that what we worship, whether spiritual or sen-sual, whether intellectual or physical, it not only rules us, but it also fashions us, and what we sow that must we expect to reap.

Does this instruction smack of sensualism and animalism? I most emphatically deny the assertion found in this book that "the inevitable tendency of mediumship is toward animalism."

Almost the next paragraph states that "it needs but an intimate acquaintance with those who follow mediumship as a profession or business to find the unanswerable demonstration of this fact." This leads one to query who were his friends? as, to know a thing to be a fact one must needs be intimately associated with the object of discussion, and if this is the process by which he has gained his knowledge (as it is the only way to know) I am thankful there are few Masters.

He alludes to his method as the only way of gaining access to spirit realms without becoming contaminated with the spirits of our fathers and mothers and our loved ones, as all who desire to come in rapport with earth friends have a "low, debased intent" and their only object is to make us more like animals. My spirit influences always come in that spirit of light and love which partake of the celestial elements that exist in their abode "over" there," and were they deceptive, seeking to degrade and demoralize, they could not appear in that radiance, as thought and intent create their own forms of light and darkness and east their shadows before them, whether expressed on this side of life or on the other, as like will attract

It has never been known of one with a clear conscience, honest convictions and lofty aspirations, to hide behind a screen when he had some work of reform to present to the world which was a crying need of the day, and I feel that the thinkers of the past did not waste time discussing "the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism,-facul ties, capacities, appetites, passions, desires, propensities and ambitions,' when the hour warranted their immedi ate action in this special field of labor. As I cannot here bring together an array of proofs in support of my statesay to it, particularly under conditions ment, without going substantially over which make an independent, conscious the same ground as the author of "The exercise of its rational faculties impos-Great Psychological Crime" has done, and as it would carry me beyond the while the latter is unifluenced and unspatial limits granted, I must content der its own control, thus leaving it free myself with the mere assertion,

Important Question.

What is the "guide" (so-called) guiding in the transmission of his or her "messages"? Is he or she inducing the medium to exercise his or her own capacities and senses in gathering the information contained in the message, or is he or she not merely using, that is, controlling, the intelligence of the me dium for the purpose of transmitting the messages to other, or third parties, as one person uses a telephone to con vey information to another?

Camped on Spiritualist Grounds. I have come in contact with many me diums, and "camped" on Spiritualist camp-grounds, and although I am far from making sweeping accusations, yet I am prepared to say that I have seen and heard enough of things and conditions which substantiate the claim of the author of the above mentioned book, that mediumship on the whole involves processes which are destructive of the "independent exercise of a rational vo-lition," i. e., reason and will. But even if space would allow it, I could not give the cased in detail, because most of the with a separate plane of existence. He parties involved are still on this side of life, and the others have friends and relatives, who would resent any at-tempt todrag their beloved into a public discussion; and without giving activity is not under the direct control names, dates, and surrounding circum of the subject or medium, and therefore stances, those who differ with me will attempt to castleiscredit upon my statements, as J. J. Morse did in the Philosophical Journal, with reference to The the extent to which they are under his Great Psychological Crime, because its author felt justified in withholding the names of several mediums and hypnotic subjects. Only two cases I will here refer to.01 One is related by the French scientist. Paul Gibler, in his work en-titled "Psychism." It is that of a me-dium who, while under control of a vicious intelligence, twice attempted to KILL ONE OF THE "SITTERS."

The second is a personal experience. While at the Delphos, Kans., camp-ground, it was my lot to listen to the most vile and filthy discourse from the lips of a medium while under the concredit his statements referring to that trol of a low intelligence, that I ever better method? Are we so perfect that heard in my life. And that, too, di- we cannot stand any more perfection rectly after we had listened to a most and are we to presume that our present beautiful and elevating discourse given through the same medium while under a different control.

Selfhood Destroyed.

It is safe to say that both mediums here referred to would never have acted or spoken as described, had they been in a normal condition; that is, with all their rational faculties under their own control, and why did these mediums not resist, or prevent an attempt to be used and controlled by a low intelli-gence? BECAUSE THEY COULD NOT, once they had given their selfhood into the keeping of others.

Important Conclusions.

And does not the every-day experience of the race show that the less we exercise any faculty, the less it will develop or even deteriorate? And does not all history show that the more any race or individual created or fostered the conditions under which it was possible for others to control them, the less they were capable of self-control, self-determination, or self-government? And why should mediums make an

Freedom! Freedom!!

In government the world is slowly but surely recognizing the fact that the greatest possible measure of freedom is most conducive to individual growth and dovelopment. In education Froebel has recognized the same truth. In re-ligion the world's best thinkers preach the same gospel, and. Spirit, in its true sense, is not when even Spiritualists are recognizing may be, is not spirit, and "spiritual material" is a misnomer and a self-contradictory expression.

The author holds that man's spirit is plicate every physical organ, heart, liver, lungs, stomach, sexual organs, vermiform appendix and all. It is a perience. scientific fact that unused organs atro-phy and wither away. Will the author kindly inform us whether these "spiritual" (material) organs perform their offices as in physical life? Is this "spirtual" (material) organism sustained by the processes of digestion, respiration, circulation? Is the sex function oper These questions may seem absurd, but upon the author's statement that "the spirit of the individual is a material organism," they are pertinent to the issue and demand answers. In his definition of the human soul the author is somewhat vague, hazy and indefinite. I believe I do him no injustice when I infer that he regards the soul as "Individualized Intelligence, In other words, a portion of the Universal Intelligence forms a nucleus or eddy around a sufficiently evolved human organism and under favorable conditions develops an individuality that may continue forever and this is the "immortal

In the author's view, however, this immortality is clearly dependent upon the immortality of the spiritual (material) body for he repeatedly states in substance that by the willful violation of Nature's constructive principles, the individual brings upon himself the dissolution and disintegration of his spiritual (material) body and that this is the spiritual death, the death of the soul, total extinction. The argument that a material form may achieve immortality through any means whatever seems wholly at variance with the best scien lific knowledge.

The author aims to establish a broad line of demarkation between Nature's constructive and destructive principles continually at war with each other. The School of Psychic Science as well as modern physical science declares and demonstrates that these principles are all in harmony and all constructive. What seems destruction is merely a change of form resulting finally in construction of higher forms. Let us use the author's own illustrations. The boulder is disintegrated by Nature's socalled destructive forces, but what was a boulder becomes earth and germinates the seed which develops the higher vegetable life. Is not this process really constructive? The vegetable or tree in turn succumbs to the so-called destructive forces, decays, disintegrates and returns again in other and higher forms. The stately oak under Nature's destructive forces as dedescribed by the author becomes a bed of coal and eventually ministers to the sustenance and comfort of man. Is not this a constructive process? The so called two principles are one. What was destructive to the boulder was constructive to the plant. What was destructive to the tree was constructive

(2) Those who regard the phenomena merely as means to an end and whose chief aim is to learn the truth and to establish the true philosophy of life here and here after.

If this book shall do no more than to assist in fixing this distinct line of cleavage, it will have been well worth the author's while.

the light of the facts there stated, the very suggestion of the employment of the hypnotic process should bring alarm to both hypnotist and subject alike. The author of The Great Psychological Crime commits the statement of this pregnant fact to the words of a hypnotist himself, and one who in making the startling statement certainly "makes an admission against his own interest."
He thus states:

onsciousness at the time of treatment,

Our author well remarks: "It is worth while to pause and contemplate for a moment what must have been the results had the impulses and incentives to action in the background' of the operator's consciousness at the time of treatment been of a viious and immoral character.'

Obeying Oral Demands.

Continuing, the writer adverts to the fact of a hypnotized subject's implicitly obeying the oral command of his master up to a certain point and then refusing apparently to further obey. But the quotation above made fully explains it. It is because the subject obeys, not same may seem to other hearers to be, exist in nature and form the agent pute it must be as to something else intent of his master. Suggest to a subject that in ninety days from a given date he will come to your house with his coat on inside out, and he most certainly will do so."

"The deep and ominous import of all this," says our author, will be appreciated when the further fact is known that he (the subject) retains no mem ory or knowledge of what has occurred powers and sensory organism of an during the hypnotic sleep. (p. 109).

Wish and Important Warning.

The earnest wish of the author modestly expressed, must here find an echo in every heart. "It is hoped," says he, that this work in its simplicity, directness and freedom from all technicality, may carry into many homes the needed warning, together with a practical understanding of the principles and processes involved."

But the wish is later supplemented with the most solemn warning. If any man yields to the point of his complete subjection, "He finds himself at last stripped of every valuable possession of he human soul, and now trol a single one of the primary faculmethod employed. Hypnotists have alties, capacities or powers of his being with which God or Nature originally invested him as an individualized, intelligent entity. He has become but an automaton, a plaything, a bankrupt, a lost soul. He has entered upon THE WAY OF DEATH."

> Certain Definite Principles. The steps by which this exposition proceeds and culminates in this portentous warning are expressed in clear se quence. Underlying every subject are certain definite principles. A clear apprehension of such principles must be had for the understanding of the subject, and for all its applications. For purposes of expression-to say nothing of instruction-upon a subject, these principles must be clearly defined, and the facts dealt with in the particular field, exactly stated. The speaker or writer cannot hope to be understood unless he supplies these requisites, and the hearer or reader cannot expect to apprehend unless he gives the most discrimithe subject, and involves a nating attention to such definitions and nating which lies at the foundahas fully observed these requisites. His It is the distinction definitions are of remarkable clearness, and his statements of the facts with which he deals, very accurate. Within these definitions and facts the whole purpose and scope of the book lies; and within them he is to be apprehended. I know of no subject where these requisites are more imperatively demanded, and I know of no writing which more fully supplies them. Therefore when a medium is here spoken of it must be unlerstood within the definition. But, let it be said, that definition is framed to express the fact and the condition of the vastly major part of persons with whom excarnate individuals work for phenomenal effects, or specific and definite manifestations upon or in the physical-material, the plane of the And again let it be noted that the definition is thus framed from a life-time of experience with probably every phase of mediumship, and with both planes fully and rationally open to and observed by the man who framed the definition.

The Process Involves Two Persons.

Upon the physical plane all have the advantage of being able to know from observation that the hypnotic process involves two persons, and that the destructive effects referred to in the book follow the employment of that process. We can see the two entities, and watch the operations of the hypnotist, and note the effect upon the subject. It becomes a matter of mere observation that the will of the latter falls into a state of suspension, while that of the especially reccommended to ness or in the least measure trifles with other is the active and dominant one. The Medium's Will and Intelligence. Sir William Crookes states in his Re-earches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism that the medium's will and intelli gence appear to act in an unconscious A more accurate statement of the fact is that another's will and intel igence are acting consciously through the organism of the medium. So he also states that the intelligence upon the other side of life who was once operating through a medium, stated in response to a question, that he was "play ing on the brain" of the medium "as on a musical instrument, and thus moving er muscles." All this, and much more to the same effect testified to by this careful and most methodical observer, concededly making his observations "scientific," goes to show the subjuga-tion of the medium's will by that of another which thus becomes operative through her physical organism. This being so it certainly seems to accord with reason that the organism and the moral status as well, of the medium must suffer from this species of violence. The fact but too painfully accords with this reasonable expectation. But the element not apparently discov ered by Crookes, and certainly not subject to his observation, is supplied in both respects by the book under discus sion. It is the will of the operator, upon whichever side of life he may be, dispossessing and subjugating that of his victim, and using the magnetic current-a perfectly observable material matter-as the agent or vehicle of its action. But Crookes observed and wrote purely from the "scientific" point to purely physical methods within the purely physical plane. He desired to make the report of his researches appreciable by and possibly acceptable to his school; and this made it entirely necessary that it be limited to a state ment of facts lying wholly within the physical material plane. But even with this so, his labors and conclusions harmonize with those of the author of The Great Psychological Crime, supplement ed though the latter be by a much larger area of fact and observation.

Thus, at page 49 our author says: "It is important to bear in mind that there are all shades and degrees of hypnosis, ranging from the lightest form of hypnotic influence through all the deepening stages to the most profound state of complete functional suspension of the physical organism. In the inciplent stages the subject appears to be almost entirely conscious of all that is transpiring about him on the physical plane. the Book. As an intermediate between the purely physical observation and that wherein the rational and normal psychical vision is fully opened, is the observer who speaking from the view-point of the true Spiritualist, accepts the existence of the spirit plane as a demonstrated fact, and also accepts communication from that to this, and gives credit to such communications as valuable evi dence of truths which the spiritual vision openly sees. From the spiritual source have come countless testimonies supporting the statements of this book. Thus in the work of Allan Kardec, it is said upon authority of spirit communication, that the means of control is a "fluid." This is the magnetic current of our author upon which the control "rides into the consciousness" of the subject (p. 175). So Kardec states the phase of the operation showing the extreme results of the protine of about treme results of the practice of absolute control so much deprecated by us all and now called the great psychological crime. Kardec calls it "subjugation," and thus writes of it: "Subjugation is a bond that paralyzes the will of him who is subjected to it, and makes him act in spite of himself. In a word it is a real yoke." And he further states that this may be both moral and corporeal; that is to say it may be complete in every department and realm of man. But Kardec, as is true of so many others, seems not to have followed to the end of the line of reason direct and plain though it be, and thus not to have entered fully into the an preciation of the fact that this whole line of phenomena is a gradation of the same things—a series of degrees of the same method, force and vehicle, having at one end a slight phenomenal exhibition, and perhaps unobservable effect upon the subject, and at the other the fearful "subjugation," and the loss destruction and horror of it. This it is

Will of the Controlling Spirit.

And reporting the testimony of the spiritual operator it is stated in the work on Modern Spiritualism by Eugene Crowell, M. D., at page 38, Vol. I, n answer to the question stated, viz.; How do spirits control the minds and bodies of mediums? My answer is, Spirits foreign to the body impress and control it as does the spirit natural to the body; and both accomplish their purpose by will-power, or force. Certain spirits, like certain mortals, are endowed with eminent magnetic or psy chological power, which they can direct upon certain receptive persons with asonishing effect, so that some or all of their faculties and powers become temporarily subject to the psychologizing ntelligence; their sight, hearing, taste. feeling, thoughts and actions all being such only as the will of the controlling spirit determines; his will being substituted for theirs in the control of their own organs and faculties.

"It is by this soul-power that the spirit proper of the body controls the latter, and by which, when possessed in a greater degree by a foreign spirit, it dominates the will of the embodied spirit and temporarily usurps the exercise of its functions." In this same work is stated somewhat fully the direct testimony of the spirit control, and it bears out with much force the statements of the work now before us. The medium upon that occasion was Dr. Kenney. Dr. Crowell asked the spirit where his own spiritual body was when he was controlling, and the reply was: "Why, now I am standing behind body. (He invariably called his medi-"Then you do not enter his body?"

A. "No, certainly not."

"When you commence controlling the medium, what is your first act?" A. "The first thing I do is to place my hands over his head and move them around and over it in this way.' ing the action to the word by passing the medium's hands around and over my head in every direction, but not touching it). "Then all you do, is to make passes over and around his head until you obtain control?' "Yes."

He said that he could not enter the oody of the medium, but that when he had obtained control he performed every act through the organism of the medium, moved every limb through the exercise of his will; and when he thought or willed to speak, the medium articulated the words, but that the latter was during the time totally unconscious (op, cit. p. 53).

Spirit's Mind Centered in the Medium Dr. Crowell also states his own conlusion, which however, is so obvious that it hardly needs to be stated. He says: "The process would appear from this to be as we before said, similar to that used by magnetizers, and this we believe to be the means used by spirits in controlling; at least until they are able to effect control through will power alone, as many magnetizers are able to control their subjects." The same spirit a few days later when Dr. Crowell again questioned him upon the same subject, said that while controlling "he could hear and see best through the brain of the medium, that his own mind seemed to be centered in the medium's." "It would appear from this explanation," says the doctor, "that the mind of the controlling spirit and that of the medium become blended, and that the stronger WILL OF THE FORMER SUPPLANTS that of the latter. The controlling spirit evidently USES THE ENTIRE ORGANISM OF THE ME-DIUM.' In this work of Dr. Crowell, therefore, s most striking testimony given to the world in 1874. From the observation upon the physical plane he shows that the identity of the force and the method of its use is arrived at. But sufficient as this ought to be to any reasoning mind, the specific statements and exact illustrations of the operating entity, the control leave no room for a shadow of doubt.

So upon a subsequent occasion, himself at that moment in the enjoyment of being able to see within the spiritual plane, he states with reference to the subject whom he calls the "victim. plainly perceived the spirit of a handsome but very sensual looking man apparently in the act of magnetizing her head" (p. 337). The medium afterwards verified his observation by identifying her control from his description as a man whom she had known while in the body.

Again citing from Dr. Crowell's work for the sake of the literal exactness of his testimony in corroboration of one other of the clear and positive statements of the book under review, attention is called to what he says at page 239. The doctor was also at that time able to see clearly and he saw a most beautiful spirit of a young woman. He states that he felt sure that it was his own daughter, but he adds, that his daughter passed from earth-life in infancy, some twenty years previously, and that he was therefore unable to certainly recognize her, but later had it established to his entire satisfaction that it was indeed she. Here is a statement made more than a quarter of a century ago of one of the facts set out in The Great Psychological Crime, namely: That the human being passing into the spiritual life in infancy grows and matures under the operation of the powers of his own nature. But the statement of the later author is more full, and more exact, and in the setting of the entire book, of much greater satisfaction.

Mesmeric Sleep and Spiritual Trance. Dr. Crowell traces the identity between the hypnotic process and the magnetic agent employed in it, and the process of control and mediumship, and "The only difference I can perceive between the mesmeric sleep and many cases of spiritual trance, is that one is produced by the will of an embodied spirit and the other by the will of a disembodied spirit; the force and the means of its exercise in both cases being identical, and probably distinct from either magnetism or electricity as these forces are understood in science." Here again is the precise statement of the present work. But the exposition of 1903 is fuller and clearer than that of 1874. The sense of a mystical but potential difference between "magnetism and electricity as these forces are understood in science" and the agent which controls and subjects and renders helpless its victim in hypnotism and spiritual control, pressed in upon the discernment and understanding of the doctor, but he did not place and name it. Now we have it both placed and named. The agent indeed is the magnetic light, but the force of and for which that is the vehicle and executor, is the will of the operator, whether in or out of the body.

The author of The Great Psychological Crime probably has never seen this work of Dr. Crowell, or any of the others referred to in this article, but the complete support afforded by them of his own clearer, fuller and vastly more masterful exposition gives added satisfaction to the reader.

Hear again one who speaks from the standpoint of the operator, he being yet in the body—a hypnotist. ence is made to the great Deleuze. He says: "By an impulse of my will I convey the fluid (magnetic) to the extremity of my hands; by the same act of volition I impress it with a determinate direction, which communicates the motion of my fluid to that of the diseased person. Nothing prevents emitting it, but there may be in the individual upon whom I act, some obstacle which prevents the effects I intend to produce, and then I experience a greater or less resistance in the same manner as when I employ my strength to lift a burden that is too heavy. This resistance may even be invincible." (Hist. Crit. du Magnet, V. I., p. 93).

In this is found the reason why it is so insisted upon as a necessary condition that the hypnotist's subject, and the control's medium must be ive." and "must yield to the influence." That the agent is the magnetic fluid, and the force the will, we have further good evidence of from the purely physical plane as the point of observation, in the writings of the same Townshend whom Agassiz allowed to try the power upon him. He says.

"I found on one occasion when I mesmerized a person out of doors that the wind had a manfest power to disturb, and as it were, bear away the mesmeric influence." (Facts in Animal Magnetism, p. 466; see also Von Reichenbach's "Dynamics of Magnetism.")

The Magnetic Fluid Seen.

The deduction from this purely physical observation is corroborated by the vision of the rational and self-volitional clairvoyant who can see the magnetic fluid deflected or dissipated by being

OUR SYMPOSIUM.

Our Symposium, embracing a discussion of the book, "The Great Psychological Crime," marks an epoch in the history of Spiritualism, and it will continue to agitate the minds of thoughtful Spiritualists-for years to come. Both sides of this interesting and suggestive controversy receive unqualified endorsement from those high in spirit life, and in consequence this difference of opinion will have to be kindly tolerated. Spirits widely differ in reference to this puzzling question-Reincarnation-and exceedingly hot have been the arguments hurled from our rostrum speakers against it and for it; and equally wide is the difference of opinion on many other subjects of vital importance to the thinking mind. Those who believe that subjective mediumship (to which Spiritualism owes its present prominent standing in the world), is harmless, and results in great good to the medium and the world, will continue to work along those lines, while those who entertain the opposite views, that it is injurious, will adopt the Independent Method. Already several have been educated along the new lines, and can see and hear spirits at will, and will be instrumental in doing a grand work for Spiritualism in connection with those who believe in the subjective method of mediumship. Both methods will be instrumental in spreading broadcast the fact that spirits can and do communicate, and advocates on both sides will evolve their respective work, and THE FITTEST WILL SURELY SURVIVE.

The controversy has been specially interesting, and provocative of thought, and opened up a wide field for speculation. Experiences are related by the opponents of subjective mediumship. that are highly interesting and valuable. and will have a place in the history of Spiritualism. Preserve these symposium papers carefully. You will need them for reference in the future.

LOOK OUT.

Next Week we shall publish an exceptionally interesting and suggestive article from the pen of Anna Rose Mc Intyre. She enters into minute details in giving her experience as a church member. On one occasion when a revival was taking place in the Methodist church, she was entranced, and thereafter for a while she passed through some extraordinary mediumistic experiences. These experiences will constitute a highly important and impressive object lesson to all Spiritualists, to all those who are studying the occult forces on the spirit side of life, and to those who are interested in investigating varous phases of obsession and control. As an object lesson it will go down in history, and be quoted as a most interesting product of a revival meeting. Her article will constitute one of the Symposium which we shall continue next week, devoting only one page to the same. She claims that there was in her case a psychological crime committed. Whether that be true or not, the account of her experiences will be a valuable lesson to all who are interested in subjective spirit control. The Progressive Thinker leads in all things that relate to spirit intercourse.

LEFT OVER.

After issuing two numbers of our paper devoted to the book, The Great Psychological Crime, we find quite a large mass of interesting matter which should be given to the public. No discussion has ever appeared before in any Spiritualist paper that created onetenth of the nterest. Subjective mediumship, so dear to the hearts of many Spiritualists, has been ably defended, while those opposed thereto have come forward with pointed aruments, and contested every inch of the ground, presenting statements that have excited great interest. The discussion has constituted a battle royal. Next week we shall devote one page only to the discussion, leading off with the experience or Mrs. Anna Rose McIntyre.

The Progressive Thinker. NATIONAL SPIRITUALISTS ASSOCIATION.

Annual Report of the President Harrison D. Barrett, for the Fisca Year Ending Sept. 30, 1903.

To the Spiritualists of America, Greet-

Congratulatory.

Another year has rolled away into the eternity of the past, and we are once more assembled in convention to review the work of the past twelve months, and to outline the labor of the year that is to come. At the opening of this conclave, I congratulate you upon the results of its year's work. I congratulate you also upon the progress our cause has made during the year and upon the increase of interest that has been apparent in all sections of our country. The people are recognizing the value of the truths of Spiritualism as they never have before, and are looking to the N. S. A. to have them placed before their minds as their importance warrants they should be.

Retrospective. The past year has been one of active work on the part of the N. S. A. in all of its departments. The various almanacs of the secular papers in all of the large cities of the land were supplied with data in regard to the standing of Spiritualism in general in America, and of the N. S. A. in particular, which facts found their way into print when those books were published.

There has been a more general interest in the subject of Spiritualism on the part of the masses than has been apparent during any previous year in the history of the N. S. A., and the treatment accorded our movement by the secular and religious press, with a few exceptions, has been uniformly fair. The masses are demanding information on occult subjects and the press is meeting that demand.

Several estates have been settled from which certain sums have accrued to the treasury of the N. S. A., in harmony with the wishes of the testators. The settlement of a few estates in which the N. S. A. is interested, is now pending. The association will ultimately receive these bequests, the delay being occasioned by the requirements of the law. One state association and a few local societies have been organized and chartered during the year. Local interest in Spiritualism has almost uniformly shown a marked increase throughout the nation, the only exceptions being in such places as have had bitter experiences with fraud and charlatanry within a few years.

There has also been a greater mand for literature bearing upon this subject than has obtained hitherto, and the N. S. A. has been called upon to supply as much of it as it could. The Spiritualist papers have been more widely read, and books by our best authors have been called for in the way of sales, and for reading in the public libraries of the country.

From a careful study of these and other indications, I am able to report a decided progress on the part of Spirit-ualism during the year, and can assure you as representative Spiritualists, that our National Association is more generally recognized as the supreme head of our movement than it has ever been

The Railroads.

The relations of the N. S. A. with the West have been most cordial throughout the year. Our clergymen have been treated with uniform courtesy and kindness, and in no instance has any unjust senger Associations have received them promptly, and the utmost consideration has been shown them. All refusals were of the Christian church. have been warranted in fact, and there Transcontinental and Southwestern Passenger Associations. I also recommend that the policy of former years regarding clergy rates be maintained during the year next ensuing.

Eastern Railroad Lines. The Eastern trunk lines do not yet recognize our platform workers as cler gymen and base their refusal of clergy rates to our ministers upon the fact that they are Spiritualists. Their rules declare that special rates are granted clergymen who are resident pastors in cities and towns through which their roads pass, yet they have in two or three instances, refused our resident clergymen on the ground that they were Spiritualists. This matter should be looked into by this convention, and I recommend action in the premises, and a test case taken before the Inter-State Commerce Commission, should the evidence offered be sufficient to warrant

This important office was created at the last annual convention and was filled by the board of trustees by the election of that gifted writer and zealous defender of our cause, Hudson Tut-tle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio. Brother Tuttle has served the N. S. A. faithfully nd well in doing the work of his office, and has placed every Spiritualist in America under obligations to him for his earnest devotion to our sacred cause. He has promptly defended Spiritualism from every attack to which his attention has been called, and has never failed to worst the opconents of our movement. He has done N. S. A. invaluable service, and added much to its power for good in the land. I commend his report that will be subto this convention, to the thoughtful consideration of every delegate, and urge that his recommendations be made a part of the legislation of this body. I recommend further that the office of Editor-at-Large be con-tinued for another year, and that, if possible, our faithful Brother Hudson Tuttle be re-elected to it.

Missionary Work.

Four general missionaries in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, were appointed under the orders of the last annual convention, and placed in the field, with a roving commission at a salary of sixtytwo and fifty one-hundredths dollars each per month. Their reports, to be received later, will give detailed accounts of their work and the results thereof. They have rendered our cause excellent service, and endeavored to awaken interest in organization wherever they have labored. No one can complain of their zeal or earnestness of spirit in the discharge of their duties. Special attention should be given the history of their work as laid down in their reports in order that intelligent action may be taken thereon. Later in the season James S. Scarlott was commissioned missionary for the New England states, with instructions to devote quite a portion of his time to Massachusetts. His report will acquaint us with the results of his labors. Brother Scarlett was true to his trust and did his best to serve the N. S. A. wherever he stepped upon the rostrum.

Early in the spring of 1903, Mrs. Loie F. Prior, of Denver, Colorado, was ap-pointed Missionary at Large by our board of trustees, to serve without sal-ary. I am not informed as to the scope of her labors, nor as to the returns therefrom. Her report will no doubt be presented to this convention, and will outline the results of her work. There is an ordinance in Denver prolibiting the practice of mediumship, or restrict ing it to those who pay a heavy license fee. The commission from the N. S. A. as missionary exempted Mrs. Prior from the provisions of this measure. In Seattle, Washington, this commission did not avail anything, hence the necessity of looking into the prosecutions of mediums in that city, as suggested in another portion of this report. Missionary work is always an important feature in the propagandism of the religion of Spiritualism. It can be made a tower of strength to the N. S. A. and to Spiritualism when it is rightly undertaken. While we have had good results from the efforts of past years, I am led to believe that we can accomplish yet more, at less expense of money and energy, by a change of meth-od. Many friends of our movement are anxious to have the N. S. A. missionlaries visit their communities but can not secure them on account of the expense. Others receive their aid, have a brief revival of interest in Spiritual ism and then return to their former in ert state.

Some weak and struggling local so cieties receive visits of two or three days, only to feel the drain upon their resources for some weeks afterwards with little or no appreciable benefit to the organization. This result is the fault of the method now in vogue, rather than that of the missionaries themselves. So long as they feel that they must pay their way, and turn a surplus into the treasury of the N. S. A., just so long will their work be bar-ren of lasting results. Brief visits of two or three days or arouses interest for the time being, but like the old fashioned revival of the churches, no lasting benefit results from them In order to be effective, missionary work would be continuous. A man or woman who is sincerely devoted to the principles of Spiritualism, can make a success of missionary work in any community where the spirit of liberalism prevails, provided he does not attempt to cover too much ground. No local society can be expected to flourish on one or two meetings per year. It is steady, persistent work that tells in the end. All missionaries should seek to fill the treasuries of the local societies they serve-not exhaust them-but exhaust them they must if they only visit them once or twice per year. I firmly believe in missionary work, and recommend more of it for the coming year. Wherever possible, I urge that it he carried on in conjunction with the state associations, and then upon various passenger associations of the the short circuit plan. It would also enable the National body to employ a larger corps of missionaries at much less expense, and thus be the means of spreading the truths of Spiritualism among the masses who are hungering for them, and cannot now obtain them. I appeal to the convention for action upon this matter, and earnestly recommend the adoption of this method in the missionary work of the coming year. I also recommend that more mis-sionaries, rather than less, be put into the field, and kept at work.

Usages.

Our last annual convention authorized the appointment of a committee on usages, and instructed said committee to report to this body. That committee has attended to its duty and its report will be presented to you in the regular order of business. It is one of the most important, if not the most important, is sues that will come before this convention. It is to be hoped that the report of the committee will be adopted as a whole by this body of delegates Its adoption will give Spiritualism a legal standing in every state and territory of the Union and will place all Spiritualsts, who are members of organizations upon an equal footing with the followers of all other denominations. I most earnestly recommend the adoption of the committees report, and the acceptation of its usages.

Camp-meetings. I am pleased to report a more general interest in the work of our leading camps, and a largely increased attendance at the most of them. The N. S. A. has been accorded a royal welcome, and a generous hearing at the majority of these gatherings. It is with no little pleasure that I report complete reciprocity between the N. S. A., and the camp-meeting associations. Specia days were assigned to our association at a goodly number of the camps, from which generous revenues were turned into our treasury. I recommend that special letters of thanks be sent to all camp managements who granted the N. S. A. their special recognition. I also recommend that the same courtesy be solicited for the season of 1904 from all camps. These special days are the means of acquainting the people with the aims, objects, and accomplishments of the N. S. A., and usually prove of great benefit financially. The returns from camp work of all kinds for the present season are not less than $1,500.

Local Societics. In my former reports, I have dwelt at length upon this important subject The need of strengthening this branch of our work is greater than ever, and though as a general thing, the local societies have had a fairly good year, they are yet far from being able to withstand a series of misfortunes. If our move ment is to prosper, our local societies must be sustained and their membership increased. All that I have ever

Henry W. Schimpf, a Critical and Comprehensive Thinker in the School of Personal Experience, the Best Place in the World to Gain the Truth, Most Earnestly Commends The Great Psychological Crime. Do I accept "The Great Psychological Crime" as an exposition of the truth? Most emphatically. Why? Because of a personal experience.

Although not yet 35 years of age, I have been deeply interested in the oc- the case cult for at least one-third of my life. During my search for illumination in things spiritual I have studied with a number of those who have claimed to the child was under a rare, though not "develop" the psychic powers of their students, even to the limit of "adeptship." The last of these was "Kalpa," who is no doubt well known to some of

After a course with him in "Concentration," "Vibration," and "Bandages," I found myself in a thoroughly negative condition, both physically and mentally, culiar development she had attracted to and closely bordering nervous prostra. her the spirit of an Indian girl who had tion and complete subjection.

At about this time my attention was called to Vol. I, of the Harmonic Series, which I read most carefully and at once decided that it was the sanest thing I had ever read on the subjects covered by it. I immediately wrote the author and received an invitation to call on her, which I accepted. Through her I later came in contact with the author of The Great Psychological Crime.

From my first contact with these peo ple their writings and teachings, I was deeply impressed with their sanity, practicallity and high moral character Almost the first thing said to me by the author of the book under discussion was, that if I ever expected to get out of that state of negation and subjectivity and really develop my spiritual powers, I must first learn to live a normal, healthful, practical life on the plane of

In the course of time, however, the child's disposition and appearance almost entirely changed... She grew sullen, stubborn, ungovernable and altogether unlovely...Strangest of all, she gradually grew swarthy and dark-skinned, and her features took on the unmistakable formation and expression of an AMERICAN INDIAN.

The change was so marked and such an unhappy, unwelcome and start-

Having met the author of The Great Psychological Crime, I told my wife something of his remarkable development and psychic powers and that he had made some remarkable cures of obsession, and we were not long in deciding to ask his diagnosis of

On bringing the little girl into his presence he quietly observed her a few moments and at once informed us that an entirely unknown form or condition of spirit domination. He stated that the child was, or had been, what he termed a "natural psychic" from birth, and as such had been able to see and hear and sense her spiritual environment perfectly from infancy. He further told us that by virtue of this pepassed over but a short time before the child's birth, at about the age of sixteen, and who gave her name as

This little spiritual Indian maiden had learned to love the child very dearly, and the association between them was a very close one though not intentionally harmful, nor in the least victous or immoral.

But as the child grew she did what all natural psychics" have a tendency to do unless properly trained from infancy. That is to say, she began to outgrow her spirituality as the physical body grew stronger and relatively more dominant. Her Indian playmate had observed this tendency and endeavored to counteract it. In her effort she had discovered her ability to control the child by the hypnotic process. ment was fascinating and the experience a new one to the controlling inteligence, and as a result the child was ept under constant subjection from that time forward. We were informed, and have since had wonderful confirma-tion of the fact, that her swarthy complexion and Indian features were wholly due to this long continued abnormal relation

We were assured, however, that the case was one that would yield without difficulty, IF WE WOULD FOLLOW

And wonderful as it may all seem, from the moment we left the consultaion room the child seemed to be free from all abnormal conditions, and remained so from that day to this, a poriod of about three years. ANSWERS TO IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

list of questions concerning "The Great Psychological Crime" and the educational system of which it is a part. Your suggestion that I furnish you consecutive answers to be used by you as a contribution to the symposium issue of The Progressive Thinker, meets my hearty approval, and in token of my appreciation of this unexpected courtesy I will make my replies as brief, explicit and direct as possible.

1. What are the authority and lineage of this movement?

Answer. Its authority, so far as the world in general is concerned, rests in the author of the book above named. Back of him, however, is the School of Natural Science wherein he received The author of The his instruction. Great Psychological Crime in this work is giving to the world the results of a personal instruction, a personal experience, a personal experiment and a personal demonstration concerning the laws, principles, forces, activities and processes of which he has therein

One who has taken a complete course in a great university thereafter speaks. upon his own authority concerning those things he therein demonstrated for himself. In giving his knowledge to the world the most he can do is to make a frank and honest declaration of the facts. He cannot compel the world to accept his statement. He must submit it for what it may be worth to each individual reader. This the author has done, and this is all he has attempted to do. If the facts and deductions contained in the book do not commend themselves to the reason and confidence of reader it is not likely that anything the author might say concerning the authority which lies back of him would have weight with his critics. For this reason no particular effort has been made, or will be made, to convince such critics that the work rests upon other or better authority than the author's own word. If, however, the book under discussion, together with those to follow it, shall give such evidences of sanity and honesty as to inspire the necessary faith in those who desire "more light," It is possible that the way may be made for such as these to become personal demonstrators within the field outlined.

As to the lineage of the work. I deem It sufficient at this time to say that the 'School of Natural Science" is but another name for the oldest school of spiritual knowledge in existence. This school has a history that far antedates all that is generally known as "authentic" history. It is Indian and not Egyptian. The book referred to is the result of an effort on the part of the author to express in simple Anglo-Saxon, some of the demonstrated facts of that cient Indian school, and thus bring them within the easy understanding of our practical western intelligence.

2. Why do you employ the term "Natural Science" as the basis of this educational system? Ans. This question is fully answered which I quote as follows: "(1) Physical Science is universally understood to mean that science which has to do with physical matter only. It is therefore, limited in its scope to the substance, functions and phenomena of (2) Spiritual Science, (as commonly understood), is that science which has to do with only things spiritual. It is, therefore, also limited in its scope to a distinct and separate field of causation. "(3) Mental Science, (as commonly understood), in like manner, is limited to a knowledge of the mind with its functions and phenomena.

"Thus, it appears that each of these sciences is limited to knowledge of only a part of the facts of nature. But what term shall we employ to properly designate that science which includes knowledge of the facts of physical science, spiritual science and mental science combined? What term is broad enough to cover the facts of all the departments of Nature? "Evidently no better term could be found than 'Natural Science.' this philosophy is based upon facts in all the departments of Nature, the term 'Natural Science' properly designates the science upon which this work is founded." etc.

3. Do you regard the system which this book represents, as a "religion"? Ans. This depends upon the exact meaning you attach to the term "religion." Webster defines the word to mean "Any system of faith and worship." The system upon which this work is formulated has its foundation in exact science. Upon that scientific basis the "Harmonic Philosophy" been formulated. This philosophy expresses the knowledge of its formulators concerning the phenomena of Natural Science, "as explained by, and resolved into, causes and reasons, powers But over and above the and laws. facts of Natural Science, and the Harmonic Philosophy based thereon, is yet a vast field which has, thus far never been explored by those who are directly connected with this particular work. But the facts of their science and the deductions of their philosophy, to their minds warrant them in an abiding Faith in many things that, as yet, lie beyond the range of their knowledge, and in a worship of the unknown Intelligence which, to their minds, is yet

In this latter view of the subject the system is a "Religion" based upon the facts of Natural Science and the "causes and reasons, powers and laws" of the Harmonic Philosophy.

4. Has it an ethical foundation? If so, outline it.

Ans. It has. I believe I am strictly within the facts when I say that the ethical standard upon which all this work is formulated, and all independent development achieved, is the most exalted, the most definite, the most exact, the most comprehensive, the most complete, the most satisfying, and withal the most simple of anything ever formulated by human intelligence.

But you ask me to "outline it." This I am not permitted to do, for the following reasons: (1) This ethical standard is embodied in thirteen questions and answers which constitute a part of the plan by which the fitness of every individual, who becomes a student in this field of knowledge, is determined. (2) The ethical standard cannot be

To the Editor: - I have received your , these questions and answers in their ex- do upon mediums whom they can con act and literal form. Their publication, however, would enable many to present themselves who are unworthy of confidence, and who would only bring reproach upon the work, as well as upon those who have it in charge.

(3) I am only a student, and as such have only such authority as is specifically given me. This subject alone is sufficient to absorb all the space I shall feel myself at iberty to occupy at this time in your

4. Why do those in charge of the work object to being classed as "Spiritnalists"? Ans. The term "Spiritualism" has hecome irrevocably associated with the subjective process of "Mediumship," as these terms are defined in the book. This work, however, is not subjective in any sense. It is "Independent" in the se that it is the exact polar opposite of "Mediumship," or subjection in any other form. It would therefore not only be misleading, but literally untrue to designate this system as "Spiritualism" and its students as "Mediums," in view of the definitions contained in the book Anyone who will read the book carefully will see that it proceeds from an en-tirely different basis. The term "Natural Scientists" would be a perfectly con sistent designation for the members of this school, and at the same time would serve to mark an important distinction which would be entirely overlooked if we were called "Spiritualists." term "Indo-American Scientists" would serve the same purpose. Why does the author of Great Psychological Crime" limit his definition of "Mediumship" to the "subiective" process of "control"?

Ans. There are two distinct and separate processes by which those in the physical body may communicate with those on the spiritual planes. One of these is by the subjetive process of control, and the other is by an entirely independent process which is the exact opposite of "subjection" or "control."

The subjective process of spiritual control is, with few exceptions, the pro-cess employed in what is known to the world as "Mediumship." While it is true that there are a few "natural psychics" who are generally known as mediums, they are not in the strict sense

The purpose of the author was to exclude everything of an independent nature from his definition. This was done for the express purpose of calling attention to the fact that there are two distinct processes which are the exact opposites of each other. We call a telephone a "medium of communication" because it is a mechanical instrument through which one conscious and intel ligent individual may communicate with another. It is an instrument. To the extent that an individual becomes subtective, psychically, he also becomes an "instrument." To the same extent he becomes a "Medium" through which others than himself upon the physical plane may receive communications from in "Harmonics of Evolution" Vol. I, of those in the spiritual world. But in the Harmonic Series, at page 8, from proportion as he is an independent and voluntary factor in the process he is not an "instrument" and therefore not a

> It is a fact well known to those who are familiar with the subject, that most people call everything "mediumistic" which has anything whatever to do with world. This is thoroughly confusing. for the reason that it does not take into account the "process" employed. In the same manner most people call everybody a "Spiritualist" who believes in the possibility of communication hetween the two worlds of life. This also s a mistake because it does not take any note of the process involved. One who sends a message by electrical energy over a wire by the Morse system. is called a "telegrapher," while one who sends the same message by mental processes alone without the aid of any of the ordinary physical means of communication is called a "telepathist." Why? Because the process they employ is not the same. One uses the wire as a me-chanical "medium" while the other transmits his message direct without

In like manner, spirits who communicate with those in the physical body by means of the purely "subjective" process, call their instruments "mediums," and they are correct, because they control them and use them as instruments. But those who communicate with those of earth direct, without in the least controlling them or using them as in struments, do not call them mediums The reason for this is that the process employed is independent and both par-ties to it are at all times in the full possession of all their own natural faculties and powers. It will be seen that the distinction is fundamental and goes to the very essence of the subject. Without it the uninformed might go on forever without discovering the fact that there is more than one process involved in spiritual communications. The author, there-fore limits his definition for the express purpose of marking this fundamental distinction between the subjective and independent processes of spiritual de-

6. Since he admits that spirits do communicate through "mediums," and at the same time declares that he also communicates with "spirits," why is he not also a "medium?"

Ans. Because he employs the "Inde pendent" method instead of the jective." By the independent method he has come to be master of the process employed. He is not an "instrument" at any time nor in any sense. What ever communications he receives come to him and not through him. They come to him in the same manner that his friends upon the physical plane talk with him. He is master of the process and not a subject of it.

7. In what particular, if any, is the 'independent development" of which he speaks, superior in a practical way, to mediumship?

Ans. In the first place, the process involved is not in the least degree injurious, dangerous, nor destructive to him nor to anyone else. Second, he is at all times in the full and independent control of all his natural faculties, capacities and powers. Third, by virtue of this fact he is personally responsible for every act of his life, in so far as the process is concerned. Fourth, as a result of his own mastery of the process involved, it is impossible for vicious or ship is such that not one of them would, dishonest intelligences on the spiritual, under any circumstances, disclose his involved, it is impossible for vicious or Manualaly outlined except by giving side of life to impose upon him as they practical illustration of this fact will be sufficient. Since this book was published, and at your own request, a patient of one of the leading physicians of this city was brought to the author for his diagnosis. This patient had been under treatment with some of the best physicians of the country regularly for about twelve years, but without the least relief. Very recently he had been examined by two of the leading medi ums of the city, and both of these had pronounced his case one of obsession in which a young lady was declared to be the obsessing spirit. The author also diagnosed the case as one of obsession but declared that the obsessing spirit was that of a young man of low and viclous tendencies, and that this fact alone accounted for certain peculiar experiences of the patient which were inexplicable according to the diagnoses of the mediums referred to. The patient was treated in accordance with the author's diagnosis. As a result this hor rible case which had defled the best medical skill for twelve years, was at once fully relieved.

Spiritual intelligences who are able to control a medium are in position to practice all manner of frauds, imposi ions and deceptions upon him, just as was done in the case of the two mediums above referred to: and he has no means of protecting himself against these results. This is absolutely impossible in the case of one who has attained independence under the con structive process to which the author has referred as the subject of a future volume of the Harmonic Series.

There are numerous other particulars in which the independent development of which the author speaks, is superior in a practical way, to the subjective condition of mediumship. Sufficient have been suggested, however, to an swer the demands of your question, and therefore pass on. 8. Where does the author obtain the statistical data concerning the injurious effects of hypnotism and mediumship as published in this book?

Ans. There is a school of psychic knowledge which, at the present time, is under the direction of a number of the most advanced scientists of the world. These men, who are well known in the various localities where they severally reside, have for many years given their attention to the specific subjects of hypnotism and mediumship without taking the world or even their nearest friends into their confidence. They have made a study of these subjects from the standpoint of cause and effect. with a view to determining the exact nature and results of the subjective.

psychic process, as the same is related to these departments of psychical research. They represent almost every civilized nation on earth, and their researches and demonstrations are along strictly scientific lines. The data pub-"The Great Psychological ished in Crime" are among the results of the studies and demonstrations of the school referred to, of which the author of the book under consideration is a member and co-laborer.

And just here I will volunteer to an-

wer one question, not included in the list you have submitted, but which, I anticipate, will occur to a good many of your readers. It is this: Why do not these men of science take the world into their confidence as to the work in which they have so long been engaged? The answer, in brief, is as follows: "The Great Psychological Crime" is an effort in that direction. But at the present time, and for many centuries last past, the attitude of physical science, as well as that of the public in general, has been such that the men engaged in these lines of study and demonstration would have been branded as either lunatics, knaves or fools, had they ventured to give to the world any accurate conception of the work in which they have been engaged. By the exercise of their patience, forbearance and selfcontrol, however, they have been able to work quietly and unobserved until they have accumulated a vast amount of data upon these and other kindred subjects, which data will be of inestimable value to the world when it shall come to understand and appreciate the efforts manity.

One of the leading physicians of the city of Chicago has come in touch with the author and through him with the school referred to. He has also undertaken the demonstration of some of the extraordinary facts contained in the book. To this end he has quietly made a careful study of a number of cases of aypnotic and mediumistic subjection, and the results, as far as he has gone fuly sustain the data of the school as it appears in the book. Moreover, it is entirely within the range of possibilities for other scientific men all over the world, who have the necessary time and interest in the subject, to demonstrate the substantial accuracy of every statement of a statistical nature contained in the book. It is safe to say that the objections, if any, to the statistics referred to will not come from those who have made a scientific personal investigation of the subject, but rather from those who are either personally interested in disproving them. or who are unacquainted with the facts of science bearing upon the subject. 9. Why does the author conceal his identity?

Ans. There are several reasons, any one of which would be regarded as sufficient by those acquainted with the facts. Among the number are the fol-

(1) This educational work has no commercial side, except the legitimate profit on books which appeal only to the limited student class of men and

(2) For this reason the author must meet and discharge all his material obligations in other lines of occupation outside of those involved in his scientific and philosophic work. These material obligations demand so much of his time and energy as to leave but a narrow margin for the greater work. (3) The author's identity is not wholly concealed. It is, in fact, known to something over two hundred friends and acquaintances, and to a smaller and more intimate group who are receiving from him gratis, a personal instruction. But those who thus know him understand and appreciate the importance of his work, and the loyalty of their friendidentity to the world. Back one of these friends has thus far loyally guarded his hame and his identity in or-der that he may have as much of his time as possible to devote to the vast field of work already outlined for pub-

Except for these precautions as to name, identity and residence, he would be largely occupied in meeting the demands of the merely cyrlous, and thus expend his time and energies in a profitless labor. More especially would his knowledge of obsession and insanity and their cure bring demands for his services which had could not possibly meet until he has finished other tasks 10. Has John Duncan Quackenbos or any other prominent hypnotist ever replied to him on the subject of hypnotism? If so, when and where?

Ans. So far as I know, neither Prof. Quackenbos nor any other professional hypnotist has ever attempted to controvert his position. Just why this is so can only be inferred, until such time as some one or more of these professional gentlemen shall feel at liberty to take the public into their confidence. The author has anticipated that professional hypnotists would be the first to enter the lists in defense of their profession and practices. To no class of individuals has he addressed himself more di rectly nor more uncompromisingly. . 11. Is the School of Natural Science hostile to Theosophy, Mental Science, Christian Science, the Regular Schools of Medicine, Protestant Christianity, or Spiritualism?

these cults, schools and religions much that is true and beautiful. It commends them all for the good they have done and are doing to alleviate the suffering of men, women and children everywhere and lift humanity to higher lev els of intellectual and moral development. While its scientific discoveries have been carried into a field unfamillar to some of these, it lays no claim to knowledge concerning "ultimates." But while this is true, it fixes no limitations for the possibilities of human intelligence. To those who claim to know "God," the Omnipotent, it frankly acknowledges that, as yet it has not attempted to solve the problem of the "Infinite." The field of finite possibilities is yet large enough to furnish it active employment for the present, and no doubt for several acons yet to come. and so long as this condition obtains it finds its greatest usefulness within these limitations. But, for all this, it has no quarrel with those who assume to enter the broader field of infinite nos sibilities. It has proceeded in the past and continues its labors at the present upon the working hypothesis that no one truth can ever militate against any other truth, and that for this reason i velcomes truth from whatever source i may come. 12. Can a person who is very bright intellectually (or otherwise), but who is immoral, utilize the "independent" method of spiritual self-development, and thus see and talk with the snirits? The worst character imaginable can become a spiritual medium, as every Spir itualist, in his sorrow, must confess.

Ans. He can not. The very founda tion of the independent development to which the author refers is morality Through this door every student mus There is no other way. He might obtain an intellectual conception of every principle and process involved n such a development, but until he has adopted the ethical standard into his own life and made it a living principle of action and conduct, he can never ac quire the independent powers of the soul which follow as the natural and necessary result of the independent method of spiritual self-development. He might become a medium, but never a Master.

13. If mediumship has been proven a fact and is the process by and through which the fact of a future life has been demonstrated to the world, why should it be considered a Great Psychological Crime? Is not the result sufficient to justify the means? Would it have been better to have left the world in darkness than to have received its light?

Ans. (a) Mediumship, as defined by the author (page 134), is, "The process by and through which a spiritual control obtains, holds and exercises control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of a medium. Also the relation which exists between the two intelligences during the medium stic process."

It has been shown that the process involved in it is destructive in its operation. But this would not make it a "crime," in the general acceptation of that term, unless the parties employing it had knowledge of its destructive na ture, and then deliberately employed it with intent to do injury. Spiritual intelligences who employ this process chowing that it is destructive, and intending to destroy, commit a crime, No one will question this fact who unierstands the principle involved. The author, at page 7, also defines a

Great Psychological Crime to be "Such a crime against the intelligent soul of man as deprives it of any of the inalienable rights, privileges, benefits, powers or possibilities with which God or Na ure has invested it." He shows that the mediumistic process accomplishes this result. But remembering that in the strict sense no crime can be committed except with both knowledge and intent, the only real crime involved in mediumship is chargeable to those who employ the mediumistic process knowing its destructive nature and intending to employ it for that purpose. Mediumship in itself, therefore, is not necessarily a crime, nor does the author so hold it to be. Th crime connected with it is on the part of those and those only who employ it with knowledge and intent. This should make it clear that the author exonerates every honest medium, and holds only those intelligences guilty who employ the process with intent, knowing its destructive nature. For these reasons it will be observed that the question assumes too much. always destructive, it is not always a And in those cases where it involves a crime, the criminal is always the one who employs it with knowledge and intent, viz., the spiritual controls and the dishonest mediums.

(b) Whether or not till results of me diumship justify the means employed, is entirely a question of expediency. It is one upon which the dithor has not assumed to pass flidement. Nor would his judgment, if expressed, be of any greater value to your readers than that of any other intelligent individual. What he has done in his published work is to call attention to the fact that the mediumistic process as he defines it, is destructive in its nature, and that whenever and wherever it is employed by spiritual intelligences who know the truth and employeit with deliberate intent, a Great Psychological Crime is committed. He also calls attention to the fact that there is a process which is not destructive and which cannot be thus abused.

(c) The third section of this question assumes that if it had not been for me diumship the world would have re mained in darkness. This is an as sumption only, but is not an established fact. Just which came into existence first, Mediumship or Mastership, is an open question. It is clear that through out all the past ages of which we have historic knowledge, both processes have been known to a limited number of all civilized races and nationalities. It bilities that if the mediumistic process had never been known the independent method of spiritual development might have prevailed much more generally; but this is mere speculation and there fore not of sufficient value to occupy your columns. 14. Could the fact of a future existence be proven through the higher process spoken of in this book, without the aid of the phenomena produced by and through mediumship?

Ans. It could. The author and some of his pupils, including a leading physician of this city, as well as many other intelligent men, have made the demonstration with absolute certainty. They have not employed the mediumistic process, nor in any manner whatsoever pended upon it in their work. This of itself should be a conclusive answer.

15. If "Indpendent Development" is superior to the highest phases of "Mediumship," should it not possess supe rior means for enlightening the world regarding the basic principle of Spiritualism, viz., continued conscious existence of the soul of man and the possibility of return for identification by friends upon the earth plane? Ans. It does possess superior means for such enlightenment, because it opens to each individual who possesses the intelligence, courage and perseverance to take the instruction and do the necessary work, a means of making his own independent demonstrations. He Ans. it is not. It recognizes in all is not dependent upon the reports of mediums nor upon the testimony of other witnesses. He makes his own demonstrations under such conditions as to exclude the possibility of fraud or deception. It is true that development under the independent method; to a point where the student is able to make his own independent demonstrations, requires time, thought, personal effort and individual unfoldment, far beyond those involved in the development of mediumship: but the results when once attained are so much more definite, specific, intelligent and conclusive, that no question ever arises as to the facts demonstrated.

16. Is the sacrifice of individuality of the medium any more a crime than the sacrifice of time and vital forces expended by the author of "The Great Psychological Crime, with no remuneration therefor?

Ans. If this question were put in a little different form it would almost answer itself. Its equivalent would be something like this: Is murder or suicide any more a crime than poverty Perhaps this is not quite fair, however and so I will try to answer your ques tion direct.

As stated in the answer to a previous question, the sacrifice of individuality of a medium is not a "crime" unless i is done deliberately, knowing that the result is self-destruction. In this event however, the medium who lends himself to the process deliberately and inten tionally, does commit a crime, as truly as the suicide does. In like manner spiritual intelligences who employ the subjective process knowing its de structive nature commit a crime against nature and against individual life, as truly as does the murderer.

But the worst that can come to the au thor as a result of his refusal to convert his knowledge into money, is simply a self-denial and not a sacrifice. There is nothing in the process which deprives him of the free and independent control of all his own natural faculties, capacities and powers. There is nothing in it that takes from him his manhood He is at all times able to help those who come to him, and I doubt not that he receives a much greater reward for his services than any that could be measured by money values.

Your question sems to imply that it is a crime for one to labor, "with no re-muneration therefor." It would also seem to imply that there can be no adequate "remuneration" except of a material and therefore tangible nature But from what little I have come to know of this work in which the author is engaged. I believe I am safe in saving that that which he receives as a direct result of his giving means more a thou sand times over to him than any mate rial "remuneration" could possibly do

One of the chief hearties of this phil osophy to my mind, lies in the fact that the more one gives of it the more he possesses. This is the exact reverse of the position of the medium. At ev ery subjection of a medium to control he sustains a real loss. True, he may charge a fee for so doing, but within the meaning of this philosophy there is nothing whatever of a purely materia nature that can compensate for the loss of self-control.

17. Why should the world consider the many statements in "The Great Psychological Crime, regarding the de structive process of mediumship, of any weight in reason without tangible proof for their substantiation?

Ans. The world is under no obliga tion whatever to accept the statements of the author as true, except in so far as they appeal to reason, or are corrobo rated by the personal experiences and observations of his readers.

In fact, I believe if you will turn to Part II. Chapter I, you will see that the author fully understood and appreciated the fact that the world would, in all probability, refuse to accept his state ments, and that in giving them to the public he was running the risk of invit ing its condemnation. In more than one instance he has indicated that he simply offers his statements for what they may be worth to the individual reader and that he recognizes the right of ev ery individual to accept or reject them as his or her own best judgment shall determine.

The same may be said of every writer The most he can do is to submit his declarations and await the judgment of his readers. I have no doubt that you Mr. Francis, in your capacity as editor of The Progressive Thinker, have stated a good many truths that your readers have not accepted as such. No matter how definitely you may know a thing to be true you cannot demonstrate its truth by mere publication alone. In both volumes of the Harmonic Series this is clearly and unequivocally admitted, and I believe your own experience will approve it.

Considering the finer forces in Nature the constructive principle, and the principle that controls the lower, grosser materials, and considering that as the soul advances in spirit life it enters into harmony with those finer forces of Nature, why cannot that soul through its growth and finer forces return, passing through the lower spheres of life, to a medium upon the earthplane without injury to anyone? Ans. The author declares that it can so return. He states that no injury occurs unless such a spirit subjets the me dium to its own control. The mere returning of such a spirit does not in itself involve either danger or harm to anyone. But if you should ask if such spirit can subject a medium to its control without injury, I should say that it cannot.

The subjective process of spirit "control" is in its essential nature destructive, and therefore injurious. It does not matter who applies it nor how refined he may be. This does not reverse the law of Nature which lies back of the subjective process involved. No matter how refined or exalted a physiclan may be in his life, or how pro found he may be in his knowledge of medicine, the same dose of morphine administered by him will kill his pa tient just as quickly and just as dead, as if it were administered by the most viclous criminal on earth. It is the process employed and not the character of the individual employing it that must

19. Is it not possible for those upon the earth plane to form telepathic communication with spirits in the higher spheres of spirit life without regard to the intervening spheres or gences; or can such other intelligences intercept and tamper with the mes sages?

Ans. It is possible for one who is an "Independent Psychic" to do this. It is possible for him to establish telepathic communication with the inhabitants of the highest spiritual sphere to which his development will admit him. It must be remembered, however, that an independent psychic is himself mas ter of the process, and not a subject of it. An independent psychic is able to protect himself from the interference of intermediate or vicious spirits.

It is in this that the independent psychic has such an immense advantage over the medium. The one is master of the process, while the other is a subject of it. 20. It is generally admitted by men of science, and especially by physicians and surgeons who employ them, that and surgeons who emplay them, that physical anaesthetics (ether and chloroform), (such structive in their effects. Notwithstanding their knowledge this fact, both the physician and the surgeon administer these physical anaesthetics every day in their regular practice, and justify themselves in so doing, upon broad humanitarian grounds. Now, are they justified in such a course, or do they thereby commit a "Great Psychological Crime?" Ans. This, also, is a question of expediency, pure and simple. The author has not assumed to pass judgment upon such a case. If, however, physicians and surgeons met together and administered to each other, or to their patients anaesthetics for their own amusement or entertainment, knowing their destructive nature and results, it is safe to say that no intelligent individual whose moral nature is intact would at tempt to justify them in so doing. Un der these conditions it does not require a high degree of intelligence and moral development to understand that "crime" is thus committed. Nor would it require a professional detective to identify the criminal. But suppose it were found that by the administration of a physical anaesthetic the patient or subject, while under the influence of the drug, could be used by spiritual intelligences as an instrument through which to deliver messages to those yet in the physical body, then? Would not the end justify the means employed?

It being a known and admitted fact that the process employed is in its es sential nature destructive to individual life, the same question of expediency But in our effort to settle this per plexing question of expediency, we must not forget nor ignore the fundamental fact that these drugs are polsonous and therefore in their essential nature destructive to human life. We must not forget that this is true quite regardless of the purpose for which they are administered, or the motive which prompts the physician to administer them. Even though he were the most profound scientist, philosopher or seer of earth, this fact would not neutralize nor in the least minimize the poisonous property of the drugs nor lessen their destructive results. Why? Merely because it is the process employed that is destructive, and not the physician who sets it in motion.

Under these conditions it must be apparent to every one who is in possession of his reason that the physician who administers these drugs, knowing their destructive nature, thereby assumes a heavy burden of responsibility. No true or reputable physician will ever assume such a responsibility unless he is able to first satisfy himself that his failure to do so would result in greater damage or danger to his patient than that which lurks in the drugs. With him, therefore, it becomes a question of choosing between two evils," and not one of fact as to the nature or effect of the drugs in question.

The same general question of expediency applies to the mediumistic process. No individual, whether human or spirit, who understands the destructive nature of the process, will ever employ it unless he is able first to satisfy himself that the good to result therefrom will more than compensate for the necessary evil. Those who do otherwise commit "A Great Psychological Crime." The peculiar nature of a number of your questions suggests to my mind the importance of calling your attention, and through you the attention of your eaders, to the fact that the author of The Great Psychological Crime" has carefully defined the terms "Medium" and "Mediumship" at page 134 of the book, and that for reasons clearly stated he has given to them certain definite and specific limitations. In other words, he limits them strictly to "the Subjective, Psychic Process." He does this for the express purpose of eliminating from their meaning everything of an "Independent" character, so far as he process is concerned. He then asks his readers to note these limitations carefully, and remember that wherever these terms are employed they must be understood in the limited sense in which he has defined them. This is only fair, for unless this be done the force, effect and meaning of his work are entirely lost. In other words, if you give to these terms larger or more comprehensive meanings than those contained in his definitions, then you and he are talking on different subects entirely when you make use of these terms. You can readily see that in this event you might talk on to the end of time without coming to understand each other.

A practical illustration of this nature recently comes from England. One of the leading writers of that country on the subject of psychic phenomena is a medium. He is accustomed to surrendering himself to the control of outside spiritual intelligences, and they thus employ his hand in the well-known process of so-called "automatic writing." He calls this "Telepathy."

By reference to the book and the author's definition of "Telepathy" therein contained, it will at once bcome appar ent to the reader that the gentleman above referred to, even though a man of great intelligence, might discuss the subject of telepathy with the author a lifetime, and they would never under stand each other unless they should first agree upon a definition of the term and then both carefully observe the lim-I itations of the definition agreed upon.

In spite of my intentions and efforts I have consumed much more space than I had expected to do in my effort to an swer your questions fairly and honestly. I trust however, that in view of their nature and importance, I have not trespassed upon your patience too far, nor abused the privilege you so courteously extended to me.

With sincere thanks for your kindness and consideration, I am,

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," writ-ten by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story,"
"Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound is cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

TWO MINDS IN CONFLICT

Charles Dawbarn, the California Philosopher, Unveils what he Considers the Weaknesses of The Great Psychological Crime, and Displays them to the World. He is followed by a Well Known Lady of Chicago, who Endorses the book and Presents what she Considers some of its Strong Points.

SCIENCE I will now and henceforward venture to address you as N. S. M.

Your claim that mediumship leads to the insane asylum, illustrated by an unproved anecdote or two, means no more than the asertion that love and even sudden prosperity have done the same. Yet no one but yourself would infer that love and sudden prosperity were illustrating NATURE'S DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE. The individual sufferer in such a case is never counted as an awful warning by his sisters, cousins and aunts; nor by anyone, savo perhaps a MASTER IN NATURAL SCIENCE.

My own faith in human immortality and spirit return is well known to readers of this paper, as well as my constant assertion that no inspired medium nor independent clairvoyant can translate spirit experiences into dictionary words of earth life. Tales of such experiences abound, but the philosopher cannot accept them, no matter whether they preach Eternal Death by a Master of Natural Science, or Eternal Joys as depicted by and for enthusiastic Spiritualists. We infer that progress is founded on personal effort in the here-after, but if so we KNOW nothing of its details, nor of the shape of the form through which the spirit must gain his experiences. Hoping you will soon become more mellow-minded. I am. Great Master, your humble admirer, in this CHARLES DAWBARN.

DEFENDS THE BOOK.

This article is not intended as an an wer to any challenge, as an extensive review of The Great Psychological Crime, nor yet a formidable array of statistical data-all of which will probably be forthcoming in due season.

It is intended, however, as the support of a student of modern psycholog ical experiment and philosophy and the Natural Sciences. And these sciences in no wise subvert the position assumed by the author of The Great Psychological Crime.

The writer brings to the study of Harmonics of Evolution, (Florence Huntley) and The Great Psychological Crime, some years of study of psychic phenomena; also an interesting experience as an intelligent ego operating upon two planes of existence-being convinced thereby that a psychological crime is being countenanced in our midst; and that a veritable "terror" guards the threshold of spiritual consciousness, and is admitted thereto by men and women who are passing in a natural mode of development to a point of subsidence where the spiritual is sharply defined.

The first question that has arisen from the "ranks." is the momentous one, Is a psychological crime possible? What Experimental Psychology Discloses.

A study of experimental psychology discloses the fact that men and women are actuated at every moment by MO-TIVES.

Comparative psychology strates that all lower sentient, life is governed instinctively by response to internal stimuli reacting upon the sur-rounding medium and its inhabitants, so as to conserve the life and the perpetuation of the individual and the

Moreover, it discloses that structures and functions are modified and differentiated by the strength and persistence of heredity, elemental forces and secondary characteristics that produce as a consequence of co-ordination stronger. more beautiful and a superior race of in dividuals than in the start of life.

As compared with other forms of consciousness, with gleams, perhaps, of reason for a conduct based upon a painful or pleasurable experience, man is possessed of latent capacities, faculties and powers, that mature normally with the passage of time.

And he shows he is a child of the structive ability and his marvelous systems of thought.

Again, man is constantly and intelligibly impressed with, and by a world of facts and forces, which are slowly unfolding within the internal consciousness as a power hitherto little known and understood-the psychic or soul-

This evolution leads to investigation of the "occult," the "esoteric," the "unknowable"

It is here at the crossing in of the ines of the spiritual and the psychical boundaries that he encounters the un-seen, but felt—laws, facts and forces that require the absolute Mastership of self-soul-control.

He is invading an unknown realm full of the dangers and pitfalls that always encounter the pioneer Thus self-direction in the pursuit of immortal life, liberty and happiness must be his high and holy purpose.

With anxious hearts and brain alert have men experimented and recorded the results of psychological research. Ical obligations which life in its various These records show:

(1) That body and mind are functions one spiritual structure. (2) The ego or soul is a third and hibit or in any way dispossess the intelligent entity against which the physical ligent soul of its personal liberty of and mental energies react in the evolution of reflection.

(3) That here in this psychic life are evidences of a differentiation which marks the tangential departure of a new thing-a SOUL element, which according to all previous scientific reckoning, prophecies the coming of a united kingdom of rational soul life.

Just as in the eccentric Zoophyte and Lepidosiren we have illustrious examples of what is apparently a transition stage in vegetable and animal life, so in man is found the line of demarkation upon which our hope of a further evolu-tion is based—that between the spiritual and the psychical.

And only on the harmonious growth and development of his triune nature body, spirit and soul-can he hope to conserve to eternity the complete individual entity, the Immortal Soul!

A Comparison of the Principles of Choice and Coercion.

Human beings are constantly acting from one of two alternatives, CHOICE or COERCION.

The notion of liberty is innate. The law declares that individuals are free to pursue their avocations undisturbed. That peace and security are the portion of each man and woman irrespective of color, race or social conditions: free to work out according to their own ideas of individual completion, the bet-terment of the individual and the race. Coercion is exactly the reverse. Individuality is destroyed by unlimited 'orlo-man" power with its arbitrary demands and its tributes. Men recognize by the study of the universal whole and law universal, which invariably provides for the individual welfare Involuntary servitude retards the evolution of the human soul, as with the clanking chains of segro slavery yet sounding in our earlit is fearfully exemplified. The will of the white master forced him to cope with conditions that in the advent of his emancipation, were far in advance of his rational development. Thus his nature was further embruted as the inexorable consequence of cause and effect.

A cool survey of the orderly system of universal evolution brings home the conviction strongly and beyond refutation, that an INTELLIGENT VOLITION acting from rational motives, beneficent in intention including all planes of life conserving individual ends and aims acting under the innate laws of concrete being, conforming to a principle; the principle or purpose being demon strated by the purposive association of individual acting with concerted volition under general laws, covering the spiritual and ethical welfare—no less than the physical. This association is the means of bringing out the independent self-conscious worth of the individual in the great white light of collective opinion.

That neither individuals nor elect are chosen for immortal honor. Each one actuated by a desire for progress preservation and happiness, has but to conform his life to the constructive laws of growth and development, furnishing by his own effort the means to the end—to grasp that ideal of the ages, a SELF-RELIANT, RATIONAL, IM-MORTAL ENTITY.

The Crime.

The sciences from biology up furnish illustrious examples of nature's method of producing the natural man, who, without the internal light of an intelligent spiritual principle of direction is but little above the animal friends with whom he shows the primary faculties, functions and powers.

First, what is a crime? A crime in the eyes of the law is an act whereby one possesses himself-of that which by right belongs to another person of sufficient value to be termed property, priv ilege, or benefit to the party so dispos-

Personal responsibility in the eyes of the law is a knowledge of and a recognition of the rights of others, with the will to execute the primary principle of union in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

Referring to the evolutionary order of development (Great Psychological Crime, p. 44,) the science of life finds the evolution of the human brain to have been through the ages as the author sets forth, namely: First, the medulla oblongata; second, the cerebellum, and third the cerebrum. Each division governing the activity of a plane of pre-existence, as it were, and each re tains the original functioning power in the advancing life of the individual. Inquisitive man "plays with life," his investigations prove: (1) That the removal of the cerebral hemispheres of the animal brain, or that the lesion of any specialized portion of the human brain will produce functional derangement; that is, a "progressive mental failure": a loss exactly the "reverse of the order of acquisi tion. That these removals or lesions also will deprive the individual in both cases, animal or human, of the power of self-direction and the loss of the memory of muscular movements.

(2) It produces a pathological, a de fective or a perverted state of the will; in some cases a complete suspension or paralysis of motive power; the animal eing incapable of response to sugges tion from without unless applied as an electric stimulus from without to that part of the anatomy in which it is the will of the operator that the movement shall take place.

The human will is similarly affected. A loss of intelligent expression ensues No progression into a complex mode termed language, is made. Incoherent, unintelligible utterances are the result of applied suggestion, and it is with difficulty that the individual performs the simplest acts of expression.

The power to originate movement is totally destroyed. He imitates only at the suggestive impulse of an ulterior volition. The individual identity, which proves the immortal continuity is lost! Therefore, the primary psychic force is wanting in the intellectual cripple, deprived of the special organs by human agency or by accident, whose function it is to direct the unfolding spiritual life in harmony with the physical and psychical natures of the hence it will readily be seen that the principle underlying a normal process of growth and development is the one of "correlation and economy." Arrested development, hypertrophy, or atrophy is the penalty attached to the different degrees of disobedience to this great law.

The human individual is endowed and invested with capacities and powers by God, which it is his inalienable right to develop to the highest power and of people, some Sundays the attendance broadest capacity, thereby producing in accordance with nature's constructive economy a free, healthful, prosperous and therefore happy man or woman, with the privilege of discharging equitably and rationally the several func-tions and activities; the social and ethaspects entails upon the individual.

It is, therefore, a crime upon the face of it to rob, to curtail, to restrain, to inchoice in its struggle or endeavor to an individual ethical content, either by stratagem or by force. (Great Psychological Crime ch. 8 p. 50).

If we are to retain freedom of thought and action, the sacred rights of individual independence must be kept inviolate -safe from the control of defective, perverted or vicious intelligences which corrupt and destroy, placing ourselves steadfastly in line with constructive principles intended by God to be the means of completing the IMMORTAL INDIVIDUAL ENTITY, or intelligent human soul.

It is admitted by the hypnotist and the spirit control that the objective point is the control of the individuality and personality of the subject or the medium; therefore, whatsoever faculty, force or power that places obstructions in the path of progression, or retards with CONSCIOUS INTUITION the evolution of the human soul, is a PSYCHO-LOGICAL CRIME. 5 MRS. Beside other speakers already reported in your columns, we have been favored with addresses by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. Ida Whitlock, Mrs. Kate Ham, Dr. G. A. Fuller, Mr. Thomas Cross, Mrs. Sarah Byrnes and many others. Visitors have been present from all parts of New England, and all unite in pronouncing Unity Camp one of the most beautifully situated camps in the country; and it is freely prophesied that the hopes of the managers to make it a flourishing, permanent camp, will be abundantly fulfilled. Some of the very best talent in the lecture field is being engaged for next season; important changes are being considered, which it is to be hoped will add to the many attractions already to be found at this popular resort. Sunday, Oct. 4, the meeting for the winter season was opened at Cadet Hall, with Rev. May S. Pepper as speaker, and that Mrs. Pepper has lost none of her popularity with Lynn people was fully attested by the fact that nine hundred gained admission to the hall, while many were turned away unable to find even standing room. An overflow meeting was held in the lower hall, conducted by Mrs. Dr. Caird, assisted by Madame Helyette, Mrs. Dr. Chase and Arthur B. Shedd. Mrs. Pepper will be the speaker for the remainder of the month. Circles are held at the close of the afternoon service, followed by a song service and concert by Chase's orchestra. Meetings will also be held every Sunday evening this month in the lower hall under the auspices of the Ladies Social Union.'

Forest avenue, Sunday afternoon, October 11, at 3 o'clock. We had an attendance of 14-5 grown people and 9 young ladies at our 'lyceum. The exercises consisted lagely of music and getting acquainted. A course of lessons was laid out, which we propose to make so interesting that we will soon be 'playing to full, houses. Our evening serv ice was attended by a large and inter ested audience, and it was a surprise to us. Brother Gilray told them a lot of truths that they could not refute, and they were continually admonished to think for themselves.' Sister Aitkens did wonderful work psychologically, and the tests she gave were acknowledged by all who received them as being true and entirely satisfactory. The music under the personal direction of Brother John Caldwell, was especially fitted for the ocasion. His quartette, composed of himself and three daughters, known as the Caldwell Family Quar tette, is certainly worth going miles to hear. Taking all in all, everything went along as smooth as if we had been organized for years, and our large audiences went home expressing them

We extend a hearty welcome to all our friends and others to meet with us, They will meet with a warm, hearty welcome—no 'cold feet' business with us. With charity to all and malice to none, we will close by adding our slo-gan, "Think for yourselves."

The following delegates were selected to represent the Illinois State Spiritualist Association and other societies at the N. S. A. Convention: Mrs. C. L. Catlin, Mrs. J. R. Francis, Mrs Laura G. Fixen and Dr. Geo. B. Warne.

M. Theresa Allen writes: "On Suna day, October 4, the South Side Spirit ualist Society of Springfield, Mo., had the pleasure of listening to two eloquent lectures from John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, National Superintendent of Lyceum Work. That our good brother lives above the clouds of mundane life where the light of present inspiration may flood his soul, was evident to all that heard him. Such works ers make friends wherever they go not only for themselves personally, but also for the cause they represent."

Secretary writes: "Dr. H. A. Cross will speak for the Hyde Park Occult Soclety, on Sunday evening, October 25. Subject: "The Great Psychological Crime." We also wish to announce that we shall hold a bazaar at our Hail, 323 55th street in the first week of Decem ber and any little donations, however small, will be greatly appreciated; not for the value as much as the kind thoughts that prompts the giver. Ourmeetings are growing steadily, and good earnest workers are coming in with us. Come and see us. You are always sure of a welcome at Hyde Park." C. H. Figuers writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "My hall meetings opened the first Sunday in September, 1903. There was a large audience present to assist in dedicating the new hall, 1749 Superior street. This hall is new, clean and comfortable, seating about three hundred with comfort, and is well-ventilated and quiet. We are working under a state association charter and take a decided stand for state and national organization, as well as for primitive Spiritualism in spite of the clamor raised by The Great Psychological Crime, which, by the way, is, in my opinion, a rather, weak work and which will soon be relegated to the shades of the past. Spiritualism is not on the decline in Cleveland, but is increasing in strength every day; but it is among a newer element that the growth is most noticeable, the pessimists to the contrary notwithstanding. We are alive and moving. More and more of our orthodox brothers are loking into our philosophy; more family circles are being held than ever before, and the number of curiosity seekers is growing smaller. We are prospering and growing in the beauties of our heaven-sent philosophy."

GOOD AND EVIL SPIRITS.

The assayist differentiates the alloy from the pure gold. The skillful surgeon does not call the gangrened ulcer sound flesh, nor does the sensible housewife pronounce a decaying egg a gem of sweetness. Contrasts abound in this, and doubtless in all planes of existence. True, there is no absolute, endless evil, but there are temporary evils, and wretched, black-hearted wrongs to be righted. And this patronizing dilettante talk that "all is mind," that "all is lovely," that "all is good," that "all is right," and that "there are no evil spirits," is a most sickening sort of pot-house philosophy, whether expressed · or · ponderously booked. Safe-robbing and murder are just as much positive and purposed evil deeds as are plans to feed the poor good ones, and to call the former "good" most impudent imposture upon the intelligent public.

SOME OF THE OBSESSIONS THAT

There once lived in Battle Creek a the platform was hypnotized by Prof. I. Stearns, a traveling hypnotist. The Professor's control over this youth seemed perfect. He was pronounced a fine subject; yet after a few evenings Stearns lost his psychic grip. An un-seen hypnotist with a mightier willpower than the Professor's took him out of his hands, and he became a medium, spirit-controlled. He was also conrolled by other spirits, proving their identity, and very intelligent. Later, I saw him obsessed by a very demon. He was not himself while under control And when being dispossessed, by a sulast century, what a ghastly showing of perior power, he fell to the floor, be came rigid, his pulse ceased to beat his eyes rolled back in their sockets, becoming blood-shotten. IT WAS A BATTLE WITH THE DEMONS.. A family by the name of Smedley, liv-

The author of "The Great Psychological Crime" denies the reality of selfhypnotism. In this he is right. A man might as well attempt to lift himself might as well attempt to lift himself and spiritual, spiritism and Spiritual-over a hedge by his car as to attempt to ism. The first is an old-time fact under hypnotize himself. The author, admits the fact however of hypnotism, and dilates at length on its abuses. This was surely needed.

Every thoughtful student of the occult discriminates between, hypnotism and mesmerism. They are not synonyms. I never knew a person injured by being mesmerized by a good, clean, conscientious, trustworthy operator, and have known many cured by the impartation of a vitalizing, life giving

On the contrary, I have known many seriously injured by hypnotism. It can It can amuse; it can kill. have known degrading suggestions and thoughts left upon the minds of those who had become subjects of traveling operators. Their will power was weakened, their vitality partially sapped, and their higher soul-emotions were tampered with till the mental door was opened for various vices, obsessions and insanity. These hypnotizing insanity. tramps are a menace to health and happiness, because the impressions made upon the subject's mind, generally, if not always, are acted out later in a semi-conscious, somnambulistic or conscious state in the avocations of life. That hypnotism is susceptible of better usage is admitted. That the author of this book has never been hypnotized-never been controlled-is not a medium, is, as I understand the word "medium," for him. rather than against him. For years I have tried to have Spiritualists substitute the word sensitive for medium. Either sensitive, psychic, or intermediary, is a better word. Medium is not necessarily connected with anything either intellectual or spiritual. A wheel barrow is a medium for dumping truck into a ditch. This author has never been "a medium." It is well, and yet I will vouch from the spirit of the book that he is a sensitive, a clairvoyant, a clairaudient, a gifted message-bearer of heavenly truths, in brief, a Spiritualist, having grown up into Spiritualism normally, something as the rose-bush grows up from the sun-tempered soil to bloom in spring-time. Geometrically speaking, Spiritualism boid—a blossoming tree by the river of life, with many differentiating branches, some of which are ungainly, and others dead. These should be removed. This was the work that the writer of "The GreatPsychological Crime" set himself oung man, E. C. Dunn, who while upon | The legitimate vegetables of the garden grow all the better after the weeds have been pulled up and cast into the fire. Some of the noblest and most royal souled Spiritualists that I have ever met never sat in a seance-room, never saw a "medium," and never heard a Spiritualist lecture. They sat in the silence of meditation at given timeslived the life of the just, and raised themselves up through aspiration and prayerful effort, to the plane of con-scious spirit life—the abode of pure spiritual presences.

UNSEEN SPIRIT HYPNOTISTS. As there are mortal hypnotists inested with potent wills, so there are spirits equally endowed, functioning behind the screen of mortality. These may exercise their will force upon persons all unknown, providing there be a scintilla of sympathy between them to serve as a fulcrum. No psychological adept will deny this. PSYCHO-HYPNOTISM.

This is a better phrase than the bare word, hypnotism, which refers only to a mental act, and that often a selfish one; while psycho, or psychic, from psyche (Greek) signifying soul, refers to the higher moral nature.

In my psychic experiences in healing, or in treating the obsessed, I universally inform them that my motives are good, that my aims are moral and conscientious, that I carnestly, prayerfully seek their benefit, that the Christ-angels of God are my helpers, and that, if possible, I will not only remove their troubles of body and mind, but impress them with a healthy, happy, cheerful, uplifting influence—an influence that will educate and ennoble; and more, it will augment self-consciousness, self-control, self-mastery.

No scholarly inclined observer, wellread in literature, can fail to know of the hypnotic wrecks that lie along the pathway of human life. Here is a re-corded case appearing but yesterday in several journals, and among them the Nashville (Tenn.) American:

of Experiences, in Discussing

The author of "The Great Psychological Crime" has dealt with only one or two of the more marked phases of Spiritualism. A. J. Davis, in one of his volumes named twenty-seven phases of mediumship. Prof. Buchanan named others, and the late Prof. Grimes still others, making in all forty-two, corresponding with the phrenological number of the brain organs. One of these is clairvoyance, and yet nineteen twentietus of this advertised and pronounced clairvoyance is not clairvoyance, but a panoramic presentation; that is to say, some spirit partially hyp-notizes a medium, and then wills this mediumistic sensitive to see this or that-to see pictorially just what the spirit wihed the subject to see. A Warning and a Promise.

When I survey the long list of wellknown names, whose able owners are to put themselves on record in this Symposium, as friends or foes of the "Storm Center" book, I cannot but feel that any word from a mere humble student will be of small moment. But remembering the mite of the widow of old, I am happy to offer the little I have to the cause of truth.

Just two years ago the even tenor of my way was disturbed by a friend, who monics of Evolution."

I looked at the picture on the cover and smiled. Already I knew the contents of the book; but I indifferently turned a page to the index of chapters and read "Chapter I .- Preliminary statement."

Oh, yes, this will tell all about the wonderful way in which the laws of the universe have been revealed to the modest author, etc.

"Chapter II.—There Is no Death." Of course not! I know all about the disintegration of physical man—the ashes, the chemical atoms, the vapors and gases, the return of the raindrop, and the absorption of the mineral substance into new animal life, and I know about the seven, or is it ten, planes of life, and Karma, and Nirvana and the Happy Hunting Grounds, yet what do I know?

"Chapter III.—Life After Physical Death Is a Fact Scientifically Demonstrable.

Aha! I sit up! "Scientifically demonstrable!" Indeed! Probably Spiritualism. I read on hurriedly, heading after heading. It sounds different. I think I will read it. I turn to Chapter I.

And an hour later I lay the book down at the end of the third chapter. I am still sitting bolt upright. I have not moved. But I am awake and I fear But this symposium is on "The Great Psychological Crime." Pardon my digression. I cannot separate the two books; they belong together. I waited a year and more for the latter volume, for it was my good fortune to meet the author of Harmonics, and from her I learned that a new book was in progress of writing.

In time it appeared, with its clarion

note of warning, and its undertone of hope and promise. The warning is to those eager souls who, braving the criticism and ridicule of the world at large, have boldly crossed the threshold between the two worlds of matter and spirit, and are giving to humanity the results of their investigations. If even half of what the book claims be true, must not every hypnotist, every tive, every idle experimenter with the board and like devices, pause before he runs the risk of drawing upon himself the further consequences of his

Without actual personal demonstration, most of our belief or disbelief must rest upon our faith, or lack of faith in the integrity and sincerity of the au-

From his own concise and clear de scriptions of many of his experiments, I think most persons will agree that he is speaking the exact truth, or he is telling deliberate falsehoods with the in-tent to deceive. It would be the height of absurdity to say that he is the victim of his imagination, or of his sub-conscious mind, or that he presents this book as another theory of the nature of the hypnotic and mediumistic processes. He is relating the results of real experiments, or he is fabricating incidents to fit his own theories.

The evidences of his insincerity have not been apparent to me so I leave that for some more acute person to present, while I say a word on the other side.

I confess that, being a woman, I would like to say, "I know the book is true, just 'because' I do." However, I have a reason or two back of that insufficient argument. No one can read the book without be ing impressed by its clearness and simplicity of diction—its freedom from am biguity, its masterly logic, and its abso lute fidelity to the question under dis cussion.. The author most carefully discriminates between his facts and his theories. He does not even say that this or that has been told him by his in-structors in the School of Natural Sci ence. On the other hand, he plainly and uncompromisingly says that his facts are the results of personal demon stration, and personal experience, therefore upon himself lies the whole bur den of responsibility for his statements. Again, he tells us that he has been twenty years engaged in acquiring the knowledge which enables him to speak with unconditional assurance. Twenty years is a long time; yet how many of us had ever heard of him? Who has seen his advertisements in the daily papers? Where is the profit to him when he shall have given the results of his twenty years' work to the world? I leave the question open. Added to these self-evident arguments, it has been my privilege to meet the author; and a personal acquaintance but increases the confiduce which the book inspires. The familian occult teacher is a slight, dark-haired man, below medium height, with long hair, an air of abstraction, and a hand extended for a twenty-dollar bill. Note the contrast.

One is presented to our author, and he finds himself shaking hands with a pleted sexual organs.

If you want to enjoy life, you must kindly, courteous gentieman, get your nerves in good order. Nervous friendly smile, and gracious, though dignified bearing. As interested in the humble seeker after knowledge as in the man of wealth and influence Neither power, riches nor social position are taken into account by him. He stands in an absolutely independent position, for the student need not bring his pocket-book, the requirements are mental and moral only.

If you think that everything can be bought, and that every man has his price, try it. Use any subtle means at your command, and satisfy yourself. Lastly, I have received the formulated Ethical Standard of the School of Natural Science, and can say that it is the most perfect rule and guide for a life of usefulness, happiness and continuous development that, so far as I know, the world has ever known.

But "The Great Psychological Crime" is not only a warning—it is also a promise. If the status of the individual on another plane of life depends upon the use he makes of his life here, it is of the greatest importance that he know how to so order his daily actions and thoughts that his earthly existence may blown upon. But the striking fact is that as the magnetic current is thus removed from the subject the will of the operator with which it is vivified falls to reach and control its victim. In this may be seen a prognant suggestion as to the "casting out of devils," and somewhat of the method of it. For one whose faculty of spiritual insight is rationally and normally opened may see the malign current of control, not only diverted, but actually reversed. This however, is not by the motion of the wind, but by the power of him who knows the law and is able to apply it. In this connection the corroboration by a control of the cases and the reasons of them stated on pages 240, etc... of The Great Psychological Crime, is worth noting. The same matter is reported upon by Dr. Crowell as follows:

'At one of Mrs. Conant's circles the question was asked: If a disembodied spirit should desire to indulge in the habit of smoking, does it have the facilities for doing so in another life?"

The answer was: "Yes, because there are spheres in that other life where the gratification of all such perverted appetites is a reality as here with you. Those spheres are closely allied to your life, and come within the mental and moral spheres of the same class of individuals here in the earth life. So through the smoker here the smoker in the spirit life enjoys his cigar. Through the drunkard here, he who was a drunkard here but has gone to the spirit land, returns and gratifies his appetite for liquor; or in other words, lives in the mental sphere of the drunkard and thus obtains for himself all the experience that the drunkard here experiences."

At another time through the same medium the question was asked: "Do spirits influence some individuals to drink and to commit other offenses?"

The answer was: "Yes, there never was a greater truth Finding conditions that are appropriate to their designs and desires they attach themselves to those persons possessing these conditions and downatsoever they may see fit to do, whether it be to get drunk, to steal, or to commit murder."

A Spirit Uses Profane Language. Again the doctor on one occasion rebuked a control, who speaking through the organism of a well-known medium,

Dr. Henry Slade, used a profane expression. The control replied: When in earth life, I did not usually indulge in such language when conversing with gentlemen, nor do I ordinarily now when communicating through this medium; but this poor brain through which I am now speaking is all afire and is a ready medium for such modes of expression. But I must say no more now as I CONSUME THE

and are controls who do not use objectionable language, but on the contrary seek to speak well both as to form and substance. not the fact that the spiritual intelli gence controlling a medium "is able to use the physical body of the medium as if it were his own?" That "every impulse of his will is executed by laugh, sing or cry through the vocal or-gans of the medium, or write through his hand, or perform any other act that he may desire?" It is submitted that of the matter well known to all ical plane can these facts be except "by to this is the direct statement of the of the power of independently and self-consciously looking within the spiritual plane, as is the author, sees "with wonderful distinctness the strong, luminous current of magnetism as it courses the requisites of true spiritual development of an individual. It is conditioned in and "measured by the intelligence with which he applies knowledge to the accomplishment of moral purposes" (p. 236).

The process of the subjugation and domination of the subject, the destruction of his will and the appropriation of his organism by an alien will, are the things protested against and demned. In this matter there is no "end that justifies" this means. The illustrations of Mrs. Huntley's author occurring upon pages 207, etc., are sufficient. An end sought and a means em ployed may each have its own morality The one may be right and the other wicked. Under the latter description falls the process which creates the medium viz: "A physically embodied person whose will, voluntary powers and sensory organs are subject to the will definite and scientifically comprehensi-13); and the subject, viz.: "A physically embodied person whose will, voluntary powers and sensory organism are under the domination and subject to the control of a hypnotist" (p. 8).

etc). The book is not even controver clared the possession and full enjoy ment in a rational, independent, selfprinciple of the process—the one process for both fields of its operation; and from the nature and principle of the thing as well as from its visible and lamentable effects, he voices a condemnation of its use.

whole purpose of the creation is the firm establishment of Individuality, an indefeasible "I am,' and for the in the movement of the will-never perfection and supremacy of the will is sentment and a feeling little short of horror. The demonstrated fact shows still further establishes and vindicates her unalterable demand for the moral observance by destroying, in the last stages, the power and organism of the operator as well. And the reason of this is not far to seek.

it is that man's health and progress in his independent, self-conscious power to will, and upon the independent and self-conscious exertion of that will to impress in, and upon and through his organism, the moral law.

For this he must labor, and to his la bor his organism must respond. For this his will, and not another's, is the executor of his soul. And because this is s the opposite course is the way of death. Nowhere are these things more clearly

SPIRITUALISTS ATTENTION!

On the 15th of November the Price of Stock in Dr. Peebles Institute that Will Pay Handsome Returns Act at Onceio

At a recent meeting of the officers and managers of Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, Ltd., it was decided to withdraw the special offer in the sale of stock now being made Spiritualists, and the date set for the withdrawal was November 15. This step was decided upon because the block of stock originally set aside for this purpose has been fully subscribed. If you have some idle capital that you would like to put where it will draw good dividends from the very start, you should write Dr. Peebles at once for Prospectus and full information concerning the very liberal offer that will so shortly be withdrawn. You do not need to be wealthy to share in the Doctor's company; the small investor is just as welcome as the large. The person investing $10.00 will use his influence just as strong as the one investing many hundreds, and it is the good wishes and moral support that is desired more than the money.

A small amount invested in Dr. Peebles' Company to-day will bring you handsome dividends from the first, with every promise of much larger ones after a year, and a great increase in the value of your stock. In two years from to day money invested in this stock, as it is offered now, will have increased many fold in value, and will be worth several times as much as the same amount would it allowed to lie idle, or put away in a bank where it will draw only 3 or 4 per cent at bost—this our caudid opinion. If you have any amount above $10.00 you can spare for investment, write to-day for particulars. Address Dr. J. M. Peebles. Chairman, Box 2421 Buttle Creek, Mich.

It is a declaration of and for morality, and a condemnation of method because more clearly put than is this upon page 370. The author there addressing the time. clergy, says: "It is impossible for you or anyone else to successfully deny the fact of mediumship. It is equally imposany more than to admit the existence of the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Rich his acts and such only as he performs a murder is an admission that murder is right. To admit there are genuine spiritual communications through mediums is by no means an admission that the process employed should be commended or approved, any more than to admit a forgery is equivalent to a declaration that forgery is right."

There are but two questions in the matter. First, is the will of the subject suppressed, and he made subject to the will of the operator, and this at the expense of the subject's well-being? And second, IS IT RIGHT? To answer the first in the affirmative and the second in the nagative is the purpose of this book and the work of which it is a part. If one sets himself against this work let him be sure of his own moral attitude. We hear much about the subtle electric current and we are fond of say ing of that science, "It is only in its infancy." We also hear much about the vet more difficult and less understood magnetic force, but the popular mind has not yet, perhaps, advanced to the point of predicating here a science with its field surely passing under the dominion of man's intellect as its laws are followed out and formulated its condiions and operation known. But that That it has to do with the subtle yet potential play of the human will, and therein of Spiritual qualities is just be applied to down more the forest difference. ginning to dawn upon the consciousness of the world. With the first perception of this truth THE DEMAND FOR MORE LIGHT IS HEARD, and it ever grows louder and more insistent. And along these lines lies in large part, the ble foundation of morality. The moral law which says: "Thou shalt not kill," finds its comprehensible force in the presence of a murder. The great moral law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor," becomes definitely comprehensible as a living and operating force in human life in the presence of an ACT of love whereby the neighbor is helped and his soul advanced on its way to the peace and happiness of its perfection. enactments in the physical plane are the demonstration of hell and heaven. They cease to be moral propositions merely, but become moral propositions with place and method and definite agency added. All this is found within the purpose of this writer and the pages of his book. Let the Goliath who is against it beware of the little stone which smites in the center of the forehead. GEORGE MALCOLM. New York City.

And coincident with the direction of this current upon and through the subject, the purpose-the will-of the operator is expressed by or through the organism of the subject in manifest obedience—the obedience of domination subjugation-subjection! And here under the crystal-clear logic of the author is made plain the deep moral significance. He says: "Individual responsi-bility depends at all times upon the ability of the individual to exercise his volition independently, self-consciously and rationally. That is, every individual is morally responsible for such of independently (i. e., of his own free will and accord); self-consciously, (i. e., knowingly and intentionally), and ra-

And in exact proportion as the individual loses the power of self-control or As opposed to this is as clearly stated

Hypnotism and Medlumship Admitted.

Let it be here again said-for it cannot be too plainly kept before the mind in considering the contents and purpose of this book-that the facts of mediumship and hypnotism are not denied or even questionel. On the contrary they are admitted with the most comprehensive fullness (pages 11, etc and 137, sial, but is declarative of the results of an unusually extended personal observation and experience. The writer has noted the fact of a process obviously in operation in hypnotism and mediumship. He points out the identity in character of the same in both cases as evidenced in their results. GEMS FROM HEAVEN.

Transition of Thankful Gaston-A Great Soul and Rare Medium.

Thankful Caroline Hammond was born in Rushford, Allegany county, N. Y., June 5, 1836, and she was "born again" at 3 o'clock a. m., Sunday, Octo-

Many hundreds-or thousands-who have visited Lily Dale at the great annual camp-meetings, will remember her he the wife of Hon. Athelston Gaston; and many have remarked her intelli gent and attractive appearance, though an invalid dependent upon a wheel chair and an assistant to convey her paralytic body about the grounds and to the meetings, where she was a regular attendant on nearly all the lectures, and one of the most appreciative listeners, of all the varieties of thought served up to the vast audiences that listened with rapt attention to the orators of the day.

Many, too, have observed and commented upon the tender care she recelved from her husband, who left nothing undone that could be done, within the knowledge of man, to make her as comfortable as her condition permitted. She was a woman of more than common intelligence and her judgment was remarkably clear and comprehensive. Her intuitions were more reliable than reason in the settlement of abstruse questions, and her husband relied upon her counsel and guidance in all his un-dertakings. He has been a successful business man and a trusted agent of the people in official capacities for many years. Several times mayor of the city of Meadville, for 15 to 18 years president of the Lily Dale Camp association, and with this record before them, his party elected him to the United States Congress, where he served two years to his credit, and to the honor of his friends. He was converted to a belief in Spiritualism many years ago, by means of her mediumship, and it added much to both their lives as a beacon light and a private counsellor.

By inheritance she had very weak eyes, in early life; yet her thirst for knowledge led her on against all difficulties until she acquired a fine education, and taught school some fifteen terms in Pennsylvania and Iowa. She was a medium from childhood, and in hen early maturity she became a re-markably successful message bearer, converting many hundreds to Spiritualism, her husband among them, but her negsitive, retiring nature would not alher to become a public medium. For several years she was entranced, and entirely unconscious while these messages were being given. Her well balanced mind, decided individuality, and clear judgment, which continued undimmed during all the years of her after trials and sufferings-the last seven years being a helpless paralytic -do not confirm the theory that mediumship demoralizes the intellect and destroys individuality.

To know her was to love and admire her. Her presence was a moral tonic and an intellectual stimulant. Her last years were full of suffering and privation, but through it all she preserved her cheerful, hopeful trust, and never lost sight of the spiritual truths that had lighted her mind in the years of health and activity. This was a great comfort to her husband, and many friends. Between them there was an unusual agreement of thought and sentiment, and their lives, as known at home and attested by all who knew them best, were in remarkably harmo-Her name has not been so widely published as his, nor did she aspire to any notoriety. But her influenge and far-seeing intuition and rare judgment have been present in all his public life; and he has been guided more by her counsels than by his own judgment and reason.

Their home has been a center of spiritual light, and a rest for sensitives, for many years, and there the angels have ministered to inquiring doubters and blessed many hundreds with the knowledge of immortality. The last rites were conducted at their spacious home in Meadville, Pa., on Wednesday, October 7, 1903, by Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. Clara Watson and the writer; and a beautiful illustration of the influence of Spiritualism was in it all. Each speaker dwelt briefly upon the significance of death, and more upon the value of a royal life, such as this occasion represented.

Mr. Gaston felt the situation deeply but accepted the inevitable as legiti mate, and looked tenderly through the rifted clouds to see the bright reality that now clothes the radiant form of his life companion, in whose love he has grown strong, and in whose wisdom he has trusted and prospered.

Her mediumship represented a varie ty of phases, such as raps, tips, panto-mime, trances, and automatic writing. In its early stages she was controlled by a deaf mute, who for a time was not understood. No one-not even the medi um-knew anything of the deaf and dumb alphabet. But finally an interpreter was found who readily understood her signs, and with much joy she showed her relief and gladness. After that many remarkable messages were received from the deaf mute. I subjoin a few specimens of her intellectual quality, and also some obtained by tips, etc. Usually names, or initials were signed to each message. Some of them were unknown to the circle, and others were recognized as tests. Most of them were gems that negative the charge that spirits never give us anything of value, or literary merit. The following poem was tipped out rapidly. It is not perfect, of course, but it can hardly be called insignificant or below the standard of many who think they write poetry on earth.

A Wreath to Sarah.

A wreath of flowers I bring to thee. Faith, hope, and love, and charity Compose the garland rare. Around the soul they do entwine, And let it with thy thoughts combine, This heavenly crown so fair.

The scarlet buds of faith ne'er fade; Alike in sunshine and in shade Its petals will expand. soul with its pure fragrance fraught. Looks o'er the ills of life as naught, But heralders of blessings brought Forth by the Father's hand. The golden flower of hope reveals A mellow-tinted light, which steals All sadness from the soul. All prospects dark are hid from view, So covered with a roseate hue Which fills the soul with life anew,

Its powers to unfold But ah! the blossoms of pure love Spread o'er the wide expanse above, That makes the spirit home. To nature's emblem ever true I dress the flowers of love in blue,

Or paint them in the glorious hue Which fills the heavenly dome. Whene'er its petals are unfurled, Whene'er it spreads o'er all No room is left for strife. Stern war in its pure fragrance dies. Oppression from its presence flies, orgot the orphan's tears and sighs.

And all with joy is rife Next Charity with spotless leaves, The gratitude of earth receives Where'er its buds unite. O'er all men's falts it draws a veil, And only tells the pleasant tale Of virtue's deeds and love revealed

Upon its blossoms white. These priceless ornaments entwine, And let them with thy being join, And bloom forever fresh Within the garden of the mind. Let their united beauties shine Faith, Hope, Love, Charity, combine

To draw forth all thy powers divine,

Thy soul shall ever bless. I submit that this poem is quite an accomplishment for an inanimate piece of wood. It seems to me almost as intelligent as a shower of stars. When we whose psychic conditions these messages were given, was all her life a medium, and one of the purest, brightest, and noblest of her sex, "without variableness or shadow of turning," and lived past her 67th year. It does not seem to imply that mediumship is fatal to health or good morals. Week after week and year after year the private sittings at the Gaston home were a source of comfort, instruction, and sweet spiritual affection, that gave a halo of rest and cheer to all around it, and in this light they walked and worked together, almost as one soul in wo bodies, through the years of world ly effort and prosperity, as well as in he more trying seasons of affliction that attended her decline. Now she is a member of the higher family of souls but still in the silence they walk closer than ever to each other, in the blessed companionship which death does not change, or physical absence chill. In her going, this world has lose priceless jewel and heaven has gained a radiant and richlyendowed soul

LYMAN C. HOWE. Conductor Marshall Burnham.

A wire call took me to Collinwood-7 niles east of Cleveland—where I shared the hospitality of David H. Rogers and his estimable wife, and on Tuesday, October 13, a large audience met at the late home of Marshall Yates Burnham, to honor his memory, and celebrate his birth in spirit life. He was a conductor on the Lake Shore railroad over thirty years, and was killed instantly by a collision in Buffalo, with an incoming passenger train, October 9, 1903. 'He had been a Spiritualist nearly all his life, and was an honor to the cause as well as to the human race. Born in Gustavus, Ohio, April 5, 1840, married to Sarah L. Miller January 19, 1862, he leaves a wife and two daughters, all of whom are comforted by the spiritual gospel, which was presented to large assemblage at the funeral. The Masonic fraternity joined in the service, and Rev Dr. King-a friend of the family—made the opening prayer. The day was rich with autumnal beauty, and the air was soft and suggestive of the world of light and gladness just beyond the shadow of death.

Mr. Rogers is also a Lake Shore conductor, and takes The Progressive Thinker, and he thinks. The people of Collinwood are mostly strangers to spir itual truth, and this funeral gave then a chance to hear for once, some things that surprised them. The body was taken to Painesville for burfal, and there the last words were said in tender memory of the noble life of Mar-shall Yates Burnham, while the purple splendors of autumn clothed the scene with visions of beauty; and voices of hallowed emotion trembled from soul to soul as the silence wept, and longburied years repeated their echoes in the pulses of the hour. Silently, sadly, we turned away, and tried to realize the brother rejoices in his new-found free-

Waiting at the depot, I was pleasantly surprised to meet the smiling face of A. Grattan Smith, a veteran in the cause, and his family with him, twenty years ago, were famous in Ohio and at Lily Dale as the sweet singers whose music, like that of James G. Clark, stirred the spiritual emotions and led the way to heaven. He. too, reads The Progressive Thinker, and appreciates it; and his fertile pen often gives to the press some great, good thoughts and original gems. A ride to Dunkirk had inspiration in it, for a part of the way we made seventy-two miles an hour; so the conductor told me, and his word is trustworthy for he is a Spiritualist. These hasty changes, using from 24 hours to three or four days of time, often delay my plans, and in this case Mrs. Huntley may realize my tardiness in answering her first letter in the discussion on The Great Psychological Crime. I found. The Progressive Thinker on my return home, brimming with interest, and every letter, so far as I have read, in the Symposium, is full of vitality and valuable thoughts. Perhaps by the time it is complete the subject will be exhausted and leave nothing for Mrs. Huntley and me to do.

It was hinted by the lady that Mr. Brower had gone to San Francisco ostensibly to escape the wrath of his dupes, but he is at this date in Los Angeles, and it is safe to say that if there any money missing it is not in the hands of Mr. Brower. The trip was as disastrous to himself financially as to anyone of the party who went with him. Now a word as to Mr. Brower's mediimship. He is a very remarkable medium as an independent slate-writer, independent type-writer by materialized spirits, and spirit drawings in crayon of various colors on slates, and beautiful paintings in oil, on slates, and on paper. His independent slate-writings have given many fine proofs of spirit presence. Ris crayon drawings and paintings are all done in the dark, and often several of them at a single seance vithout any possibility of fraud, for they are all presented to members of the circle and are often drawn true to nature from flowers brought in by members of the circle; and where groups of flowers are drawn they are often symholical of the past or future lives of the recipients. His typewriting must be heard to be appreciated, for it is done quicker than any mortal could do it, and reminds one of the quick action of a sewing machine under the hands of an expert. Mr. Wilson, the principal spirit actor at these seances, is often seen materialized when there is light enough to be seen and incidentally at times, gives a very talented and pleas ing concert on the harmonica and other musical instruments.

OBSESSION.

The interesting Experiences of an investigator.

(Continued from No. 724.) Concerning the possession of my arm and hand by the spirit powers, I menioned that the evil ones were gradually gaining control: coincident with this I had employed a young man to assist me in the lunch room. He was a Spiritualist and was sitting for development. He was in poor health and was soon compelled to retire. 'A short time prior to his retiring a stranger called on me and desired to lease my dwelling, and proposed to purchase some vacant lots hat I had adjoining my dwelling.

stated that he was a stone-cuter by trade, and wished to open a stone-yard on the lots. We agreed on a price and he was to pay for them on the installment plan. He also accepted my offer on the dwelling, and leased it indefi-nitely as to time, and requested that I hold it vacant for a week or two until he could arrange to move his family. He desired to go to work at once, and asked to place a cot in one of my rooms to sleep upon, and to mess with me until his family arrived, and as he had the manner of a gentleman, in all this I found no objection. Accordingly he ordered in a car load of stone and went to work. He had not remained long, however, before I learned that he was a Roman Catholic of the dyed in the wool kind. I learned also that he had married a Protestant, and had converted her to his own faith. They had two small children, boys. Let me state also that the young man, he Spiritualist, lodged with me during his stay. I took no cognizance of the fact at this time that the presence of a Spiritualist and a Roman Catholic was coincident with the struggle for pos-session of my arm and hand in the spirit world. I get it all retrospectively

With the retirement of the Spiritualist from my employ the control of my arm and hand passed into that of the

In the future I will point out why this fight was for possession of my arm and hand in preference to any other part of my body. I had now decided to try and conduct my business alone, as my man had informed me that he must quit. In the neighborhood there lived young man who was in the habit of dropping in evenings and denialning until the close of business. On several on casions he proffered his assistance when business would be quite active. and as he was very clover I allowed him to assist me, he asking nothing for the

At this time the business room adcolored gentleman now appeared on the writes: "I believe Mr. Brower to be a scene to inquire whether I would have any objections to leasing the said room one night the following week, in which he would conduct a colored ball. agreed on a price, and I requested him to see to it that the dance was conducted in a decorous manner, and all would he well. One dance came off in a har monious manner, and it was arranged for another on the following week. This one likewise was very well conducted, and the third and last was arranged for At this one trouble arose. The young man that had volunteered to assist me had continued to drop in, and I finding the work too much for me, had arranged with him to remain in after the busy hours of the evening, while I would retire to my rooms for rest. This man had on the evening of the last dance mentioned, gone into the balltired, and raised a disturbance with the dancers, and I being notified, went in and quieted the house and found that the young man had been drinking. The dancers now disbanded and Poroceeded to close the lunch room, when the young man rushed in,drew a gun from his pocket and flourished it inta threatening manner, and fired, the half passing through the wall and into the street in close proximity to a man on the outside. I observed that he took good care to miss me, and was only trying to intimi date I ejected him, and promised to look after his welfare. The pext day in the morning he arrived duly sober. He wanted to know if I proposed to bring marked that I was in the habit of keeping my pledges, and that I knew of no reason why he should escape. He now declared that if I brought an action that he would kill me. He soon discovered that he was making a mistake, and retreated, fleeing from the neighborhood. I succeeded in having him captured and he was fined and turned loose on worth less bends, and nothing came of it.

I now determined to dispose of my business and try to engage in some thing that would be less fatiguing and thereby give me an opportunity to give more attention to my developing soon had a buyer, and closed the deal with a stranger, a professed Quaker gentleman. About this time I succeeded in mak-ing a long-looked for settlement with a railroad company, which relieved railroad company, which rendered me very much financially, and now another incident occurred of which took no notice at the time.

A Spiritualist now applied for the vacant business room. He wishes to first up for a dwelling in the way and a parber shop in front. Wo agreed, and he took possession, but I must mention that the enemy after having secured control of my arm and hand, made no effort to perform, any movements, but seemed content at having blocked those that I desired. I now had a fake Quaker in one part of thy hioperty a Spiritualist in another part, and Roman Catholics in another, when another batthe took place on the spirit side. This time it was for possession of my entire body. This was a prolonged fight, and my development was yery trapid, and the sense of touch was greatly increased, and I could sease a number of

NATURE AND HEALTH.

An Attempt to Designate Some False Ideas.

To the Editor: -Thoughtful Thoughts by Martin Hanson, in your issue No. 723, calls for a little more thought. He calls every method of dieting or restricting the amount and kind of food we eat, crank ideas except the starva-tion theory. If he had included that also with his crank practices he would have been nearer correct. He says we are getting far away from nature. This is true, but the starvation practice is as far from nature as any of the crank ideas he mentions; nature never starves anything to make it strong.

Poor land starves plants, but they are always puny things, and starved ani-mals are always below the standard. We never find animals starving them selves when they can get anything to eat that tastes good. We should live close to nature and obey her laws and admonitions if we would be healthy and

To refuse to take into the stomach what tastes good and the appetite craves, or to take into the stomach that which the appetite does not crave, and is not pleasant to the taste, is a direct and gross violation of the laws of nature, and is the direct cause of a part of the diseased condition of the human race at the present day. In our normal condition nature tells us through our appetite and our sense of smell and taste just as plainly and positively what our stomachs need and require, as could be told in our mother tongue, and when we follow her advice we will never take anything into our stomachs that will When people get to thinking that they know more about how to feed the physical organism than nature, and begin to put their theories into practice, they can look for trouble. Our appeand taste, is an infallible guide as to what we should take into our stomachs. While we undertake to supersede nature by refusing to take into our stomachs that which we crave, and force into it that which our taste rejects, under the name of medicine, we can look for disease, and we will not be disappointed. If our appetite, smell and taste are not a reliable guide as to what we should eat then nature has made a great mistake, which I do not believe The whole animal kingdom is governed as to what they shall eat in this way, by nature, and when allowed free acce to that which they desire for food they are healthy. Man alone has set him self up as being superior to nature in dictating what he should eat and when he found that his method of dieting did not bring the desired health, then he heaps insult to injury by filling his stomach with nauseating drugs which the appetite, smell and taste reject in the most positive manner. Under such a condition of things, is it any wonder that it is hard to find a perfectly sound and healthy person? If the people keep on violating the laws of nature by restricting their diet against the pleadings of nature, and continue to make the stomach the dumping ground for all the nasty-tasted and disgusting medicines the drug store is filled with, the human family will grow weaker and weaker until not one sound person can be found.

Sick people, and especially children whether well or sick, should be allowed to eat whatever their appetites crave and call for; under such treatment their appetites will never become perverted, and will always be a reliable guide as to what they should eat.

Any persons who diet themselves for health and eat only the things they think is good for them, regardless of the cravings of nature as manifested through their taste and appetite, are invalids, and will always remain so unless they denounce their theories and pay some attention to the language of nature as addressed to them.

Drugs and patent medicines are destroying the health and lives of more people than alcoholic liquor ever did or ever will, and the drug stores of to-day are dealing out more misery to the people than all the saloons that ever exist ed. The drugs and all the nostrums sold by the drug stores are taken into the stomach in direct opposition to the admonitions of nature, and are a gross violation of nature's laws of physical health. O! when will man learn that he is not wiser than his creator? not pervert your appetite by restricting your diet; then always eat what you vant and when you want it; never try to coax the stomach of old or young, sick or well under any circumstances to take food when it does not crave it, and you will prevent one-fourth of all stomach troubles, and the other three-fourth will disappear when you stop taking medicine. A RIGHTEOUS VERDICT.

No Right to Compel Mediums to Pay License.

[Opinion handed down by Judge J. Wm. Pollard, of the Second District Police Court, St. Louis, Mo., September 22, 1903. First decision on the point in the state of Missouri Martin A Seward, attorney for Mrs. Rosenbaum, 1116 N. 14th street.]

This defendant stands charged with a violation of the city ordinance requiring all fortune tellers and astrologists that exercise their business, avocation or profession in the city of St. Louis, to irst procure a license from said city. The plea is not guilty. And in explanation of her conduct defendant, by counsel and witnesses, purports to be a medium. The court is informed by creditable witnesses, including a minister of defendant's church, that defendant and all Spiritualists are of the fixed religious belief that the spirits of the dead can and do communicate with the iving through persons called mediums that have been trained to that office by the exercise in religious work enjoined by their church. The defendant's pastor, Reverend Grimshaw, testified to her membership in the First Spiritual Association of Saint Louis, of which he is the minister. There was introduced in evidence the charter and by-laws of the said association. By them we learn that under a regular charter of our state is the association allowed to teach its doctrines and maintain a place or places of worship. The court finds under the heading "Articles of Agreement in the city of St. Louis. The articles of agreement or principles of belief are: "1. We believe in Infinite Intelli gence.

of the Charter and By-Laws" the following: "The name of this associaton shall be the First Spiritual Association of Saint Louis. Its chief office shall be

"2. We believe that the phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expressions of Infinite Intelligence. "3. We affirm that a correct understanding of such expressions and living n accordance therewith constitute the true religion. "4. We affirm that the existence and personal identity of the individual conthrues after the change called death. "5 We affirm that communication with the so-called dead is a fact, scientifically proven by the phenomena of Spiritualism.

6. We believe that the highest mor ality is contained in the Golden Rule, whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them. The ordinance declares the meaning of fortune teller to be "one who for a compensation tells, or pretends to foretell the events of one's life, or one who pretends to a knowledge of future events. An astrologist is one who for a compensation pretends to foretell the future events of one's life by aspect or situation of the stars." The court is of the opinion that this ordinance cannot be made applicable to a medium; that pursuant to precepts and principles taught in her religion attempts to hold converse with the departed. In the Bill of Rights of our State Constitution (Article 11, Sec. 5) is as follows: That all men have a mutual and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience: that no person can, on account of his religious opinions, be rendered ineligible to any of fice of trust or profit under this state, nor be disqualified from testifying, or from serving as a juror, that no human authority can control or interfere with the rights of conscience: that no per son ought by any law, to be molested in his person or estate, on account of his religious persuasion or profession, but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, nor to jus tify practices inconsistent with the good order, peace or safety of this state, or with the rights of others.

This court is reminded of a case in California that was tried in the police court of Los Angeles and defendant convicted, but on appeal was remanded by the Superior Court for a new trial below. The Los Angeles ordinance is broader and more inclusive than ours its descriptive words are as follows:

"For every person who carries on practices or professes to practice the business or art of astrology, palmistry chiromancy, life reading, fortune tell ing, cartomancy, clairvoyance, clairaudience, crystal gazing, hypnotism, medi umship, prophecy, augury, divination magic or necromancy, and who demands and receives a fee for an exer cise or exhibit of his art therein at any place where there is an admission fee is charged five dollars per month."

California's constitution on religion is not unlike our own, and as defendant in Los Angeles invoked its aid in her de fense, what the Superior Court there said is very pertinent here. "The constitution of this state forbids restraints upon the free exercise of religion ac cording to the dictates of conscience and the exercise and enjoyment of re ligious profession is not subjected to the censorship of the state or of any public authority. The city of Los Angeles has no right under the law to require a license from any person to perform, profess or exercise religious rights and ceremonies. The ordinance of the city of Los Angeles is to be con strued as not including in its provisions the profession or practice of religion Therefore, if you entertain a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the acts of the defendants testified to were done and performed in the enjoyment and exercise of religious profession and worship, as they believed it, then you should acquit the defendants."

This court believes that the framers of our ordinance were more sagacious than Los Angeles, and that it was not intended as the definitions in the ordinance show, to include mediums-spiritualistic: Still the defendant at bar is proven to be a regular communicant of religious body whose principles and practices are in accord with her con- Thackeray.

THANKS.

Mrs. Lole F. Prior is Determined to Win.

To the Editor:-Will you please, through the columns of your valuable paper, extend thanks and acknowledgement for the responses to my appeal to the Spiritualists at large, to assist in my defense, which was published in your paper—No. 723? I have received several letters, with money enclosed, and no names signed; my unknown friends, I thank you. My case is still hanging, the city attorney, seemingly, not being overly anxious to bring the trial up. Three weeks ago I had my first hearing, my legal advisers filing a demur, so as to take the case out of the police court, and fighting "tax ordi-nance" in a higher court; the judge requested that briefs be prepared handed to him in two weeks. My attorneys have been ready for some time, but the city's attorney has asked for more time; however, we will not abandon the matter, the gauntlet has been thrown down, and it means that I shall fight this until I win. Spiritualism is my religion! My mediumship is not fortune-telling, and so shall I defend it before all the world! Mrs. Lillian Nagel, pastor of the Psychic Society of this city, and other mediums, are now refusing to pay said license until my case is decided; such a concentrated move cannot help but be a henefit to me. To the few who have responded to my request, and the many who have not done so, I wish to say, the moneys which you have sent, or may send, will be used for no other purpose than to defend the rights of Spiritualists in the courts; and if we do not need the amount which we hope to collect all over and above actual expenses of the trial, will be turned over to the N. S. A. treasury for the purpose of defending any mediums, who, in the future, might be placed as I am now.

Friends, I am not asking you to defend and help me. Mrs. Lole F. Prior, as an individual, but to aid me in defending the cause which we love MRS. LOIE F. PRIOR.

MISSIONARIES' REPORT.

For the Year Ending September 30, 1903.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow-Delegates: -It is with feelings of satisfaction that we present this, our third annual report to this convention.

During the year we labored in nine different states of our Union, viz.: Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin.

We held meetings in 65 different towns some of these meetings were held with societies already organized and others in places where Spiritualism had never had a hearing before.

We have had the pleasure of present ing the philosophy and demonstrating some of the truths of Spiritualism to thousands of people who listened to its message for the first time.

Lincoln a Spiritualist.

While stopping at Albany, N. Y., with our esteemed friends, E. A. Doty and family, we secured what we consider a very valuable document. It is the affidavit of Mr. E. A. Doty, giving a de tailed account of an interview he had with Mrs. Best, of Washington, D. C., and another one with General Shields, of New York, regarding the seances that were held in the White House at Washington during the war of the re-These interviews conclusively prove that what is maintained in Nettle Maynard's book entitled "Was Abraham Lincoln a Spiritualist?" is true. Mr. Lincoln believed in Spiritualism and did consult the spirits regarding the management of the war of the rebellion. There is no longer any question regarding this claim.

We have preserved this document for future use.

Mediums' Home.

The later part of November we were called to Lansing, Mich., to participate in the dedication of the Mediums' Home. It gives me pleasure to state that, with the asistance of our true friend, that loyal Spiritualist, John F. Goff, assisted by other generous souls, together with the energy and perseverance of the officers of the Michigan State Spiritualist Association, the John F. Goff Mediums Home, at Lansing, Mich., is paid for and has been opened to the worthy sick and needy mediums of that state.

It is fitting to state here that our missionary work in Michigan has been of assistance to a considerable degree in the accomplishment of this splendid work. True missionary work is not confined entirely to organizing socie ties, though that may be of paramount importance at the present time.

Camp-Meetings.

We served at the following named camp-meetings this season: Vicksburg. Mich., Snowflake, Mich., and Ashley, O. where the interests of our organization the value of missionary work and the needs of our cause were presented and explained to the large congregations as sembled there. These camp-meeting associations are in sympathy with our organization, realizing as they do that the missionary work is a great help to them, as it arouses people to desire to learn more of Spiritualism, which leads them to attend camp-meetings where satisfaction is obtained.

The camp-meetings in turn are a great help to the missionary work, as they give opportunity to the missiona ries to reach, interest, and enthuse our friends to take hold of the work when they return to their homes. Thus a mu tual benefit is derived and the cause ad vanced.

State Conventions.

We visited the yearly conventions of the Ohio and Michigan State Associations. We have visited these state associations heretofore and are pleased to state that they are both growing strong-er each year. They are getting into better condition to work, and we believe they are both in better financial condition than ever before. They have more societies than at any previous time in their history, which is directly due to the work of your missionaries during the last three years.

These conventions were most satisfactory, as undoubtedly their reports to this convention will show. All along the line we see marked improvement in the work of our organiza-We visited a number of places where

We organized 24 new societies, reorganized and reinstated 5 more, making a total of 29 societies added to the list, which is two more than we organized

In 25 of the towns that we visited no public work was being done before we organized these societies. Nearly every one of them are now holding regular meetings and doing good work. The average membership of these societies is 30, and the total membership is 840. We have also been instrumental in adding new members to several other local societies that we have visited. With the exception of five places, we organized and chartered every town we visited where no society existed before. We left 60 active societies in the 65 towns that we visited. Some of these societies we visited twice. Cost of the Work.

Every local society should be visited by the National and State missionaries as often as possible. This would encourage the workers, interest investigators and others in our organization, add members to the local societies and help the cause in general. This can and probably will be done as soon as the Spiritualists provide sufficient funds to make it possible. Fellow delegates, it is plain to be seen that many missionaries are needed to carry the truths of Spiritualism to the people and to bring them into the folds of our organization. Wherever we have been the Spiritual-treated us royally. Their words of encouragement and carnest sympathy have been a source of inspiration and a great sustaining power to us in the performance of the arduous duties incident to the missionary work.

The Spiritualist missionary leads a truly "strenuous life." but the results of his labors fully compensate him therefor. There are so many whose souls are enhungered that must be fed, so many mourning ones to be consoled, many doubts to be dispelled and so many tears to be dried. Your missionaries find them everywhere and through the missionaries' efforts these people are receiving the blessings that Spiritualism furnishes in great abundance.

The Church.

We have met with very little opposition in our work this year. The Christian church is becoming more tolerant in many places, though we were obliged to pass by several towns because the Christians (?) refused to rent halls to their neighbors to be used for Spiritualist meetings.

Occasionally, we were permitted to hold our meetings in Christian churches.

Newspapers. The newspapers have almost invariably treated us with courtesy and respect, publishing our notices and often lengthy reports of our meetings.

Exposers.

We have not come in contact with as many "exposers" of Spiritualism this year as heretofore. These "exposers." so-called, have always inspired the Spir itualists to greater activity, and after witnessing the cheap tricks of these mountebanks, the people become anxious to investigate the true phenomena and teachings of Spiritualism. know of several places where a real "exposer" (?) of Spiritualism could do our cause much good.

Needs of Local Societies.

Many societies do not succeed because of the lack of energy and enthusiasm on the part of its president or the carelessness of its secretary. Every society should elect a competent, energetic, thorough-going president and a ive secretary. Some societies elect officers as though it was for the purpose of bestowing honors upon the ones chosen. This is a mistake. Officers should be chosen with a view to get those that are best qualified to fill the positions to which they are called. Good, strong societies go down for lack of a leared, oftener than from any other cause. Every local society should have a Ladies' Auxiliary society and a lyceum. There may be places where the ladies society could not succeed, but wherever one is in working order it helps largely to support the work of the local society; it is almost a necessity to the success of the work. A children's lyceum should also be formed as a part of every organization. The lyceum is a great help, as it interests the Spiritualists and outsiders leading both to the support of the local society, besides doing a great good to the children and the cause as well. Each society should appoint a collector whose duty will be to collect the dues of members, receive contributions etc., for the support of the work The success of the local society will depend largely upon the efficiency of this mem-her of the board. Every local society should appoint a committee whose duty it will be to visit the sick and afflicted members and render such aid and assistance as is needed and desired reporting regularly at their stated meetings.

Cordiality, 1: fraternity and mutual helpfulness should be cultivated and practiced by all.

Every well regulated society will have a choir. There are many Spiritualists singing in the choirs of the orthodox church. We think they would gladly ditions were made for their coming.

There should be a reception commit tee appointed by each society who would make everybody welcome to the meetings, thus relieving the embarrassment sometimes felt by strangers on entering our meetings. Genial, pleasant-mannered ushers are always needed to wait upon people and see that they are comfortably seated.

Meetings should always begin at the appointed time. Societies thus equipped and carried on must succeed if the management is judicious in employing good talent to grace the platform. Systematic Organization.

There is great need of more systematic organization. Every state should be divided into districts, and district superintendents appointed to look after the work. Circuits should be formed, competent speakers and mediums placed upon them, and arrangements made to visit localities where no society exists. Where societies are weak, one speaker could care for two or even four places, holding meetings on alternate Sundays or one Sunday in a place each month as the case may require. Quarterly meetings should be established by these district superintendents. The advice, encouragement and assistance of these general superintendents would certainly be of great assistance to local societies. Such superintendents could look after the lyceums if placed under their jurisdiction, and could be of great benefit to them.

Reading Course.

At our last convention we submitted a recommendation that a committee be appointed to prepare a classified course of reading which would include the subjects necessary to an understanding of the teaching of Spiritualism in its different phases. This was recommended because of the apparent great need as well as the desire of many people to become enlightened upon the subject; but more especially that those societies which were unable to employ speakers and teachers might have opportunity to learn and teach others.

We have recommended the forming of reading circles by the societies that we have organized and every society that has done as we have advised is doing good work, growing in numbers as well as in knowledge, while they are gaining the respect of the people in the communities where they are located. We feel certain that this movement f properly managed will be the means of adding many members to our socieies, and many societies to our organization, building up the weak ones and enlightening the people regarding our great philosophy more than any other movement could possibly do with so little expense incurred. The Boston convention, complying with our recommendation, appointed such a committee last year, but it failed to act so far as we are informed. We think there was a misapprehension in regard to the intention of this ecommendation of last year. It may have been supposed by some that the committee be appointed to choose from works already published and for sale such books as would be adapted to the different classes of the students.

We again submit this proposition to this convention in the hope that its recommendation may be fully carried out, and in the firm belief that it will work Ists have received us gladly and have greater good for our cause than anyone communication from Daniel Hull, bearing the headline, Ecclesia-Phobia, in a recent issue, was of great value, for through it I have learned what alls me; now I know my ailment is "Ecclesia-Phobia." and while the good brother did not include the writer in his diagnosis, for he only mentioned the "brethren," yet surely woman is subject to the malady, and I plead guilty to the arraignment laid down in the article.

"ECCLESIA-PHOBIA."

Mr. Hull cites four primary causes, any one of them, as he claims, sufficient to throw the patient into spasms, viz., existence on account of disagreeable associations is carrying bigotry to the exreme.

I cannot understand why it should be called an effort to drive words out of existence because one refuses to make use of them in his or her system of thought. But to me it does not matter what the original meaning of words may be, it is the popularly established, everyday meaning which concerns us, and cer tainly bad associations center around the words mentioned.

The influence of these four words has filled the world with misery, suffering, degradation, ignorance and woe, and why Spiritualists desire to cling to them, I suppose must be because so many are still wedded to their idols.

Why should Spiritualists make use of these words as applied to Spiritualistic effort when there are other words and names, of so much nobler meaning; and then it is so humiliating for Spiritualists to be imitators and followers in stead of builders and leaders.

The church people (Christians) must laugh in derision to see Spiritualists. that for a half-century have been bat tling the church, now fall into line and ape their ways and methods. Why call a Spiritualistic society a "church" when there are other names of higher and grander meaning-Hall of Learning Hall of Philosophy, Edifice of Scientific Research, Hall of Wisdom, Spiritualist Society of Progress, School of Spiritual Knowledge, etc. How much greater significance attaches to these names and others of a like nature than that of church. Church does not signify prog ress; it does not signify wisdom, phil osophy, science, learning or knowledge; it does not mean enlightenment. The church symbolizes ignorance, superstition, darkness, crime, stagnation; the pomp and splendor of vain-glory and outward ritualistic fashion and display

And then that title of Rev. A few times that obnoxious prefix has been ap plied to myself, and I confess to a feeling of nausea in consequence thereof. Daniel Hull says he cannot see why

Spiritualist should use the title of Doc tor or Professor, and object to Rever end. But I am sure there are good reasons for so doing. Doctors and profes sors as well as blacksmith and schoolteachers, of which he speaks, are of use in the world, but of all the useless things in the universe the "Reverends" are the most useless so far, as the world's advancement is concerned. The doctors and professors are of benefit to humanity; but of all classes of people, the preachers give the least, for value received. They are what their Bible tells about blind leaders of the blind." One would think that when preacher get their eyes open to the light of truth and come into Spiritualism, they would hasten to rid themselves of the titles of priestcraft, and assume the nobler structor, etc.

And then about religion. I am sure am a victim of Ecclesia Phobia, for the word "religion" gives me the cold shudders whenever I come in contact with it, for the influence of that something called religion has been so dark and damning in the world, and whether its original meaning was to "bind back" or to "review one's thoughts" its influence has been damaging to mankind. It is proverbial that the most ignorant peo ple are the most intensely religious True men and women are what the world most needs, and true manhood and noble womanhood tower infinitely above all religions. There are many glorious things about Spiritualism, and one of them is that the Spiritualistic religionist cannot force religion upon the non-religious Spiritualists; the latter class can have their Spiritualism pure and unadulter ated, and all the sophistries of all the Spiritualistic reverends cannot make Spiritualism a religion to those who do Those Spiritualists who love truth, justice, honor, integrity candor, sobriety, goodness, nobility, cul ture, cleanliness; that strive for physi cal, moral, mental and spiritual health: those Spifritualists who love nature and enjoy communion therewith through a study of her wondrous processes-what need have they of religion, a commodity administered to all condemned criminals, a something that makes a mockery of life in the presence of death, as with ness the triple execution of the Van Wormer brothers just enacted in my own state.

Yes, I am sure I must be afflicted with Ecclesia-Phobia in its most acute form for there is another word that gives me the horrors and that is the word worship, and this word is inseparably connected with the four words under discussion. And from my viewpoint person can be the exemplification of the ruest, noblest and best manhood and womanhood that indulges in the selfdebasing and degrading attitude and feeling of worship. Away with it all in Spiritualism! But then, if Daniel Hull and other Spiritualists want all the Christian fixings brought over into Spiritualism, with ordinations, christenings, conse crations, anointings, sanctifications and all the other fol-de-rol of the church, I sunnose they will tug them in: but they cannot compel level-headed thinkers to take it as a part of their Spiritualistic diet. A SPIRITUAL MYSTERY.

Interesting Thoughts on the Mystery of Great is The Progressive Thinker.

Not only does it furnish us abundant supplies of mental and spiritual nourishment, but it points out the nature of diseases that afflict us, and to the writer the information gained through the thinker, a reasoner, and a careful invescent manifestion from Daniel Hull bear-lighter though still of the orthodox tigator though still of the orthodox The author is John Bigelow. United States Minister to France from 1864 to 1867, the trusted friend and executor of the extate of Samuel J. Tilden, whose biography he wrote, and he is also the author of a number of valuable works.

In "The Mystery of Sleep," Mr. Bigelow contends and brings forward a mass of evidence tending to prove that in sleep man's spirit retires to his real home in the spirit world, there nightly to regain renewed life and spiritual words Church, Religion, Bible and Reverse, strength for his daily struggle in this erend, and says: "Driving words out of material world of development and discipline.
This is, in my opinion, the most reasonable theory ever advanced as to the mystery of steep which has puzzled the minds of thinkers through the ages. Mr. Bigelow quotes largely from Bible, the great poets, and inspired thinkers as giving hints of the real pur-pose of sleep, and calls attention to the varying phases of the phenomena of sleep to enforce his own conclusions— which incidentally make more clear the relation between sleep and death.

In sleep, man's weary spirit retires just over the border which interlaces this life with the spiritual world, there to develop psychically and spiritually during our sleeping hours as distinctly and exclusively as we are developed physically and intellectually during our hours. In developing waking thought Mr. Bigelow argues as follows: "It was thus to 'overcome the world, or at least to assist us in it, that the Mosaic law set anart one day in seven for our spiritual refection, and enjoined upon us to do no manner of work. It was for the like purpose we were directed, when we pray, to enter into our inner chamber and shut our door, that we be not distracted by what the world may think or say, or be to us while we commune with our Father in heaven. May we not do we not have a more perfect seclusion from the world in our sleep, to help us to such a direct, pro-longed, and undisturbed communion than is possible at any other time? Is it not necessary for all of us, or at least for much the larger proportion, of the world who otherwise might never seek this closer communion with God, to be subjected to the operation of a law which for a portion of every day reduces them to a condition in which nothing operates to prevent their giving their attention to the divine messengers that are continually struggling for an opportunity to be heard?"

In the tenth chapter, considering the question," How far sleep is death," he "What reason have we for doubting that during our sleep we are in sub-stantially the same society and surrounded by similar, if not the same, influences as we should be were we never again to awake? We cannot conceive that the abandonment of our earthly habitation, the flaying aside of our garments, the deliverance from bur prison, has deprived us of any of the qualities or attributes which constituted our being, except upon the theory of utter ex-tinction by the separation. The spirit, or soul inhabits the body, but is no more a part of it than the heat generated in a furnace is a part of the furnace, or the light in our chamber is a part of the chamber. The inhabitants of the spiritual world are presumed to now nothing of the limitations of time or space. There is no manifest reason, therefore, why we should not always be names of lecturer, speaker, teacher, in accessible to, and in intercourse with them, unless when too preoccupied by the distractions of our environment in the phenomenal world, nor for presuming that our post-mortem life will differ from our condition while sleeping, except that one is for a time and the other for eternity." Mr. Bigelow's arguments in regard to sleep being a transient withdrawal into spirit world, will answer just as well for the trance state of mediums and other like phenomena. Of the trance state of the seeress of Prevorst, Dr. Kerner, her physician and biographer says: "At such times as the faculty of ghost-seeing was active in her, she believed herself to be awake, but she was then in that peculiar state we have denominated as the inner life." Writing of this secress, Anna Mary Howitt says: "It is supposed by some psychologists that probably no ghosts are ever beheld by any seer unless that seer in the first stages of the inner life. Possibly it may require the spirit to have, to a certain extent, materialized to be visible to persons who have not passed (it may be unconsciously) into the first stage of the inner life" and by the "inner life" these writers apparent-mean the spirit world. Many of our poets have caught this idea of communion during sleep with the immortal life, and Mr. Bigelow quotes from many of these—to which I vill add a verse from that nearly forgotten New England poet, John G. Saxe:

'Tis beautiful to leave the world awhile For the soft yisions of the gentle night:

And free, at last, from mortal care or guile.

To live as only in the angel's sight, in sleep's sweet realm so cozily shut in Where at the worst we only dream of

I presume that many who have received automatic and other communi-cations have had some which confirm cations have had some which confirm the theory on which "The Mystery of Sleep" is hased with for instance when through Mrs. Piper, Dr. Phinuit was asked, "Where these the soul go when we sleep?" the reply was, "It travels, and we can communicate with them freely. You do not remember it, and you do not realize it. When you sleep I oftentimes go to you."

On page 44 of Stead's "Letters From Julia," where she speaks of the awakening of the spirit after the separation from the fody; she says:

from the body; she says:
"When we ware into the new life we are still in the same world. There are all the familiar triings around us. The only new thing is your own body out of which you stand and wonder how it can be that itals there, and that it is no longer you? And then you begin clearly to understand what has happened. is very much like experiences you have n dreams, which after all, are often due to the same cause, the conscious soul leaving the physical frame, which howover remains breathing."

REGENERATION.

An Incentive to Send Forth Good Thought Vibrations.

The word regeneration means repro duction; the entering into new spiritual life. To be born anew spiritually is to come into a full understanding of the truth of the words, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Of a truth I say unto you, he shall. What is there that dies that does not live again in some new and more beautiful form?

It behooves us to live as good a life as we can while we tarry in our earthly house, because the better we live, the more good thoughts we send forth, the more good deeds we do, help to make our spirits whiter and lighter. I use hose words because I have been shown (clairvoyantly) the difference between the spirit of a good man and the spirit in the early days of my development I used the words "light" and "dark" spirits. And as I have been shown and taught, so must I tell it to others, as we can only speak truthfully from experi-

Tame, this looking into the unseen is a very serious matter. I am aware many people think very lightly of it, and often you will meet those who think because they have been given some of the "spiritual gifts," they have nothing further to do as regards preparing their spirits for the great land beyond. My friends, it seems to me, you were never more mistaken in your lives. To whom much is given, of those much will be required.

The more you understand of the spiritual life, the more serious it will become to you. Of course, to those of the Spiritualistic belief, who have no God who have nothing but their own spirit ual selves, and the spirits of their people, the hidden mysteries of the work ings of the Divine Ruler will not attract them, but to Spiritualists like myself, who believe there is a God, a Ruler of both the living and the so-called dead these manifold ways are ever beckon ing us on to more and closer fellowship with the Power above and also with the power that is given to the spiritual people that have their work in impressing and guiding people on the earth planet I am glad to know, that when I am perplexed and sore distressed in regard to many things I can close my earthly eyes and go with my spiritual vision far far, into the spiritual world, asking this one and that one, what I am to do. Ofttimes I am bidden to cease looking and listen; and I know the vibration or thought that comes to me is not from a heart that beat upon earth, but from the great heart of all. I believe we may do these things if we will concentrate our mind and will upon them.

The Bible (I believe a great deal of it) says "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spir it and in truth" (John 4:24). So the things we long so to know must be made known first, to our spirit, then the earthly mind will be able to grasp it. To be a clairvoyant and see the ab ject misery of some people upon their entrance into the spiritual world gives one the desire to help skeptical humanity more than anything else. I have often wondered how people could give up home and family and go forth to preach the gospel. I understand it all now. Those people are awake to the necessity of advancing the cause of righteousness, and they know there is nothing of any value to be gained by serving earth and her people.

I am always careful to read the re ports of the N. S. .A. missionaries, and while they give cheering reports and some people may think they are having an easy time, yet I am sure they have many a worry we do not dream of, yet their hearts are in the work and they know the foundation whereon they build. This evil vibration that is abroad in our land of there being no life but this is doing a vast amount of harm. We must send out the good vibration of "life is eternal-there is no death." to counteract it. We can do it. Thoughts or vibrations make or mar a man. Re generation-to be made anew-to awaken to the possibility of a life of progression now and after earthly bodies are only a handful of dust under a coffin lid. After all, how insignificant we are when we think of the Power that rules us. And how little we know compared with the knowledge there is for us if we only will open the book of spiritual un foldment and begin to study now, in the school of eternity. Let us think of these things and not let our earthly time go to waste. Greeting and good wishes I send to all the workers in the MADAME ROBERTS. vineyard. The Dalles, Ore.

The Great Psychological Crime Holds | ized that the later arrivals from "Sumthe Key to Happiness Here and Hereafter.

The storm occasioned by The Great Psychological Crime has extended over much larger territory than that occupied by the Spiritualists: it has also invaded the orthodox camping-grounds and totally destroyed some of the strongest fortifications of the Methodist army, sweeping from its ranks many valiant soldiers who have since united their forces with the true and rational army of Natural Science. For more than ten years your corre spondent was actively engaged in advancing the cause of Methodism. During a revival several years ago my faith in the Methodist doctrine, and in the methods employed by that church for gaining new converts and "reviving" the Christian life of its older members received an electric shock-a shock which has furnished food for serious thought and, to me, was indisputable evidence that the promoters of Method ism are utilizing unseen forces of which they are ignorant or, at least, do not fully understand.

A noted evangelist whose name withhold, had been engaged to conduct revival services in the Methodist church of which I was a member. He preached the doctrine of "sanctification," telling in the clearest and most forceful man were added to the Christian's life after he had sought and received this divine favor. The greatest of these blessings were power and freedom and "the peace and joy that passeth all under standing."

I had become dissatisfied with my own religious experience, and gladly welcomed any plan or method that would help me live a more satisfactory Christian life. Part of the time I was happy: at other times the most earnest prayer and supplication failed to bring the desired peace and power, hence my

After attending several meetings was convinced that the way to perfect happiness could be reached only through the gates of "sanctification."

All who wished to seek the "higher life" were invited to come forward and kneel at the altar. Those who went constituted the center of interest and effort. The special purpose was to carry them to the point where they might be "sanctified" or receive the second blessing."

Later, I discovered that this really nothing more than coming IN TOUCH with the spiritual side of life. The sudden Illumination resulting from this contact meant to them the "second

Taking my place at the altar with the other "seekers," and following the instructions of those who had previously received this blessing. I earnestly and solemnly prayed that this miraculous blessing might be bestowed upon me. It was supposed to be a gift from God. Many who sought this "gift" received it immediately, while others, equally earnest labored for days and even weeks for this divine favor.
"Give up your own will and submit to the will of God," was the most import ant instruction given the "sin-sick souls. The sinner's success depended upon his ability to submit, or in other words, to allow his own will and reason to remain inactive. In the fulfillment of this specific instruction lies the se-"conversions" and "bless ings," and the subsequent sorrow and difficulty that too often follow these spiritual experiences.

With a wonderful faith in God, fully expecting to receive the blessing, I made an unconditional surrender to the will of God, or to what I supposed at that time to be God's will. This was the beginning of the greatest struggle of my life, and also of a definite personal experience. At this point I became conscious of a new and a spiritual environment. I seemed to have been suddenly lifted into the atmosphere of another world. Care and sorrow vanished and my life was filled with peace and joy. This supreme hap-piness was ample reward for all my efforts and labor. This, to me, meant the "second blessing" and was interpreted as a direct communication from God. All went well for a time. I was tire less in my efforts to prove my worthiness for this marvelous transformation. No matter how strenuous the efforts required to carry out a suggestion, or to fulfill a supposed duty, I never faltered or relaxed my energies until completely exhausted. At first these communications were of the most beautiful and exalted character.

After some weeks, however, there came a change in the character of the spiritual intelligences that surrounded me.. At the beginning of my strange experience I had been convinced that the beings who were conveying to me such new and beautiful doctrine, were indeed angels, and very near the "THRONE OF GRACE." I believed them when they told me of their exalted state, and I accepted their assurance that I was of the elect, and the object of heaven's fondest solicitude. I believed that I had received a divine commission, and that I was empowered to teach one the yoke is easy and the burden is those who were unawakened to spiritual things. Both my faith and my persoual vanity were played upon until I have had an experience similar to my believed myself to be a shining light own, I will quote the following from among those who dwell near the

Through the negative conditions of intense emotionalism these often find it possible to ride into the consciousness of the sinner 'under conviction,' as it were, and take complete control of all his intelligent faculties, capacities and flowing, and began to make my life like powers.

When the meeting closes and the revivalist goes to another field of labor his spiritual helpers accompany him, and thus it is that their influence is no longer felt by those who are left behind. This is why it is that to many an earnest soul it appears that God leaves when the revivalist goes away. This is why it is that the revalist finds it impossible to 'make 'em stick.' This is the solution of the mystery of 'backslidscious of a change in myself, but was powerless to free myself from the comes necessary to work 'em up' each comes necessary to 'work 'em up' each nocking, wicked spirits that had finally time from the beginning. CONDEMNS THE BOOK.

To the Editor:-Agreeably to your request I have carefully read and thoughtfully considered the recent sen-sational book, entitled "The Great Psy-cological Crime," by an anonymous auwho in his great over-zeal to discount Spiritualism, has dealt it, be-tween the eyes, an ungentle blow, to kill or reform it, according to his culiar views. But let me tell him from what I know from fifty years' acquaintance with Spiritualism, or divine intelligence, that it will never adapt itself to suit his whims, to the letter, and the sooner he knows it, the better.

The divine may dictate to the human, but the human may not dictate to the divine. The divine will have its own way, first, last and all the time. This has been my experience.

The book, Mr. Editor, is really an unwholesome interpretation of the present order of spirit communion and present order of spiritual mediumship and a satire upon both; warning investigators, Spiritualists and mediums of dan | is true. gers in Spiritualism, and virtually says:

'Awake! O ye people, and stand in awe, Keep from under diabolic law; Lest body, spirit, life or health You sacrifice to occult wealth!

my mite to the general fund." If the author's motive was to cast a shadow upon the incandescent radiations of Modern Spiritualism, or blight upon mediumship, he could not have planned a more ingenious device to deter the unsophisticated investigators confounding as he does Spiritualism with "animalis," and hypnotism.

Hypnotism, like Spiritualism, pregnant with dangers, he calls for legislature to suppress it, but as hypnotism is no part of Spiritualism, I have no interest in that part of the book. All my interests lays in Spiritualism. His next call for legislation will, I suppose, be to suppress Spiritualism.

But what manner of man is he, who, with incredible malignity has dared to stigmatize a woman and charge her moral obliquity to spirits? Admitting the nameless crime, is it not mental and moral degenerates who would be capable of such atroclous and monstrous in-

He ought to know that moral and mental degenerates are born, not made, and that such degenerates, by reason of heredity, are everywhere, and that it would be strange, indeed, if a sprinkling of them did not sometimes find their way even among Spiritualists, and the very scandalous case which he recites to illustrate his dangers in Spiritualism, and to give sensation to his book, was, no doubt, a typical case of one of

To the Editor:—In view of your pro-lected discussion of the book called "The Great Psychological Crime," I will state that I know by my own personal experience, an experience covering a period of six months, that at least one part of The Great Psychological Crime Fifteen months ago I bought one of those vehicles advertised in your paper and other papers, as a means of communicating with the so-called "dead." After three months persistent effort produced results which proved beyoud a question that decarnate beings, men or women, or men and women of distinct personality and of very human impudence and evil, lived a life close to the life of earth, or within easy reach of it; that they are of varying mental calibre, as of varying morality; that it is easier to get into their power than it is to get out of it; and that it is as easy for "living" human beings to get physical proofs of the presence of some of the "dead" as it is for some of the "dead" to lie and to make trouble for the dupes who lose their self-control by using the Planchette and Ouija board, or other morally illegitimate money making devices now in the market, I fought for my liberty twelve months, night and day, and every moment when I was not asleep. I followed the usual course of my class of seekers after hope. I bought a "board," encouraged "communications, and put faith in my correspondents from the Beyond. For one month I transcribed messages from the "dead" to the "living," and sent off letter after letter, to the loss of my time and the money paid for postage. For a time I wrote all day and when it was required of me I wrote at night. My action was all under "spirit" orders. I let my brain and my arm and the finger that touched the board be used until I became "sensitive" to 'outside influences.' Now I am a hard-working literary hack, and I have no time either to give interviews or answer inquisitive letters But if my experience can be made use ful to anyone suffering as I have suffered. I stand ready to testify to what I know, and am equally willing to swear to it, if necessary. If my sanity or integrity or moral character be doubted by any who read this I stand ready also to furnish the independent testimony of well-known editors and publishers to prove that my reputation is unimpeachable.

It offers, if we will throw away our system, to give a new and better one; make us a present of it without fee or reward. We are precluded from giving an immediate answer, as a full description of it yet hangs in the air. The author is liberal in hints, from which to construct some pictures. He would finally make everyone his own medium, or psychic. There is poetry in this; especially so since the promise is made that it shall be as simple and easy as ordinary talking.

ies one of the methods by and through which communications may be established and maintained between the two worlds of matter, life and intelligence. This is candid. He intimates to give a new and prettier name for Spiritualism. Others have desired this before. He says, "You must proceed at once to exexercise your individual intelligence You must assert your absolute independence of all subjective processes and conditions. You must maintain at all times the active, wakeful consciousness, and in the largest measure possible develop the power of individual selfcontrol. By following the lines here indicated you will gradually but surely rise above every tendency to subjection. yourself or harm to anyone.'

In passing through the change called Others again are not unconscious at all, not even during the transit. Thus is mediumship evolving, developing and unfolding. At first, the mediums often suffered much in the beginning of the development. I have always thought knowledge education and experience would overcome this. People suffer on all other lines of unfoldment, in the initial stages especially, till a correct system of education of the laws makes it easy.

He says: "There are masters who are the good of independent self-illumination.

This is not a bald assertion, since he admits it is a long process, requiring many years. What he calls many years might prove to be many generations. No matter. The principle is good.

The book treats heavily of hypno tism. It paints awful pictures of its evils; all of which are only too true. It admits that hypnotism does some good, as in cases of surgery. Where it is exercised beneficially, it would adorn that part with some other name. It admits the appropriate name is still hanging in the balance. I see no necessity for such differentiation. There is mind kill and mind cure. It is all called mind. Why not as well call it all hypnotism? Unnecessary confusion would be avoided. It is, however, with the portions of the book treating of Spiritualism that Spiritualists are most concerned. Deeper investigation in this direction finds an ever welcome response.

Was Jesus a medium or was he not? He spoke in early childhood beyond his years, and seemingly without suffering. Many of the present-day mediums do the same. Other mediums are slower to develop, and not always in so pleasant paths. The gifts of preachers and lawyers vary likewise. And it appears that the end is not yet.

The author admits. He says: "It is admitted that Modern Spiritualism is the natural and logical outgrowth of me fail to be fed and delighted with this diumship, and that it has done something during the last fifty years to open the way to an unprejudiced examina- ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading tion of psychic phenomena, and that such examination must necessarily result in benefit to those who possess the intelligence to understand and appreciate the results in all their bearings."

This is surely a great compliment to mediumship. Neither science nor the Bible, nor any other system of knowledge has given such facility in such abundance. Were the author proposing to annihi-

Reason dethroned and mental chaos enthroned. See all nature going into a dark trance once in every twenty-four hours. Negative states are absolutely essential to life. He calls mediumship a destructive principle. I call it constructive. That it may be overdone, and, through ignorance of its nature, be made to cause injury, is only the common lot of a thousand other lines. He says the medium's average life is only about seven years. I know a good many mediums that would have been dead long ago but for their mediumship. This is good enough proof that mediumship is not paralyzing. Edison often goes into a profound unconscious trance for two hours together; on coming out of the sleep finds piles of paper written matter I can wait till the other side full, assisting him out of perplexities Does he show signs of being the worse He says, "There is no wish to dis. for it? Sense of Prescience Among Savages. The student of psychology in its various phases will be deeply interested in the following relative to a peculiar faculty possessed by certain of the lower and less cultivated people of some parts of our earth.

It is said that those of us who have foregathered on terms of intimacy with men of a very debased standard of civilization-men who, in fact are as near to the folk of the Neolithic period as any now remaining on this overcultivated, over traveled earth-have often been forced to recognize that they possess some faculty which we, who have improved upon our beginnings, are able neither to exercise nor to understand. "I feel them!" says the Semang, the little Negrit of the jungle-smothered highlands of the Malay peninsula and his power of detecting the presence of the reach of sight or hearing or smell. Quite recently, and not for the first time, attention has been called to the standing miracle which men name the "native telegraph." Most people who have lived much among brown, black strongholds? To me it seems that this knowing anything about our cause is must be so, that one or more natives, in whose acute perceptions others have learned to repose confidence, experience in an intensified form what we less sentive Europeans call a presentiment and putting two and two together, hazard a prophecy which nine times out of ten proves to be curiously near the truth. This sounds a simple explanation, because a "presentiment" is something which comes within the experience of most white men, but the native prophecy of evil differs from that of the European in that it is more often right than wrong. What it comes to, then, is this: The primitive Semang says frankly that he "feels" that which, according to all known laws, it is quite impossible that he should feel; the Kaffir of the velds or the native of our eastern bazaars "feels" distant happenings also, and by means of a similar faculty, but his somewhat higher civilization tends to blunt the acuteness of his perceptions and gives him but a scant grasp of detail; the white man, more insensitive still, "feels" only very vaguely, and often, it should be noted, without sufficient cause. Have we not in this at any rate the hint of a faculty, dulled by disuse or sharpened by constant and prolonged employment, but which must, none the less, be recognized as actually extant and capable, it may be, of immense development?

We may be allowed to wonder whether there is in these curious exhibitions of human prescience, any element of what the author of The Great Psychological Crime designates as "subjective" or "mediumistic" control. It seems a faculty akin to that possessed by Swedenborg and certain other noted seers; though not so much clairvoyance as tel epathy in its characteristics. It is mind impinging upon mind, in vibrations unobserved except by those possessed of a form of deep medumistic sensitiveness to the finer vibrations of spirit.

Indiana Supreme Court Decision. A legal decision of much interest to Spiritualists was recently rendered by the Supreme Court of Indiana. The matter is stated as follows in the Chicago Chronicle:

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 7 .-- In a decision of the supreme court reversing for lack of evidence a judgment declaring the will of Joseph Wait invalid, the court has decided that a man's belief in witchcraft does not prove him insane. was shown by the evidence that Wait wandered over his farm near Indianapolis for days at a time, searching for hidden treasure. He carried a ball tied to a string and he said that when the ball whirled around the treasure would be found directly under the spot.

In his opinion Judge Hadley said that there were many sane people who be-lieved in the power of a forked stick in revealing underground water supplies, and that many scholarly business men believed in Spiritualism, clairvoyance, transmigration of souls and witchcraft He pointed out that Blackstone and Sir Matthew Hale believed in witches and in their burning. By and by Spiritualists will be pronounced the sanest people living, so far as their "belief" is concerned. The unbelievers will bear the other name.

Folly Illustrated.

The folly of giving up one's own judgment and common sense (if one possesses such faculties) to take the dictum of "spirits" in the direction of personal affairs is well illustrated in the following excerpt from the Chicago Chronicle:

New York, Oct. 6 .- An extraordinary story of Spiritualism run riot was told before Surrogate Church in Brooklyn today. It came out in the contest over the will of Mrs. Charlotte Johnston, who had been a member of Plymouth church for many years and was 80 years old when she died, leaving about $300,-000 to Miss Agnes De Monde, a school teacher.

It was because of this beguest that Miss Emma P. Sawtell, a niece of Mrs. Johnston, objects to the probate of the will. Miss De Monde was known in the Johnston house as Mrs. Johnston's "spirit baby," and it is alleged by the contestant that the "spiritual child" made use of Mrs. Johnston's beliefs in the occult as a lever to obtain money and other purely terrestrial advantages. Miss De Monde denies the exercise of undue influence. Mrs. Mary Scott, in her testimony said that Mrs. Johnston was an implicit believer in Spiritualism and recognized Miss De Monde as her spirit baby, her Miss De Monue as not spirit said Mrs. celestial child. "She told me," said Mrs. Scott, with uplifted eyes, "that her property was to go to Agnes, her celestial child. About three years ago, after Mrs. Johnston formed the acquaintance of Miss De Monde, she began to receive spirit communications through her," Mrs. Scott continued. "A year afterward Mrs. Johnston sent for me and was born spiritually to me in the night. She is my spirit baby.'

"James Matthews received money from Mrs. Johnston," said Mrs. Scott. "He was a missionary. She thought he was her affinity. Mrs. Johnston told me that was the reason Mrs. Matthews persecuted her. Mrs. Johnston gave him $5 a week and groceries and other things for his family, but when it came danced with joy and exclaimed: 'Agnes

There are quite a number of Spiritualists in this and adjoining towns in Vermont, but not one in eight takes any Spiritualistic publication; but I notice they are always anxious to read my glad to lend them, or any other reading matter I have. concerned.

An enterprise that should receive the moral and other support of all humanitarian people is that which is indicated in the following, from the Chicago Chronicle:

Children all over the city are being organized by officers of the Chicago Anticrnelty society to promote the work of that organization The movement received an impetus last night when a Children's Anticruelty Club was organized at the home of Mrs. Vincent E. Gregg, 1452 Montrose boulevard. Mar shall Simonds was elected president William Scott vice-president, Donald Mather recording secretary, and Katherine Simmons treasurer.

These children are to prevent cruelty to animals in Beuna Park. When they see a homeless cat or dog they are to see that it is given shelter, and when a driver is seen abusing a horse a report is to be made if he will not comply with a request to stop. The children will wear badges and they are instructed to see especially that the children whom they meet do not abuse animals. They will meet every Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock and receive instruction in animal nature by Miss Edytha W. Gregg.

Kind, humane sentiments and actions toward animals will develop kindness and humane feeling toward all human beings, and the world will be the better for it. There is great need for anticruelty clubs, for the cultivation of sentiments of kindness.

ASA B. ROFF.

Asa B. Roff, a well-known Spiritualist of Watseka, Ill., passed to spirit life a short time ago, at an advanced age. He was a man devoted to the cause of Spiritualism, and he was a lovely character in all departments of life. He figured conspicuously in a pamphlet called "The Watseka Wonder," and his name will go down in history as the central figure in the case. The world has been made better by Mr. Roff having lived

A Learned Jew's Opinion of Jesus. Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise, one of the leading Jewish scholars, and founder of the most influential paper published in the interests of his race, the American Israelite, a short time before his death, wrote editorially of Jesus of Nazareth: 'Jesus' teachings were unpalatable to the average man of the nations, so they distorted them until they have no sem blance to the original. To make amends for neglect of his lessons they deify the teacher, hoping, we believe vainly, that faith and blind worship will atone.

"In spite of the overwhelming evi dence and statements of the Nazarene that he was a prophet, belated and big-oted theologians continue to discredit the laws of the Eternal Equity and teach a demoralizing cult subversive of righteousness and justice. In the words of the rabbi, they will vainly hope. 'Justice, only justice shalt thou pursue in order that thou mayest live."

THE N. S. A. GONVENTION

ly two hundred delegates who met this norning [Tuesday, Oct. 20] in National Rifles' Armory, on G street northwest, near 9th street, at the eleventh annual convention of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States and Canada. The session this morning continued until 12 o'clock, when a recess was taken until 2 o'clock. There will also be an evening session to-day, begin ning at 7:30 o'clock.

The stage in the armory is beautifully decorated with autumn flowers and leaves. The audiences this morning and this afternoon were very large there being over 300 delegates and visitors present. This is regarded as one of the largest conventions of Spiritualists ever held and President Harrison D. Barrett, of Needham, Mass., believes that it will be the most important as well as the most successful

First the congregation sang a hymn "Jubilate," after which Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of this city pronounced the invocation. When a song had been sung, entitled "The Dear Old Days,"

Continuing, he asked the delegates to consider the problem of how best to adthought of Spiritualism throughout the land, and of placing it in clear light before the people.

"Let us give them a concrete expression of our belief," he said. He spoke of the passing of the idea that they were apart from the world.

"It is not that we believe in spirits" eturn," he said, "but that we know it. let us say that to the world and stand by it: and, in recognizing it, let us give the world something by which the dark pall of sorrow can be lightened and the leavy load of gloom with which this world is shrouded may be rent asunder by the smile of God. Committees Named.

After more music the appointment of the following committees was made by President Barrett: Committee on credentials—J. B. Hatch, Jr., of Massachusetts; W. J. Hicks, of Montana; F. W. Martin, of Ohio; Milan C. Edson, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Stella A. Fiske, of Iowa Committee on rules-Dr. Geo. A. .Fuler, of Massachusetts; Mr. J. S. Gillespie, of California; Dr. B. O'Dell, of Michigan; E. H. Greene, of Missouri, and F. H. Morrill, of Philadelphia.

The committee of usage and educational work, chairman, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Boston, appointed at the last annual convention, announced that the members had a very voluminous report to present, which covered the whole matter of ritual. The chairman read brief extracts and said that its adoption would tend to give the Spiritualist churches a legal status. Forms for the marriage ceremony, christening, ordination of ministers and other rites were recommended for adoption by the com-The report went over for final consideration until Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

At the meeting in the afternoon some routine business was disposed of, in the way of committee reports. Then the annual report of the president was read. At the reception in the Regent Hotel last evening, which was the formal opening of the convention, the local and isiting Spiritualists enjoyed a social good time, punctuated with many interesting addreses, both humorous and serious in character. Incidentally, there was much discussion on the proposed ritual and the election of the new officers. While old friends were meeting and engaging in lively conversation in music, provided for the occasion, permeited the apartments. The local members were busy looking out for the comfort of the guests and introducing strangers to each other.

At the evening session Mrs. Florence Johnson, of Whitewater, Wis., recited "The Bell." Mr. J. J. Morse delivered a "Heart-to-Heart-Talk," and spirit messages were received through the instrumentality of Miss Florence Morse and Mrs. C. A. Sprague. Musical selec-tions interspersed the programme for the evening.

The convention is nearing the close Some stirring discussions have kept us awake for two days. A paper signed by many delegates, asking Mr. Barrett to allow his name to be placed before the convention as a nominee for president, was read and received a tremendous demonstration from the audience. Sprague, Stevens and Kates were nomi nated, but all withdrew their names and declined to run. Mrs. Longley is only nominee for secretary; Mr. Mayer the only one for treasurer. The trend of all is more and more toward ritualism; as it is regarded more conclusive to the courts that we are religious.

For one I have no use for ritualism: but if it suits others, and serves a purpose, I have no quarrel with it. But in some respects it looks inconsistent. To avoid God, "Infinite Intelligence" is substituted in the declaration of principles, but following it with "responsive readings," God is freely used, as if he "It devolves upon me this morning to were not a dangerous character to have around. If there had not been so much to engage the time. I should have tried duty, and in extending to you this wel- to get God into the declaration, or out come I simply voice the sentiment of the responsive readings. It seems to the Spiritualists of the nation in greet me a little inconsistent—or fickle—for Him to change his name so often, especially in one document. To spread himself all over "Infinite Intelligence" in one section, and in another section note with pleasure the representative of the same document to dwindle to the dimensions of God, which to many may seem like an anthropomorphic personality of limited proportions, seems to a novice like boys' play.

> God or "Infinite Intelligence," but I do not see any need of both. I think one is all we can safely handle. Some good speaking and excellent music has varied the work, and E. W. Sprague, Anna L. Gillespie, Mrs. Rusegue and J. J. Morse each did personal credit, and inspired enthusiasm in the Prof. Longley's songs have been conspicuous feautre in the music. Margaret Gaule, Mrs. Sprague, Miss Morse and Anna L. Gillespie each gave platform tests, as also did E. W Sprague. Carrie Twing, lectured and also did some choice begging for the N. S. A. and raised a liberal sum for its work.

I was agreeably surprised to meet Mrs. Francis here, and also Hudson and Emma Tuttle—two stalwart defenders of the cause. Hudson made a short sharp, sensible speech during one of the business sessions. I should have said that the "respon sive readings" were not adopted, but water, Wis., responded to the presidad over for revision, to be acted upon dent's address. He emphasized the a year hence. HUMAN INSTITUTIONS.

Their Changeableness Necessary for Progress.

The effort of a certain class of minds who at different periods of human history have striven to establish a permanent boundary line beyond thought should not travel in its search for more perfect manifestations of the truth, has failed because such rank conservatism antagonized one of the most powerful élements of life. A balance is needful to maintain an equilibrium be tween that which would get into a rut and try to stay there, and that unsteady element that would reject facts that had been proven to be established on the truth, for something of a doubtful value 'Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good," is a motto that whether in business, politics or religion, brings success to anyone who follows out that instruction.

Many times that which is needful and ndispensable in one age and phase of unfoldment of life, would with a higher development of the faculties become an obstacle that it would be absolutely necessary to remove if any permanent progress is made. Disintegration and reorganization are constantly taking place among the most conservative and hidebound institutions whether political or religious; and these changes come in spite of their protestations and denunciations. It is the unconscious evolu-tion of life, only made apparent by later retrospection and comparison. The Roman Catholic church, the most conand engaging in lively conversation in servative of any religious organization different parts of the hotel, strains of in Christendom, is feeling the force of this disintegrating energy which is changing It from the ancient to more modern methods as well as the more liberal churches. It is the normal development of life, and on whatever line it is made manifest, it is removing from the political, social and religious body president's report was then taken up those dead systems which have passed and adopted with but one exception. their usefulness and have become repellant to progressive life. We quote from a recent editorial in one of our papers relating to that subject: "Pope Plus is revolutionizing the time-honored traditions of the Vatican, and has already begun many reforms in way with many of the formalities and the holy sec. To reduce the running expenses of the Vatican he has done ceremonials which for ages have been part of the pope's life." Truth is eternal and unchangeable but it must have various forms of manifestation. The kindergarten is all right for the class of minds for which it is intended, but to expect that the scholar should always remain in that grade, or to condemn it as useless because which was accepted. The committee through normal growth it has been out grown, would both be foolish. The sys tems of life that the pest held sacred were so without any doubt. They were needful for the age in which they were posing that they should always remain the leading element in life's program. Growth can only come through this law of change. What we term disintegration is an operation of the great uni versal law of progress. Whether in the animal or vegetable kingdom, it matters not, the operation of that law is the same. When certain forms of matter reach their limit they dissolve and pass to the original elements from which hey came, to be again reformed. In the human social, political and religious systems that law manifests itself in the disintegration and re-organization through which those systems are constantly passing. In the absolute there is no such thing as retrogression; whatever external appearances may indicate. New life forms, whether in the physical or the mental and spiritual world, can only be made manifest when the condiions are ready for their appearance Many a reformatory movement has failed because the fruit was unripe, to attend to since the book was placed in my hands to read, I am late in sendthose for whom it was intended not hav ing developed to comprehension of the truth it sought to make manifest. Some have also failed, overpowered for the time being by the brutal force of the opposition; but the desire for a change, to better conditions, was there and could not be destroyed because it was one of the immortal principles, and if not allowed to develop in a normal peaceful nanner it will manifest itself through violent upheavals.

The present generation is gradually realizing the fact that certain parts of its political, social and religious systems must be eliminated, a refitting of of the garments needful so that they will correspond to the form of growth of the present time. To neglect this important work would be race suicide. Some of the garments cannot even be remodeled, but must be cast aside on the rubbish pile of antiquated systems; and by the fire of the living present manifestation of truth be resolved back to their original elements

To the ultra-conservative minds these thoughts may seem to be fraught with destruction to the orderly systems of life; but to those who in a measure realize the possibilities that are attainable, know that it is the duty of the iconoclast and the constructive reformer to walk hand in hand and with a singleness of purpose work for the consummation of the desired result, a changing from the old to newer and better conditions.

Change is written on all things. must be either that or fossilization. The powerful element of discontent is one of the mightiest forces used in the evolution to higher conditions of life. Do not imagine that I am opposed to It is the first element to be made manifest in the progressive plan. It is the forerunner and prophet of the new dispensation that is being called to displace the old. As only truth is immortal, any systems of life founded upon it can never be affected by the laws of change; that is only intended to destroy

> The outworn rite, the old abuse, The pious fraud transparent grown, The good held captive in the use Of wrong alone.'

The soul life of humanity must grow, nust ever be reaching upward to higher things; and the materialized forms rep esented in the political, social and religious institutions must, as they are merely the material forms of the interior soul life, be subject to the law of constant change in their external manifestations so as to correspond to the interior life. In carefully studying human history, ancient and modern, and lewing the various forms through which life made itself manifest, we can see that the great law of changeable ness sometimes was manifested in the work of demolition of effete systems and then that great law was used to build on the ruins of the old a better structure. So it always has been and always will be for,

"I looked; aside the dust cloud rolled-Upspringing from the ruined old, I saw the new."

OUR SYMPOSIUM. As usual, it will be found exceptionally interesting. Mrs. McIntyre gives a vivid account of her experiences with spirits connected with a Methodist revival meeting. Miss Meyer gives in graphic language her views of Obsession, and we do not wonder that both manifest great feeling. On one occasion we met Mrs. McIntyre. She is a highly cultured, beautiful lady, one you would not think as being in the least a psychic. Mr. Edgerly and G. H. Brooks, two of our foremost workers, give no uncertain sound in their able defense of mediumship. They are followed by other champions equally as earnest in the expression of opinion—the venerable Dr. Greer, E. W. Baldwin, and Esther Thomas Bosley-certainly interesting reading for and against. This symposium furnishes an object lesson of great value to every thinking mind, and which in the end will result greatly to the advantage of our cause.

COMMITTED SUICIDE.

We are pained to learn that Frederic G. Tuttle, treasurer and business manager of the Banner of Light, Boston, Mass., committed suicide the middle of last week by shooting himself. No cause is assigned for the rash act by the dispatches in the daily papers.

Later .- A telegram from Mr. Barrett just as we were going to press states that the suicide was the result of ill health. He was honest in all respects.

Outdone.

The newspapers of the day herald the wonderful information that a woman of sixty-five years recently gave birth to a child. That is a pretty good story, a big one, indeed; but this modern woman was outdone by Sarai, the wife of Abraham, unto whom a son was born when she was ninety years of age. Thus the Bible story outdoes the modern newspapers.

THE BOOK EXAMINED

Geo. H. Brooks, prominent as a lecturer and medium, gives no uncertain sound in his Condemnation of The Great Psychological Crime book. He denounces it in severe language. He is followed by Esther Thomas Bosley, who writes pleasantly and beautifully in her defense of the volume. And thus the friction of thought goes on, and Spiritualism in the end will be the gainer.

ON "THE GREAT PSYCHOLOG-ICAL CRIME," Owing to the many things I have had

ing in my review of the same. I have just finished reading it, and have tried to give it an impartial reading, trusting I should find light on the most import ant subject ever brought before the world-of mind over mind, and of the demonstration of a continued existence for the soul after it leaves this earthly life. I was in hopes some good word would be expressed for the work done in the past along the lines of hypnotism and spiritual communion; but, from be ginning to end, not one word was said of any good done, or anything in favor of the great manifestation of mind ove mind, or of spirit communion. other hand, its thought and influence was to impress one that all such manifestations were criminal; that the hyp notist, the subject, the medium and the spirit were preparing for themselves a condition that would be worse than an orthodox hell, and in many cases result in spiritual death. I thought as I read the book, is it, after all, that the phenomena as well as the glorious philos ophy of Spiritualism stands on no better foundation than that expressed in this book? Is it possible that all the mediums who have helped to unfold this truth as it is to-day, and bring the light to so many, is it possible the mediums who to-day are standing before the world as advocates in one form or the other, are criminals whose end at last will be death? Is it possible that after all these years of patient toil and the many bright intellects that have come and gone, and those who are with us in the body, that not one has yet been led to the truth of the real position we occupy-not one spirit been permitted to give the warning cry and we be warned? I confess the book depressed me, and I seemed to feel as though a terrible chasm was opened to receive us. Then I felt that there is no greater work ever printed that could be used as an argument against us, both by the pulpit and the press; that here was a book written by an alleged Spiritualist—no one knows who-giving experiences that are expressed in terms attractive; that the old methods of attack are all worn out, and the book will supply a longfelt want or desire on the part of our enemies. It seemed to me that the work that lies ahead of us all was to be harder than ever; that added to the deep-seated prejudice in the minds of so Hudson, was to be used against us.

I am sure that every intelligent Spir itualist is conscious of some of the obstacles that lie in the path of mediumship; that every medium who to-day stands before the people tries to impress upon all who are seeking to develop mediumship that there should be care exercised in their development. Spiritualism is not to blame for the ignorance of those who rush into mediblame for obsession, nor for the experi-ences of those who are in our insane gorges and under mighty viaducts, past asylums from that one cause. Spiritualism is not to blame for the dense ignorance in the world on these great subjects of spiritual and mental manifestations. Far from it! Its mission is and has been to educate the world along his own nature reflects, and with his these lines so people may more fully understand themselves and be prepared to live as intelligent men and women. I have had a great opportunity to observe mediums, in the position I have on the oars, keep ever alert. occupied. I am, perhaps, as well acquainted with as many mediums for all phases of mediumship as any Spiritualist in this country, and I want to say, these many mediums whom I know (and I know them well) are not the subjects of every mind that comes along, either in the body or out, but on the other hand, they are as well, yes, better individualized than those who have no mediumship.

I have been more than pleased as I would meet these different workers in the field to see how they have grown crushing wheels.
during the period of our separation. Indeed, I can truthfully say that if it had not been for their mediumship they would have no spiritual unfoldment at all that through their unfoldment they exercise a spiritual force which, if it does nothing else, calls attention to the | imalism; and the same power necessary great power about us. As to the moral phase of the question, I will say this in passing, that when current of mediumship. Look for the persons who go into the presence of a garden, beware of the whirlpool; be medium will free their minds from impure motives and desires, they will reap better results; that there are no more immoral mediums than in other spheres of life, and as long as the world lives where it does to-day, just so long will conditions confront us as they do. I am not so foolish as to think we have the whole truth, that there may not yet come a better understanding of these great problems, and a better way to communicate with the spirit world. Ah, no! I can see no reason why there should not be in time to come a better understanding and a better way to com-municate with the spirit world. And I know when that time comes it will be welcomed by all of the Spiritualists.

I have been a medium and a worker for many years. I can truthfully say I am not afraid of the results of the law of mediumship. I am not afraid that the good friends who have used me, nor that I shall be finally wiped out of exist-ence. Not a bit of it! I am not afraid to meet the condition that awaits me-I am not afraid of my mediumship. On the other hand, I more fully appreciate my mediumship to-day than ever; I try more than ever to live for it, for I recognize that it has educated me; it has taken one who had no experience or unfoldment of spiritual power and it has unfolded that which has brought peace and nower. I would not give up my mediumship under any circumstances.

While I recognize there are some things said in the book that we should all become familiar with, there is no special harm to read it; yet I can not feel it is the truth nor anywhere near the truth, but that ere long it will go the way of other works of that kind—be relegated to the rubbish pile. But mediumship will go on. There will be a better understanding of hypnotism as well as of mediumship. The cause of Spiritualism rests upon the bed-rock of mediumship and spiritual manifesta tions. The Spiritualist will welcome any and all new truths that help vance our cause and give us a helfer

WHAT G. H. BROOKS HAS TO SAY | understanding of the great world of spirit. In the meantime, young mediums, who are just coming into this great truth, do not be alarmed, but study the laws of mediumship, become posted on the subject, and in the end you will be able to come into possession of great truths that will uplift the soul. Thus I am able to throw off any depressing influence of the book, and rise o the position that all mediums can attain. I KNOW there is a spiritual ex-istence after death, that there is no leath to my soul, as I unfold and go on in the work that lies before us.

The Independent Method of Communication With Spirits Approved by a Lady of Experience.

G. H. BROOKS.

Marconi in his discovery has materialized the best means yet known for communication establishing to the most materialistic mind the transmutory power of the atmosphere; and I think this "Storm Center" is a much needed agitation and will tend to a growth of our psychics, and is only in the line of progression.

All people are in direct communion with our advanced friends, and Spiritualism is only the laying of a cable connecting the visible with the now invisible continent, as Cyrus Field did with the Atlantic. Lilian Whiting's "Story of a Summer" is a possibility with every human being, and the seemingly non-progressive status of our mediums is not due to their growth, but to the unfoldment of our people; and so long as the world as a mass demands materialistic proof, so long will that phase of mediumship be practiced. So long as Christians retain any of the vicarious atonement atoms in their beliefs, so long will they demand intermediaries and will continue to shoulder all their shortcomings upon someone else; and, of course, our Spiritualistic ranks are as yet mainly recruited from that source, or from that class which, becoming disgusted with the absurdities and enervating influences, swing too far into a materialistic belief and require the breaking of tables and lifting of ponderous substances to reach their positive conditions in order to convince them that there is aught in this world or the next, beyond the very limited sphere of their five senses.

Mediumship I can liken to a broad river upon which all can embark, but only a few have done so as yet, and many, this book, like the works of they are called mediums. The medium seeks its banks in a dim, way, like the pioneers of old who sought this western continent; but because our forefathers lighted with a tallow dip, mowed with a sickle, and traveled in a stage coach, shall we decry the work which made an Edison possible, which laid the foundation for a nation with a future more full of possibilities than was ever known? True, again like our forefathers, the medium does not as yet umship without any understanding know through what strange cities this whatever, and who may have unpleas- great river passes, what massive cavant experiences. Spiritualism is not to erns it rushes by, what green fields it picturesque islands, over dangerous waterways, carrying progress, knowledge, power, danger, death and destruc-

What must he do? Pull blooms a fair garden; he will drift by if idly lying in his boat. No, alert and active, he controls his boat, and gathers many beautiful flowers whose fragrance will last through a life-time. Yonder a mighty whirlpool threatens to gather his bark in its terrible current; awake he must be. A monster ship of steam (science) mark of man's massive intellect, crosses his path; he must understand its course, and then his boat can be lifted upon its glorious awellsif not, it will be drawn down under its awake, rower, be awake. There is no danger signal up, there is no wall to compel him to seek the garden; the dividing line must be the rower's own knowledge of his surroundings. Therefore I would make a strenuous plea for conscious mediumship-the manipulator of the wires rather than the manipulated, for purely negative conditions are destructive to the individuality of the man. A perfect equilibrium must be kept between body, soul and spirit. ESTHER THOMAS BOSLEY.

The Morris Pratt Institute This institution opened its doors to the public in September, 1902, and has successfully passed through one full year of active school work. It is an auxiliary of the N. S. A., and its claims will be formally presented in this conventon by the officers of the school. All Spiritualists are or should be interested in educational work, and should make every possible effort to advance the same.. As an auxiliary of this association, the Morris Pratt Institute is entitled to a respectful hearing on the part of this convention and I suggest that a special hour be assigned its representatives in which to acquaint this

It will be remembered that an effort was made during the past two years to establish a home for worthy, indigent mediums, at Reed City, Mich. A house and lot were purchased at that point, and steps taken to secure a fund for were not encouraging, and the trustees of this association decided it would be best to offer temporary relief to those who were most needy and let the matter of a special home rest for the time being. Small pensions were accordingly paid to the few who were known to be worthy, and the public was informed that the Reed City Home would not be opened for an indefinite period. During the past year, the N. S. A. building at plead with you as delegates to interest Reed City, was burned, but as it was insured the association's loss is but slight. It was decided to be unwise to atempt to rebuild and the lot was advertised for sale. A good offer was received for it early in September, and cepted. The deeds have been duly signed, and the National Association has formally and finally closed out its business in Reed City. I recommend that no further action be taken by the N. S. A. to establish a medium's home at any point; as such it would be wholly Impractical in character, and could not be made popular among the mediums themselves, nor among the Spiritual-

A Pension Fund.

In lieu of a home building, I recommend the continuation of the present policy of the N. S. A. in pensioning such indigent speakers and mediums as are regularly paid to a few mediums during the past year. All cases were carefully investigated and pensions granted only upon the presentation of reliable evidence of worthiness. Henry Slade has been cared for, for the sake of the good work he did in the early years of his public work. None of the pensioners have received the money into their own hands, but it has been sent to those who have cared for them, who have used it fully for the purposes desig-

I respectfully urgo this plan to your consideration, and recommend authoritative action thereon. The pension system is the best method thus far evolved which we can care for our own, and I believe it to be wise to husband our resources for this worthy object, and not waste them in futile attempts to establish and endow homes into which very few mediums could be induced to Wills and Donations.

A few estates, in which the N. S. A was either directly or indirectly interested have been settled during the past year, notably those of Case and Erspenmulier, from which this association has received its share in money. The bequest of Mr. Case was seriously diminished by the severe contest made by remote heirs to break the will, but the attempts were not successful, and the N. dollars as its proportional share. It one thousand dollars to secure what was paid over, giving the N. S. A. only four hundred dollars net, from a bequest that designed it to have almost ten times that sum. It was worth all cost and far more to the Spiritualists of America, as the decision in their favor by the Indiana court has estabfollowed in future years in defending of like nature. This suit has shown the necessity of exercising great care in making wills on the part of all who desire to benefit the cause of Spiritualism. Proper legal forms for wills should be prepared that will stand every test of law, and placed before our people. I feel to recommend, however, that our friends be urged to make their bequests by deed or check while they are yet in the form in order that they may see that their wishes are carried out in full. An aged couple in New Jersey have set all Spiritualists a praiseworthy example by deeding their valu able real estate to the N. S. A., outright, taking a life lease for their own protection. I earnestly recommend that this method be everywhere urged upon our liberal minded friends who wish to aid Spiritualism through the N. S. A. very few in numbers. Steps should be taken to utilize every possible factor accessible for the furtherance of this work. Two years ago, Lyman C. Howe, who had been elected Historian at a previous convention, was instructed to begin work on a small scale. An appropriation of two hundred dollars was made for this purpose, and Mr. Howe managed to do a great deal of work with that sum. His eyesight becoming impaired, he was not able to continue his work last year, and our last annual convention elected your president as his as sistant. Work was planned for the year, but circumstances, not necessary to mention in detail, forced your presi dent from all fields of labor, hence the only report possible to make to this convention is that progress has been made, and further time asked for. I feel warranted, now that Historian Howe has almost wholly recovered his sight, in recommending a liberal appro priation to the History Fund, and ask that positive instruction be given the incoming board of trustees to push this work as rapidly as possible during the year. If Mr. Howe requires any assistants, this convention can direct him to employ such as he may need, limiting

I believe these measures to be unconstitutional, and feel that their obnoxious features can be removed by an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. A test case should be taken to that tribunal at the earliest possible moment. I believe a worthy case has developed during the year in Grand Rapids, Mich., where a magnetic known to be worthy and deserving of for the illegal practice of medicine. Prosecution of Mediums. What I have said upon the subject of medical prosecution, will apply with

ums and speakers. Ordinances exist in many cities of the land making the exercise of mediumshp a felony. states have special laws bearing upon this subject, which make criminals of our best mediums and speakers wherever they attempt to work in those states. Several prosecutions have taken place during the past year, and, as there seems to be a tendency to circumscribe our liberties in this direction, I feel that this convention should take action in relation thereto, and instruct its incoming officers to make a test of the rights of our workers as psychics before our Supreme Court, I therefore recommend that the laws of Colorado, California and Washington be looked into, and the alleged offenses of our mediums and S. A. received about fourteen hundred speakers, who were prosecuted in those states be accurately measured and deshould have received over three thou-termined. If these cases are found to sand dollars, and would have done so be just and worthy, I recommend that had it not been for litigation. A fund for this purpose has already been started, known as The Melium Special Defense Fund, to which all mediums are requested to contribute in case of necessity. Every medium is requested to connect himself with the N. S. A. through this fund by taking out lished a precedent that can and will be a special certificate, at a cost of five dollars, which entitles him to the aid of the N. S. A. in case of prosecution. He is also liable to assessments to the amount of twenty dollars per year under the provisions of this certificate. During the past ten years, only two mediums have taken out these certificates. need not comment upon this significant fact, but will simply say that this branch of the N. S. Mass-Meetings.

During the past year, I have received numerous requests for the holding of mass-meetings at different centers, as was formerly the policy of this associa tion. These meetings were abandoned two years ago, upon my recommenda-tion, the feeling being, that while they were financially successful, they did not add to the membership of local socie ties very appreciably, nor strengthen them financially. There is no doubt but that they do add to the general interest in Spiritualism on the part of the masses, but it is a question whether they carry sufficient weight that influence a permanent factor in so-ciety. To make them successful requires a great deal of work, and if that work is done by the wrong people, these gatherings will do more harm than good. I can see their advantages, and possible disadvantages, hence do not feel to make any special recommendation upon the subject, believing, that, as delegates, you know what you ought to do in the premises for the best good of our cause.

Cuba and Porto Rico.

Spiritualism has taken a new start in these islands during the past tweeter months and our brethren there are asking for a closer union with the N. S. A I have received several letters from Porto Rico asking me to send mediums and speakers to them who can speak the Spanish language, and requesting me to assist them in their attempts to organize. I feel that this is a neces sary work, and that the N. S. A should interest itself in the affairs of our brethren in the West Indies Islands. A ong personal interview with one of the leading Spiritualists of Porto Rico convinced me that his people were ready for missionary work, and willing to support the same. He declared that with proper effort on the part of a good organizer and a competent medium, the great majority of the people of Porto Rico could be brought over into Spiritualism. The matter is well worth look-The Renaissance in Japan gave the Unitarians a golden opportunity in that country, which they eagerly embraced through proper missionary work. The results have been far beyond their expectations, for the brightest minds of the "Island Kingdom" have accepted their doctrines, and Japan is one of the most progressive nations of the earth because of that fact. I believe that same opportunity awaits the Spiritualists in Cuba and Porto Rico. I therefore recommend that action be taken upon this matter by this convention, that every possible effort be made to establish perfect reciprocity between the people of those islands and the friends of the N. S. A. Spiritualism at St. Louis in 1904. This convention should see to it that Spiritualism is properly emphasized at St. Louis during the World's Fair in 1904. There is to be no general parliament of religions, but each denomination among the Christians especially, is seeking to have its doctrines presented to as many as can be reached by the various speakers employed. As the Fair is to be absolutely closed on Sundays, the visitors to the Fair must put in their time elsewhere. If the N. S. A. were to engage a corps of speakers and mediums for the Sundays of the Fair, I am certain that our brethren in St. Louis will do everything in their power to assist this body in the way of providing halls and churches in which to hold our meetings. Possibly a great tent meeting for Sundays only, could be provided. I am opposed to any attempt to hold a camp meting in or near St. Louis during the exposition, yet I do believe in active propagandism there along legitimate lines. I recommend that the incoming board of trustees be instructed to take such steps as will secure a tation of Spiritualism throughout the entire season of the exposition. The local societies there will be in session a portion of the time, but the pastors of the leading locals are desirous that the work should be carried forward upon a scale representative of the National character, rather than that of local in terest only. We should act in conjunction with the local societies there, not independently of them. Again I recom mend action upon this matter.

An International Spiritualist Congress. Upon instructions given by our convention of 1901, and supplemented by orders from the board of trustees, opened correspondence with the Spiritualists in all quarters of the globe with regard to the practicability of holding an International Congress of Spiritual ists in St. Louis next year. I sent seventy letters to the leading Spiritualists the world, and have been favored with many replies. All English-speak-ing colonies and nations declare such a congress impractical on account of the expense it would entail upon the delegates to attend same. Some of them feel that such a conclave would be good thing but assert their inability to attend it, even if it were held. Others do not seem quite ready to take this step in the direction of establishing of the brotherhood of the race. French, Russian, German, Italian and Spanish correspondents are all in favor of such a congress, yet many of them declare that it will be impossible for them to attend the same. So little encouragement is given by the people who should be interested in it, I am constrained to recommend that no attempt be made to hold this congress. If the wealthy Spiritualists of the world would place ten thousand dollars in the treasury of the N. S. A., a truly representative body could be easily brought to-gether. I deeply regret that this Congress of Nations in Spiritualism cannot be held, and I hope that the day will come when Spiritualists, the world over, will perceive the importance holding such a gathering, and be led to provide the means by which it can be brought together. Home Circles.

The recurring frequency with which the N. S. A. office is besieged with ques tions regarding Spiritualism and the best means of becoming acquainted with its principles, leads me to refer to "home circles" that were so popular fifty years ago. As a perfectly safe means to the end in view, the home circle, is certainly first and foremost. 1 believe in the establishment of such circles wherever possible, when there is one person who is somewhat familiar with psyche force present to take the lead. When established in a prayerful spirit, and sought for the purpose of receiving spiritual instruction, only good eventuates from them. I recommend that this body of delegates declare itself emphatically in favor of establish ing home circles, under proper guid-ance, as a part of the missionary work of the N. S. .A. I also recommend that a small circular or tract, setting forth such instructions as may be desired for the foundation of such circles in communities not accessible to our missionaries, and where public meetings are not held, be prepared by the trustees of the N. S. A., and furnished gratis to all Once more I feel impressed to call the state associations. By this means the who may apply for the same. Such a will do a great deal of good. I urge ac-tion upon this important subject.

Post Office Missions.

Through what is known as the "Post Office Missions," our Unitarians brethren have been able to widen the scope of their influence in all sections of land. The N. S. A. can do the same, for Spiritualism if Spiritualists will but cooperate with it in this work by supply ing the home office with the names and correct addresses of people who are open to the reception of a liberal thought. Our secretary then can send them such literatüre as may be on hand for free distribution, open correspondence with some of them, and ultimately secure their open support, induce them to organize home circles and local societies through which the truths of Snir. itualism can be presented in communities in which they are now unknown. I recommend therefore, an appropriation for the purpose of extending the influence of our Post Office Mission Work If more tracts are needed, I urge that they may be prepared or selected and published as soon as possible by the N. S. A. officers.

Protection for Our Cause.

The experience of our brethren in St. Louis last spring warrants me in asking this representative body of delegates to take some action to protect Spiritualism as a movement from such abominations in the future. The Brockway family that brought such disgrace upon our cause in St. Louis only represent scores of others who are engaged in the same unholy work. Spiritualism always suffers from such rascality, and if the Brockways are mediums, that fact did not warrant them in pilfering thousands of dollars from their unsuspecting patrons. Something must be done to disabuse the public mind with regard to the responsibility of Spiritualism for such conscienceless people. They change their names from time to time, and alter their personal appearance as much as possible in order to escape detection. Spiritualists would do their duty in all such cases, our cause would soon cease to suffer for this predatory horde of robbers of mortals and insulters of the arisen ones. Rather than have the present conditions continue it would be better to split our movement in twain, and permit those who believe in obtaining money under false pretenses, and other questionable practices to go their way without claiming any connection with true Spiritualism. We want phe nomena and plenty of them, but not of the kinds produced by the parties under discussion. I recommend decisive action upon this matter by this conven-

Some Special Needs.

The foregoing paragraph prompts me to refer to a few of the special needs of our movement at the present time. First of all, we need a young, progressive body of people preparing for our ministry. There are less than twenty of our speakers to-day who are under forty years of age. Our young people are led into other occupations because of our failure to establish pastorates and permanancy in the character of our work. This convention should evolve some plan by which our young people may be induced to enter our ministry. Second, we need a more devotional, religious spirit in our public meetings. The curiosity age and the era of the mirth seeker are things of the past. They are now attached to the theatres where they properly belong. This convention should declare to the world the religious side of Spiritualism, and place it squarely and reverently upon the basis of scientific Theism. Third, we need a more dignified method of presenting phenomena to the world. they are now given, they detract from the divine beauty of our great truth. and frequently make our movement the laughing-stock of the world. Phenomena are invaluable aids in our work and purposes of the angels-not reduced to the level of the circus or variety show. They are of specal value in the home circle, in the laboratary of the scientist, and in the communion service that should follow the address of a settled speaker every Sunday evening. I recommend that the convention devise ways and means by which the foregoing suggeston can be put into practice. less something of the kind is done, a division of our forces is inevitable in the near future, and the line of cleavage will be between the religious and iconoclastic elements in our ranks. I hope our union of forces may be preserved but not at the cost of the self-respect of reverential, truth-seeking people. prefer a division between truth and error, between reverence and irreverence between instruction and amusement, to the present effort to unite these incon gruous elements. Let us have our phe nomena, our science, our philosophy and our religion, with no trespassing upon the prerogatives of either branch

Better an absolute divorce of phenomena and religion than the present bur lesqueing of the two.

Finance. Another need of our movement, espe cially of the N. S. A., is finance. Any or thodox body with only a quarter of our members, frequently possesses ten times the ready money we do. We have generous, wholesouled people in our ranks, but they are not able to give to the cause they love. Still the great mass of our people are not poor purse. They only need awakening to a sense of duty to induce them to render generous support to their religion. In order to enable Spiritualism to do its legitimate work through the N. S. A., a generous endowment fund is necessary Plans for raising that fund should be adopted by this convention. Receipts from per capita dues, donations and collections are not sufficient to meet the running expenses of the N.S. A. and enable it to branch out in new fields of labor. From the financial reports of our secretary and freasurer, you will learn of the monetary standing of the N. S. A. It is far from being adequate to the needs of this organization, creditable though it may be. The National Associations of other religious bodies have large interest-bearing investments from which they derive a goodly per-centage of their incomes. There is no reason why the N.S. A. cannot do likewise. A generous indownent fund can be raised if the will to do it is made manifest.

One small orthodox body raised sev enty-five thousand dollars in one state to carry on its work within the borders of that commonwealth last year. An other organization—a national association—with less than one fifth of our members raised over one hundred and seventy five thousand dollars last year These people as a rule, were not so wel to do as we are as a body. They had the will to achieve success, and they were successful. So may we if we will but make the effort. I believe that the raising of a generous endowment fund, or planning to do so, is the paramount duty of this convention. Our Universalist brethren did it fifty years ago when their members were, few and their purses slender. They, determined to win, and they did win. I recommend that an endowment fund of fifty thou-sand dollars be raised for the N.S.A. ing board of trustees be instructed to appoint special solicitors under proper restrictions to make a house to house canvass in their respective communi ties for contributions to this fund. general call could be issued to the coun try at large asking for donations to this fund, and stating its special objects.

few devoted, unselfish wokers this sum could be speedily raised and the N. S. A. would have a permanent source of in come, upon which it could draw in do ing its legitimate work. I ask this body to act affirmatively upon this question My own success in raising funds at dif ferent camps this past season proves that the people will respond when properly approached. Fifty similar solicitors equally devoted and in earnest, would do more than fifty times as well recommend the selection and equip ment of reliable and experienced solic itors for the raising of this fund. If the delegates here present were to be constituted a committee of the whole to engage in this work their returns would average one hundred dollars each. This would mean one fifth of the sum asked for, and the balance could easily be made up. One general solicitor, with roving commission, upon a generous percentage, could raise the entire sum within the next twelve months. If our camps were properly canvassed by competent solicitors for a single season only, the sum could be raised and all expenses met. I feel that the N. S. A. should have one reliable financial agent at each camp next season to do this very work. I recommend action accord ingly.

Necrology.

Many of the loyal friends of our movement have taken leave of earth during the past year. Among these are several who were especially active in the support of the N. S. A. To all of these earnest workers, I pay my personal tribute of praise, and ask that suitable resolutions be drawn in recognition of their worth. Especial mention should be made of the work of Count Alexanier Aksakof, of St. Petersburg, Russia, whose literary labors in behalf of Spir itualism have been the wonder of the world, and of Thomas G. Newman, editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal and a worthy representative of our cause. Brother Newman fought a good fight, and honestly kept faith with his own conscience and the world. In his transition, the N. S. A. loses a true friend, and Spiritualism a noble representative. The transition of Benjamin Rogers, of California, and Samuel I. France of Massachusetts, remove two true and tried friends of the N. S. A. from the scenes of earth. They generously gave of their means to the support of the cause they loved, and laored for organization because of their belief in the religion of human brotherhood. I ask that resolutions of respect be adopted by this convention, and recommend that their names be placed upon the roll of honor in the archives of this association. Upon this roll I also recommend that the names of all of the riends of our movement who have entered the higher life since we last met in convention, be inscribed in humble recognition of their worth The Spiritualist Press. All of the Spiritualist papers have rendered the N. S. A. loyal support throughout the year. Without the aid received from these sources, the N. S. A. would have made but little progress. earnestly recommend that a hearty vote of thanks be extended to John R Francis, of The Progressive Thinker; Hon. James B. Townsend and Willard J. Hull, of the Light of Truth; W. H. Bach, of the Sunflower; J. Munsell Chase of the Religio-Philosophical Jour nal, and Frederic G. Tuttle, of the Banner of Light. I take this opportunity to call the attention of the delegates pres ent to the frequent attempts of a subor dinate officer of the United States government to restrict the liberties of our ress, and recommend that the incom ing board of Trustees be instructed to valiant editors by defending their rights at the seat of government, to the end that a free press may be forever maintained in America.

The Board of Trustees.

All of the members of the board of trustees have served the N. S. A. well and faithfully throughout the year. They have been true to their trusts, and have upheld the dignity and honor of our cause in a praiseworthy manner Personally your president is under many obligations to them, one and all, and takes this opportunity to publicly acknowledge that fact.

The Home Office.

The work in the home office in Washington has been performed with the same fidelity that has ever characterized the present incumbent of the office of secretary. All of the N. S. A. books have been kept with precision, and are models of beauty considering the variety of accounts that our secretary has to enter. Everything about the office is kept in its place, a spiritual atmosphere pervades the whole building, and all the work of the association is promptly dispatched. Our secretary has faithfully discharged her every duty, and has rendered your president many favors during the year. Without her efficient aid, the president's work would have been incomplete. She has been kind, considerate, and zealous for the right in all things, as well as a source of inspirational strength to the president and other members of the board. The Spiritualists of America are under obligations to their faithful secretary, Mary T. Longley, for the many favors she has done them as well as for her devoted services in her official capacity.

The President's Work.

There is but little to be said upon this topic. The perfunctory duties of the office were performed by me from Oct. 24 to December 15, 1902, when our honored vice-president, Thomas M. Locke, became acting president, and held that position until May 28, 1903. The causes that led to this result are known to all, and need not be repeated here. Acting President Locke discharged his every duty ably, and with conscientious fidel ity. He honored the office throughout his regency, and his report will acquaint you with what was done during his incumbency. Since June 1. I attended to my duties to the best of my ability. In round numbers, I have received and turned over to the secretary, twelve hundred dollars during the year, fivesixths of which were taken in at the camp-meetings. I have not spent more than three months in active service of the N. S. A. during the year. Such as my work is, I place it before you for such judgment as its results may merit.

Treasurer Mayer.

Our philanthropic treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, has been the same faithful friend and zealous supporter of the N. S. A. as he has been in past years. He is a tower of strength to our organization, and deserves the grateful thanks of the Spiritualists of the world for the good he has done our cause overywhere. Let us give honor to whom honor is due for his devotion to the cause we love. and prove our appreciation of him and his work by earnestly co-operating with him hereafter in carrying it forward.

Amendments.

From the report of the committee on mendments, you will learn of several changes that are proposed for our constitution. I commend these to your special notice, and recommend that they be carefully studied ere they are accepted or rejected. They are vitally import-By persistent effort on the part of a ant in their influence upon our organic law, and should not be hastily consid

Special Recommendations.

I recommend: That small sums be appropriated to aid state associations that esire missionary world in their borders, but have not funds to carry it on alone. That one speaker be furnished free to every camp-meeting, upon whose programs special days have been accorded the N. S. A., said speaker to deliver two addresses, if desired, outside of his work on N. S. A. day.

That special efforts he made by our officials to prove the interest of the N. S. A. in local societies in rendering them such aid as lies within its nower; That efforts to secure special dona tions and bequests by will be continued with renewed zeal. That the files of all Spiritualist papers be completed, properly bound, and

That special solicitors be placed at every camp for the season of 1904, under contract to secure donations either to the Pension or Endowment Funds, or

That the purchase or building of churches and temples be encouraged, and that congratulations be extended to all societies that have succeeded in securing homes of their own.

That every delegate and visitor present at this convention be especially commissioned to work for the N. S. A. and co-operation during the coming

In General. Notwithstanding the clouds to which have referred in this report, and the numerous dangers confronting us on all sides, the general outlook for Spiritualism and the N. S. A. is brighter and better than it has been for several years past. A healthier interest in the subject is everywhere apparent, and a more earnest desire to get at the truth manifest. The attitude of the press, pulpit and people in regard to it seems o be kindlier, and its thought is everywhere received with greater considera tion than ever before. This change of sentiment is largely, if not wholly due, to the influence of the N. S. A. as an organization. I recommend that suitable expression upon all moral and reformatory questions be made by this conthrough the committee on resolutions, thereby testifying to our sympathy with and support of all measures designed to advance the welfare of the race.

Conclusion. I now return unto you the office with which you honored me ten years ago. If this organization is a success to-day and there are none who can truthfully gainsay this fact, I trust that my work has, in some small degree, helped to make it so. I have erred many times in the discharge of my duties, but I dare assert in this presence that those errors were from impulse, over-zeal, and intensity of purpose, rather than from any deliberate attempt or secret wish on my own part. For my mistakes, er rors of judgment, and lack of judgment, I have striven hard to atone by renewed effort in behalf of our great cause. I crave your indulgence for them all, even as I crave a truer life before my God. To all of my friends in the United States and Canada, I return my grateful thanks for their generous support of my administration and for the many favors received at their hands. May they prosper in all good works, and be daily plessed by the visitation of angels Dur N. S. A. has a glorious future before it, if each and every Spiritualist will but support it as lovally as he ought. The outlook for our cause as a whole is romising, and success awaits it at every turn provided the Spiritualists of America will devote themselves to its sacred principles one-half as zealously as they formerly supported their churches. To the work of upbuilding of | new matter. It has the following fourour cause and of making the N. S. hands and souls, victory is surely ours. With only good will in my heart for all of my brethren, without bitterness or malice, and with a prayer for the health and prosperity of our people and our N. S. A., I close this, my last annual report, and bid you all a kindly farewell.

of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffied. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretof ible portions of the head. This discovery has een named "Actina." It is a vapor current which passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhai attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner car, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Rhuging noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. .. GENERAL SURVEY ..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS. DUINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other re-Quirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line Item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

J. O. Stephens writes from St. Joseph, Mo.: "St. Joseph, after having many trials and surmounting many difficulties, begins to show some life spiritually. Our society, under the present management, with the aid of that grand man, Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, who has been with us two weeks, and will remain at least two weeks more and possibly longer, is progressing finely; the attendance has increased over half. Dr. Hewtt's lectures are very valuable, and many of our leading citizens are becoming interested, and are attending our meetings, and we hope to be able to place our society on a solid basis

Gertrude Soffel, secretary, writes: "Dr. Juliet H. Severance, the noted advocate of human rights, and merciless flayer of human wrongs, social shams, and popular delusions, and popular delusions, entertained Sunday, October 11, the Church of the Golden Rule on the subject of "Humanity's Needs. showing that humanity's greatest needs, high above all, were liberty, personal liberty to live out their own particular lives, in their own particular way, so long as that particular way did not act as a check upon the equal rights of others, and censuring the government in denying the use of the mails, the freedom of the press, and its literature devoted to sex instructions, for race improvement, that in personal qualities, angels might be born instead of demons; the foundation principle of the Church of the Golden Rule, declaring that our present-day matrimonial ignorance in the creation of souls was the world's greatest curse, concluding in giving to Anthony Comstock, the mail censor, a terrible roast ing for his perfidious ways in forcing convictions, and hounding to prison and to death his victims. Were Anthony present his hair would have been made to stand on end." Anthony Comstock has no doubt made some mistakes, but he should be given credit everywhere for destroying tons of obscene literature and nasty pictures, intended to be sent to the sons and daughters of our homes, to corrupt their minds and lead them to dens of vice and prostitution. Col. Ingersoll, always radical while in earth life, knowing the good work done by Comstock in preserving the young from the contamination of obscene literature commended him and sustained him. His destruction of obscene literature should endear him to every family that has sons and daughters.

August Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth held its meeting October 18 at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue. Brookiyn, N. Y., which was attended by a large audience. The speaker of the afternoon was Mrs. Margaret J. Hoey, who spoke on Spiritualism and Its relation to Theosophy. Mr. J. Rass-mussen gave a number of communications from the spirit world. After de scribing a spirit as a brother to a gen-tleman in the audience, he gave him the secret grip of the order, which he recognized. These meetings will be held each Sunday at 3 o'clock."

Charles H. House, of the National Home, Wis., writes: "I find an article in your journal concerning a haunted chapel. I was living with the priests there when I was 18 years of age. There were three there at that time; one was a Frenchman and the other two were Germans. One, the head priest of that institution, was called Father Andrew. The rappings must have come from that French priest, who died suddenly,"

Mrs. L. Slocum speaks well of the meeting held by Dr. Freedman at Room 309 Masonic Temple. Mrs. Bryan, of California, was present and spoke beautifully. Dr. Freedman, the Australian healer, followed with instructive remarks. Mrs. Freedman gave examples of her excellent clairvoyant gifts, and everything went off pleasantly.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall over 100 gathered in the afternoon to hear Mrs. Dr. See teach in a short lecture, the philosophy of life. Great num bers are becoming interested in this higher thought that is sure to lift one up out of disease, sorrow and poverty into a finer vibration of love to all humanity. The Doctor and many others are coming up out of their graves to demonstrate the resurrection life in this new kingdom, here and now. Every psychic in the city should hear these fine lessons for they build a sure foun dation for future growth."

T. W. Sherk writes: "On Tuesday evening, Oct. 20, members of the Church of Spirit Communion and friends, about seventy-five in number, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Coates to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of their wedding. So spontaneously happy and congenial was the spirit of the whole occasion as to make it one long to be remembered by all present. The excellence of the decorations, the refreshments, the music, songs, recita-tions and dancing, the frank, kind, good will of the host and hostess and the fraternal spirit of their guests all combined to make the evening most enjoyable. The sentiments of those present were well expressed by the numerous and costly presents of china and some glass ware. Mr. Coates has of late added many relics and decorations to the collection in his home and now an elegant piano has been installed, all combining to make an ideal home for his work. Much of the gladness of the occasion was due to the prosperous condition of his work, and congratulations over the success of the past were not more hearty than the confidence and hope in the future. In the absence of Dr. Hewitt, Mr. Arnold will lecture again next Sunday evening, Nov. 1. His fine address was listened to last week by a large and appreciative audience.

G. Wm. Scheth writes, expressing his great admiration of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's article in the Symposium. He thinks people should exercise more judgment in seeking development. He "When they start out with their development they just sit down and throw themselves wide open and invite anything and everything that comes along to come right in and take possession and use them just as they please. Well, the consequence is that the passers-by do take them at their word, and come in and give them what they don't want; then it is awful, horrible. I have seen several just such cases in the last fifteen years."

Mrs. Emily D. King writes from Quincy, Mich.: "Mr. and Mrs. Sprague were with us Sept. 15 and 16 and organized a society. Mr. Sprague has set a good many to thinking. Mrs. Sprague's tests were good. Long may they live to build up this grand truth."

H. Voorhees writes from Michigan: "Spiritualists could do much good by radically writing up advanced ideas for their local papers. Mediumship was the making of myself and wife in forming good habits while young. We have raised seven children without a doctor; never took a dose of medicine."

G. S. a hypnotic state, from which he has been aroused only at short intervals by word of command, a patient in St. Joseph's hospital is puzzling the medical staff. He is unaffected by the use of electricity, needles stuck deep into his flesh or by nauseating doses administered to restore him to a normal condition. The man is registered as Dlomnecio Baker, 34 years old, of Spanish descent, and a native of Cuba. He was taken to the hospital Saturday from the house of a friend at 914 North Twelfth street, where he lay sleeping. Baker is a student of hypnotism and Spiritualism. Books which teach such "isms" were found in his room by the physician. "Mystic Oracles" was the title of one of the books. His friends believe that Baker was either hypnotized by an associate or that his condition was produced by reading and working on a theory by which he hoped to find a fortune secretly deposited somewhere by an ancestor during one of the wars of Spain. While he was lying in his hypnotic state a letter arrived at the Twelfth street house from the Bank of England. The seal was broken by Herbert King, a member of the family with whom Baker had engaged lodging. That letter explained that the Bank of England had no unclaimed money in the name of Stephen Frank Baker. That was the name of Baker's grandfather, who, he told King, had fled from Spain, deposited his wealth with a foreign bank and died before he could inform his relatives.

M. D. Freeley writes from Buffalo, N. Y .: "It has given me much pleasure during the last few weeks to attend the services at the Spiritualist Church on Allen street, Buffalo, where Dr. Matthews is pastor, and the eloquent, scholarly discourses that were delivered each Sunday evening through him by his guides, cannot help but deeply impress all his hearers with the truths of Spiritualism, and really the tests given by him after the addresses were wonderful and convincing to all present During all my travels I have never been in such a nice, impressive little Spiritualist church—so clean, plenty of fresh flowers and a beautiful painting of the Christ. I cannot but think if more of our churches were like it, instead of being cold, bare halls, so barnlike as a rule, how much it would help the great work of Spiritualism and draw the people together, so that they would regularly attend, as at ordinary churches. The congregations were large, of intelligent, well-dressed people, some of the most highly educated people of Buffalo were present. There is no doubt Dr. Matthews is doing a grand work." M. F. Hammond writes from Mishawaka, Ind.: "I received a call through the Rev. Louise Hallwright, a most worthy worker for our cause in this town, and who is now doing a good work for a society she has formed by her own exertions. I lectured for her society, Oct. 15 and 18, with such success that I was requested to prolong my stay and lecture again in a hall in the city of South Bend, on Sunday, October 25. This is a town of nearly 50,000 inhabitants, and there is no Spiritualist society here. Why? This question I have asked several people, and I find the same answer coming as from many other places. People 'can't agree.' I find it is like what the fellow said when he was asked why he left a good job. 'Be gob,' he said, 'there are thirty workmen and thirty-five bosses.' Thus it is in most places. It is a pity that Spiritualism has no hell. There is no creed to hold any one, consequently all go it alone, and when any one is willing to be a leader without any compensation, and assume all responsibility, even then many desire to dictate; then friction ensues, and he or she who is qualified to be the leader becomes discouraged at the constant criticism, and quietly steps down and out, and soon the whole fabric dematerializes. Why can not the Spiritualists as a body be willing to agree to disagree in so far as the basic truths are concerned, and work for the spread of the philosophy, even if they can not all be the figure-heads? But I find the conditions prevailing at South Bend to be the identical conditions in many other places. All public workers in the Spiritualistic field will testify to this same condition. I think It would be a good question for the N. S. A. to take up and instruct its missionaries and see if something can not be done so that their work may amount to some thing. I know of many societies that they have organized, and many more that I have stafted in different parts of

MISSIONARIES' REPORT

For the Year Ending September 30, 1903.

To the National Spiritualists Association, in Convention Assembled-Mr. President and Delegates: As missionaries and organizers employed by your board of trustees, to serve you during the past fiscal year, we beg to make our report, as follows: We have given our entire time, without vacation, to the cause of Spiritualism in the general field of this association, endeavoring to strengthen auxil-

fary societies and to organize new ones. Our labors have been in nineteen states as follows: New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas and Michigan. This may seem like a large district for us to cover, but the exigences of our cause. and the desire of your auxiliaries made it almost imperative. With an appointment as missionaries at large, our duty was to visit as many states and localities as possible. We have not refused any call that we could possibly fill. Indeed, we have had more trouble to get nto places that would co-operate with the missionary work than to arrange our route to meet calls. But, many places have asked for our services in district we could not reach.

We have felt it to be our duty to go where local help could be obtained, and arrangements provided for us, rather than to go unheralded into localities and assume all risks and make personal arrangements. To do that, would mean loss of time, and the necessity for a missionary fund that would support the expense and risk.

The title of "Missionary" is misleading, as many persons suppose that we are not expected to receive financial help, but to give free service to socie-ties or localities. Whilst the N. S. A. board has desired that we shall help every locality all we can, irrespective of roceeds, yet we are expected to obtain all possible financial help for our National body. We have been agents and organizers, rather than mission aries. Yet we can say that we have not made ourselves a burden to any society informed as to the teachings of Spirit-ualism, for there are no less than three gladly helped the financial interests of several societies by benefits and a division of receipts.

We have organized a goodly number of local societies as auxiliaries of the N. S. A., and of several states associations Also organized and chartered one state association. Many localities have agreed to hold meetings and prepare the way for a society, as a result of our visit: and these will be heard from in the future. We think that each locality should be prepared for organization before it is forced upon them. We need perpetuity and not a desultory and untimely effort. To insure stability, the N. S. A. and the several state associations should co-operate to settle speakers and mediums in each possible locality, and to form circuits for speakers. and sustain them by some form of emsuch an able advocate of the cause as ployment or settlement. We need many more self-sacrificing toilers than the N. S. A. missionaries so far sent forth. By such plans of co-operation our cause will be cemented, and local societies flourish. The excrescences upon our cause that localities have imposed upon them, will die out, and our workers of repute hold the nublic attention. Our protection consists in employing and supporting responsible workers, as speakers and mediums. This is a very serious matter for your consideration. The first necessity is a generous propaganda fund, which the earnest humanitarians in our ranks will supply, if you will but make a proper effort to utilize it. Your misionaries do not care to suggest a plan, but only to propose careful consideration, and if possible, a direct co-operation with the separate state associations for circuit settlement of speakers and mediums. We would urge, also, that two more misionaries, or organizers, at large, shall be continued in the general

Local societies now organized, need the advice and encouragement of a N. S. A. agent, or official. They often lack information about methods of conducting their business affairs and the meetings. Without a local speaker, we have found it best to urge them to hold meetings for members only, and thus develop an associate interest before attempting public propaganda.

And the local society should be urged to pay more attention to music and song. We are often met with no provision whatever for musical exercises. Mrs. Kates has furnished the singing very frequently, and thus has had an additional burden upon her.

She has made a feature of Brother Longleys's songs, and won much applause from the quality of these excellent contributions of our esteemed musical associate. These songs are worthy of a place in each society.

The children's lyceum, though sadly neglected, is receiving more attention than previously. We have found much to encourage us in the prospect for lyceum effort. Every locality can easily conduct a lyceum for the children. Experience is not necessary. A summary of our labors is as follows: We have held 280 meetings from which we derived financial results, and 32 meetings without such proceeds. A total of 312 meetings-being an average of 26 meetings per month. We also meeting held in Brooklyn, as the N. S. A. fraternal delegates.

The total attendance at the 280 meetings was 26.756 persons.

This large number of people have heard the gospel of Spiritualism, as we could offier it, and many of them by the mediumship of Mrs. Kates received positive evidence of spirit communion. The blessed results cannot be computed. Such meetings are the hope and promise of our organization for growth, and of our literature and periodicals for patronage and circulation. We have aided many persons to select the purchase of literature, and constantly urged the people to subscribe for our spiritual papers. When we shall find such literature and papers in the home of each Spiritualist, there will be more hope for zeal in, and support for our cause at large.

It is the duty of every Spiritualist to

The deficit paid by the N. S. A. is $217.32. Personally, we can never pay the debt we owe for their hospitality; but we trust they will ever have spirit blessings, as they will ever have our spiritual help.

We may not visit them again as missionaries, for we hope that others will take up that work, feeling that we have given a sufficient number of years, and must have a rest period. But so long as we live on earth, our hearts and souls will be given to the cause of Spiritualism; and though we may no longer serve your National Association direct ly, we will continue our labors to assist its progress and for the spiritualization of the world and the development of Spiritualism as a philosophy, science and religion.

We give thanks to the N. S. A. board for generous co-operation, and to all Spiritualists for good will and loyal assistance.

Fraternally, G. W. KATES AND WIFE.

I well remember of reading an account in the papers at the time of Mr. Moody's revival in New York City, ac companied by Mr. Sankey. Several became insane, and the papers spoke of one young man in particular, a German who had just graduated from college with high honors, and his parents had great hope in him to make his mark in the world. He attended Mr. Moody's meetings every night for a week when he became hopelessly insane, and was sent to an asylum.

Was it God or Mr. Moody that caused this talented young man to lose his rea son? It was certainly one or the other if the latter, is it not a warning to keep away from such men and their meet-

How is it possible for a just God to have anything to do with such a sad state of affairs? Here was a young man of great promise, seeking the true way of life, willing to meet God and learn the right way of living in his earthly life, that he might the better enjoy the life beyond, smitten with insanity, bringing a great deal of trouble and misery upon himself and friends. It is somewhat hard to charge it to Mr. Moody, and yet a great deal harder to charge it to God, who, the ministers say, is "full of justice, love and mercy." Certainly there was no love or mercy shown here. Where was God, that he could not have thrown a psychological influence around this young man and saved him from such a fate, at such a time? This is only one case out of

It is a well known fact that most people can inhale ether without much if any injury to themselves, and it is also a fact that many spirits have been driven out of the form by ether being administered to them. I have known of such cases: one, in particular where a strong young man, in good health, was given ether, to have a bullet cut out of his leg, and his spirit left the form in ess than half an hour. It seems in such cases that the spirit cannot stay where the ether is. When one person psychologizes or hypnotizes another, it is the fine ethereal or magnetic fluid that passes from one to the other that enables the operator to get control of his subject.

The magnetism of many persons readily mixes, like milk and water, while the magnetism of others refuses to mix any more than oil and water: and on these fine ethereal principles, did not Mr. Moody throw a psychological influence over this young man-not enough to thoroughly control him, only partially, enough to dethrone his reason, producing the effect called insan-Will the clergy who claim to know all about God and his ways, explain

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE,

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lillan Whiting, author of "The World Beau-tiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Bar-rett Browning," Cloth, $1.00. Miss Whiting finds the title of hea new book in these lines from "Aurora

"If a man could feel Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day.

Herceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which bumanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same arguments. ful" continues the same argument pre-sented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the con-tiant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a and his reintions to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happi-ness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

Several men, high in the walks of science have broached and advocated this theory, which really shifts the explanation of the mysterious problem from this to other worlds. It is not where living beings originated, but how? To suppose that such germs, ad hering to cosmic dust or fragments falling from other planets, transfers the inquiry, and we ask, how did life come on e planets? A. There are many books, giving in-tructions how to cultivate the memory. Some of these "systems" are so cumber some that when the mind is filled with the system or method of remembering, there is no room for anything else. Per haps the good they do is by the awaken ing of the mind to give attention. This is the one great secret of memory. An deeply fixes itself on the attention is never forgotten, while passing scenes obliterate each other. Hence if the attention can be quickened, and made to take deep impression of an event, or anything coming to the mind by way of reading or conversation, the memory will preserve such impressions in pro portion to their strength. Association of ideas and classification may assist, but the best exercise of memory is committing passages, lists of names, and dates of events. Reading as usually practiced vitiates the memory. J. J. Zimmerman: Q. I have always opposed everything spiritual, and thought from a child up it was all the devil's work, but having been in a few circles, and seen things so wonderful, I sometimes firmly believe. But now so many writers and spirits in The Progressive Thinker give so many different opinions, some believing in the Bible and God, and others just the opposite some in reincarnation and others laugh at that doctrine, that I am on top of the fence, and wiggly fence at that, and sometimes think I'll fall off on one side and then I think I'll have to fall off on the other. How can I be assured?

The situation of this correspondent, which he so ingeniously expresses will be appreciated by most Spiritual When one is shaken loose from authority and has no standard except his own reason, it requires a long time to become assured. So fixed is the be-lief in the infallibility of spiritual beings, that when they disagree, or blunder in their communications, it becomes to such minds almost positive evidence that the source of such messages is not as claimed. The Progressive Thinker is a forum where individual expression is freely given, criticised and compared. If all its writers were suddenly translated into the next life, they would, as re-maining unchanged, write as they now do, until they met with experiences to change their views Hence these differences of opinion, if brought as proof that spirits do not exist, or that the communications are from the devil, would equally as effectually prove that these writers do not church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, one.

To become convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, facts should be observed and studied, until by their accumula tion, the reason is satisfied.

Ell Thorp: Q. Is it possible to realize the "co-operative commonwealth" If so will it benefit all classes alike—the rich, the middle classes and the poor A. This NOTIGE.—No attention will be given is the best government because it for anonymous letters. Full name and adherence developing the highest types. is the best government because it fos character, developing the highest types of men and women. Whenever govern ment stands in the way of this individual freedom, it is tyranny. The govern-ment of the United States is founded on this principle. It often departs from it, but whatever growth has been made has been along this line. Growth in the future must conform thereto. This ap parently is the cause of evolution and if it were possible for a co-operative commonwealth to embody it, there would be no doubt of its success. The plans, however, thus far presented appear to be opposed to this line of growth, and contemplate a change little short of revolution. The government, through its officers, is to take charge of the individual, for that is what this cooperation leads to. Were it established would affect all classes, bringing them to a common level in wealth, and as far as possible in aims, purposes and intelligence.

It may be inferred that there will come by the constant improvement of the government, something to answer of argument he has introduced, which the demand of social reforms. Prof. VI. F. Jamleson and His Explanations.

If there is any one thing more than another, in which I take a reculiar delight, in a scientific, religious and philosophical point of view, it is in explanations. While Brother Jamieson has not promised that he would furnish the readers of The Progressive Thinker his explanations of the phenomena I have given them, we are all very naturally looking for and expecting them, since he declares that: "I put my own explanation that the phenomena are wholly of human origin, against the Spiritualists' theory of spirit outside of earthly body." At this writing, October, 10, 1903, his explanation or explanations (for he gives us to understand that he has more than one), have not material

Just what the reason for their failure to appear, is, I am at a loss to deter-. For some reason or other, Bro Jamieson seems disposed to ignore me altogether in his later articles, and to devote his attention particularly to Bro. Lyman C. Howe. Bro. Jamieson says: "If Brother Howe and myself continue the good work, Spiritualists will become more critical and skeptical." There can be no question that Bro. Howe has given Bro. Jamieson quite a large amount of intellectual food in concentrated form, to digest which will require not a few efforts to assimilate, but inasmuch as I was the first one he tackled on the subject of "Intelligent Skepticism," and he has left his work unfinished, he should courteously do me the honor of closing up his gaps in our controversy, before he gives his entire attention to Bro. Howe. I may be peculiarly and unnecessarily sensitive on this point, but after going to the trouble of relating a number of personal experiences in the phenomena of Spiritualism, which he claims he can explain upon other grounds than the supposi-tion that they are caused by the spirits of the dead, it is certainly due to readers of The Progressive Thinker and to myself, that his explanations should be forthcoming at his very earliest convenience. I am quite sure that Bro. Howe himself would be glad to see these explanations, before any special attention should be devoted to the line seems to attract if not to annoy Bro. Jamieson

Explanations are the order of the day Indeed, they are characteristic of our rising generations, or of young America, and are themselves the explanation why so many are drifting away from old beliefs. I am asked almost daily, by my own children, and people generally, for explanations; the why and wherefore of things. Occasionally, can furnish them, but more frequently, I cannot. I tell them frankly, when unable to satisfy them, that I, too, am a seeker with them for explanations. For instance. I would like to know how, in language from intelligences undoubtedly separate and distinct from those embodied and sitting in the circle, who present no physical evidence of being in possession of the organs necessary speech, larynx, vocal cords, etc. While I am unable to explain this, yet the fact that we do thus hear such articulate language, is there, and in no less a fact because I cannot explain it. We know that the reproduction of the human voice in speech and song is accomplished by the application of electricity to the wax cylinder. in the instrument known as the phonograph; but just how it is done, just what the modus operandi is, just why it invariably produces certain results when the "conditions are favorable," when the "conditions" are perfect, just what produces the voice of the original person who sang or talked over the sensitive, revolving wax cylinler, whether it is the electricity or the wax, or both, and, if either or both, why t should so be, I, at least, cannot explain. My inability to explain the pho-nograph does no tdo away with the phonograph; it is there as a fact just the

I cannot tell why sugar is sweet, or vinegar is sour, or how or why the grass grows, but I can tell that they are all

I cannot explain the phenomena of Spiritualism, other than by giving their usual Spiritualistic explanation, which, I not only believe, but feel that I know, is correct as far as it goes, i. e., that disembodied spirits can and do, when the conditions are proper, get into communication with embodied spirits; but just how they do it. I cannot explain. I am absolutely ignorant of the how, the why, the modus operandi, the law, the philosophy of the phenomena of Spiritualism; but that those phenomena do occur. I know to be a fact and a fact that is now acknowledged by scientific writers who are not Spiritualists, such as Prof. Thomson J. Hudson, who, in his book, "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," wrote as follows:

"I will not waste time, however, by attempting to prove by experiments of my own or of others, that such phenomena do occur. It is too late for that. The facts are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time. The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him. Think of the foregoing as coming from He frankly admits the fact of the phe nomena, but seeks to explain them on his dual theory of subjective and ob-jective mind. But his theory does not explain my experiences nor those of Spiritualists generally, in the phenomena of Spiritualism. While Mr. Hudson has failed among Spiritualists in establishing his explanation of their phenomena, he has succeeded admirably in aiding them to establish the fact of their occurrence, for which we should all be very grateful to Mr. Hudson. Brother Jamieson is also entitled to a fair share of our gratitude, because, like Hudson, he, too, acknowledges the fact that there are genuine phenomena known as Spiritualistic. But while Bro. Jamieson accepts this fact, he acts, talks and writes as one who repudiates it. Unlike Hudson, Jamieson spends his time in persistently endeavoring to keep in the foreground the humbug and fraud of Spiritualism, thus more or less effectively hiding its true and genuine phenomena. As an infallible skeptle, writing and debating in the interest of skepticism and materialism, he is ever losing sight of the fact that he acknowledges there are the genuine phe nomena of Spiritualism. These claims to be able to explain on other grounds than the Spiritualistic, but his explanations fail to put in an appearance. We do not see them, He ought to know, as every reader of The Progressive Thinker does know, that the controversy between Bro. Jamleson and the investigator tel detect and prevent imposition, and we hoth agree that not withstanding the fraudulant, there is the genuine. The later now constitute the gist, the essence, the doint in our controversy. How are thos explained? I maintain that they are explained only by the Spiritualistic hypothesis. He

Let me close this contribution by relating one or more experiences for Bro. Jamieson's explanation.nel will introduce them by the statement that I consider J. Frank Baxter one of the most conscientious, honest, clean, upright, intellectual, moral and convincing mediums and lecturers on the Spiritualistic platform I believe he would not only spiritually, but corporally or naturally spurn to do a dishonorable act. We had him for the Fort Wayne Society for a period of three months and his engagement was a most brilliant success. The only objection I personally have to him s that he is so far ahead, above and in advance of the average Spiritualist. His messages are sometimes tardy in coming to him, and he is obliged frequently to continue his lecture beyond he ordinary period for discourse, while waiting for the neculiar influence to reach him.. In the meantime his audiences are apt to grow restless, even un-der the spell of his matchless oratory which alone constitutes the feast intel lectual. But the great majority of his auditors assemble more especially for the tests and messages he gives, and thus the great truths embodied in his lectures proper are slighted.

I have said that Mr. Baxter's tests are sometimes tardy in coming; but it is likewise true that when they do come, they count. I never heard him give a poor, unsatisfactory message, Indeed he has often refused to give messages at all which he only partially or incomoletely received, unsatisfactory to himself, when the parties for whom they were intended might have filled up the gaps themselves in such a manner as to have rendered the whole more convinc-Ing and satisfactory to them than would have been the case, had he received them complete or in a manner that would have made them appear "cut and On one occasion Mr. Baxter, while giving messages at the close of a lecture, felt quite certain that one he was wrestling with was intended for me. and yet he was considerably confused ov the spirit intelligence calling me Hi," while he (Mr. Baxter) was under he impression that my name was Henry. But, true to his messages as he eccived them, he addressed me as 'Hi." gave me a most interesting message, and then themame of Robt. D. C. Huestis. Now, Robt. D. C. Huestis was one of my warm boyhood friends, and died as far back as the year 1863, and was the only one of any of my friends or acquaintances to my knowledge, who called me "Hi." Mr. Haxter gave his name in full: Robert Dibble Comstock Huestis. We used to track a good many jokes on "Bob" ats his chums called him, for having so many names. Bob and I were good friends notwith-standing the fact that we were both paying considerable attention to the same young lady, I was requested to act as one of the pall bearers at his funeral in Fort Wayne, in the summer of 1863, but could not serve in that canacity on account of an attack of acute rheumatism... While my name is Hiram and the abbreviation "Hi" is the most natural and correct, yetid was invaria-bly called "Harry huntili got to be a physician when I was balled "Doctor," or by mydnitials fifth. Vilatillo the super-ficial reader this experience may not: appeal as being anything much to prize, but to me it is worth everything. I have been as much convinced by what might be called little experiences, as I have been by the most pronounced phe-

I will relate another and then close

I will relate another and then close years ago, at the close of a lecture de-livered by his wife, and after the audience was dismissed, Mr. Folsom came toward me while I was putting on my overcoat and inquired: "Doctor, would you recognize the spirit of a lady who would come to you a whistling?" laughingly replied, "No, I certainly cannot recognize any lady who would come to me whislting.

"Wait a minute," said Mr. Folsom, "I am now getting a name with this peculiar impression; I get the name of Thomasetta Hanna Skinner." "All right," I said, "I recognize it instantly. Miss Thomasetta Hanna was one of my young lady friends in Fort Wayne. She was one of those cheerful, rollick ing, romping, playful girls, whom a long-faced Methodist would undoubtedly have dubbed a "tomboy." She would stop and play marbles with the boys on the street or sidewalk, and was a noted whistler, whistling the most • difficult airs. She married Benjamin Skinner at that time local editor of the Fort Wayne Gazette, whose father, Rev. Dr. Skinner, was pastor of the First Pres byterian church in Fort Wayne. They finally moved to New York where she died over twenty years ago, and her remains were brought to this city for interment. She died and was buried when Mr. Folsom, who gave me this peculiar message, could not have been more than four or six years of age. But. gentle readers, pardon me I did not intend to take up so much of your time. I may say, in closing, that I still await Bro. Jamieson's explanations.

A DIFFERENCE

Between Astronomy and Spiritualism

My Spiritualist friends have tried to nake it appear that materializations of maintains that they can be otherwise spirits and astronomical facts are equally well established. One Spirit-ualist, Dr. Sweringen, said: "I have witnessed a genuine materialization," "the genuineness of which there is no possi ble room to doubt." Those who "wit nessed" "materializations" could no more be mistaken than those who "witnessed" meteors. Dr. Sweringen ar gued that there was no possible room to doubt the meteoric shower and no possible room to doubt materializations of spirits. But Brother Howe comes forward and says about the meteor part: "This statement requires proof,"

As my opponents could not, or did not, answer my question and show what connection there is between an astronomical fact and spirit materialization, I proceeded to show that the dark, or semi-dark, seance affords tricksters an opportunity to impose upon credulous customers. Brother Howe himself says "it is often easier to cheat and give the appearances of genuine phenomena than to get the genuine." I believe him. But this is not what Dr. Sweringen set out to prove, is it? The Doctor took the position that spirit materialization is as much a demonstrated fact as meteoric showers. Brother Howe says: "I be-lieve the meteor story, but I do not know it is true." He says he has a thousand-fold more evidence of "materialization than of that meteoric shower -notwithstanding, he says, "it is often easier for the medium to cheat than to get the genuine." Here are his own "I have a thousand-fold more evi dence of certain psychic facts—even materialization—than I have of that ong-accepted story of the meteors."

Astronomical facts, according to Howe, are heavily discounted—their light is feeble compared with the illumination of a dark circle! He admits people have been deceived, of course, many ways, by cunningly-devised tricks." Church members, I have observed, when attending spiritual (!) circles are more easily deceived than Spiritualists because they are unfamilar with those "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain."

Says Brother Howe: "But it is possile, yes, easy, with a reliable medium, to put the question of fraud entirely out

f the problem." That is the medium long looked for; medium that is a medium. Glorious ealization! a medium who will submit, as Howe tells us should be the case, to 'critical exactions," and he adds, conditions as absolutely fraud proof. (this is Howe's own language) and he says, "without the possibility of decep-

For fear the medium may, after all, mpose upon us, my dear spiritual Brother Howe requires what Robert Dale Owen, he says, did not demand:

Impose all the restrictions. Where, oh, where, can that kind of a medium be found? Why, in the name of truth and humanity, have not the Spiritualists been doing this work? Brother Howe says it is "easy" to do it. They have had more than fifty years of trying to do what is so easy. If I can find that "reliable medium" (we have a surfeit of the other kind) with whom we can "nut the question of fraud entirely out of the problem"-"entire ly," mark you—it will simplify the question: it is so easy! Yet Spiritual ists say it is undenlable that a "reliable medium" and a counterfeit medium are so near alike that it is almost impossible to detect the difference. Indeed, many reliable mediums, having been rigidly tested for years, were discovered, often by critical Spiritualists who love truth more than mediums, to be tricksters. Some of the leaders of Spiritualism have admitted that even the best mediums will trick sometimes. Mr Hidson Tuttle. Editor-at-Large of the National Spiritualists Association, complains that lecturers on Spiritualism, "supported by Spiritualists, use 'medium' as a term of reproach."

This is the condition of things fifty years after Spiritualism came into the world, "to prove beyond the possibility of a doubt" that mankind live beyond the grave. It is an important problem, a grand announcement, but a meagre performance. In a discussion with one of the ablest Spiritualist debaters, he said to me that "if every medium were a fraud" he would still cling to Spiritualism! But Mr. Tuttle, more philosophical says "that it appears as self-evident that Spiritualism rests on the phe nomena, and these can be investigated by and through mediumship.' ther declares that the origin of "Spiritualism with its sublime philosophy was in mediumship. Without the facts furnished thereby, that philosophy would be a dream.

It will be admitted, therefore, that if it should turn out that no spirit ever communicated (these are doubtless the 'facts" referred to) then Spiritualism is a dream. Brother Howe innocently asks me what astronomers testify of meteors!

"Are they real stars?" Well, well.

He says: "Prof. Jamieson is especial ly exacting that knowledge must stitute faith." This is what Spiritual ists have been preaching for half They have repeatedly told their Christian neighbors that mere be lief in future existence is not enough; that what the race needs is absolute knowledge that human beings live after death-and that Spiritualism came into the world to supply this thirst for knowledge. Friend Howe says, "If possible to have it so, that would be very satisfactory. But is it so in anything?" Why, Spiritualists have been saying for years, "Yes, it is so in Spiritualism." He seems to have forgotten that he, in the early part of this discussion, insisted that Spiritualism is reduced to "scientific certainty." This is their strongest claim. We are bringing out abandon their old positive position: "It is a demonstrated fact that spirits communicate with the people of this earth, for Brother Howe now asks, "Is it so in anything?"

He tells us those clippings from Katie King's hair "compared with those taken from her head at previous se ances, were identical under the microscope." Is that "scientific certainty?" Blessed curls! What a thriving business the Katie King spirits could drive "Discovery of a Bost Tfail." By Chas, for the benefit of "reliable mediums B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual and demure hair-dressers. Several years ago there was a brish rade in parafflue molds of spirit hands. They have been, with the "rope tying tests," driven out of the spiritual market-place by the merciless lash of fraud proof conditions, leaving gentle Anna object to is the assumption that any of the control as knowledge. "We have knowledge of future existence! has been the happy song of the Spirit-ualist for fifty years. Brother Howe himself admitted that "present-day experiences," "scientific certainty" have the advantage. What then does he mean by asking if there is knowledge in anything? Mr. Allen Noe, an earnest Spiritualist, said "We do not accept the testimony of anyone. We accept the facts as demonstrated to us through our senses." The mass of Spiritualists have been saying the same thing all these years.

Brother Howe asks: "Has he carefully examined their trustworthy characters as witnesses? Has he questioned and cross-questioned them | witnesses of meteors] as we do many who report spiritual facts?"

Yes, many of them. But I never found a single instance where the purported spirit could bear those tests of direct questioning and cross-examination. I have applied this method to scores of the best mediums in the United States. They all fail in such an ordeal. Again and again I have been told by "reliable mediums," so considered by Spiritualists, "We can only give you what we get"; or, "Conditions prevent answers to categorical questions.' I have interviewed J. V. Mansfield, Henry Slade, Charles Foster, Mary M. Hardy, Mrs. Thayer, Mrs. Blair, Mrs. Holmes, Harvey Mott, and more than one hundred other mediums. They all fail. I am not blaming them. They do the best they can, I suppose. How can they give knowledge which they do not possess?

A HALFWAY HOUSE.

It is Needed for Ecclesiastical Spiritto the Subscribers ualists.

> There seems to be two very distinct classes among Spiritualists, and the distinction seems to be receiving great at tention and becoming more pronounced with each moment that is occupied in attending to them. Appearances rather indicate that for both classes to try to occupy one fold will lead to very great activities, to state the case mildly.

The diagnosis given in The Progress ive Thinker of Sept. 26, by Rev. Daniel W. Hull is only one symptom of the grave condition of the clerical class That ewest effusion, breathing forth such a spirit of brotherly love and tolerance, shows that someone has arrived at the febrile stage of their malady which is characterized by flighti But, Daniel, we ain't mad. We like to have you call yourselves by your proper ecclesiastical titles. Say and think and act church as much as you please, and it will not drive us mad. Take up all the practices of the Catho lic church during the dark ages that best express your present stage of mental and spiritual growth and we shall still smile serenely-only we would suggest that they don't exactly seem to blend smoothly with the words Modern Spiritualism; and when you try to tack them together in one piece, it has rather a queer effect on the nerves, something like a crazy quilt. When we see you ordaining a young woman who never even graduated in a Morris Pratt Institute-see you laying priestly hands on her, transforming her into a gospel duck full fledged, with power to christen any amount of babies, to s-o-l-e-mn-i-z-e marriages and to perform all ecclesiastical antics whatever, why, we have to rub our eyes and wonder whether the world has moved forward, or if it has run off the track and we are all being whirled back to old chaos.

You want us to swallow the church and all ecclesiastical belongings, because in some old forgotten age of the world, those words did not mean what they do now. Yes! some of our least blood-thirsty anarchists are trying to palm off that same kind of logic on the world, but somehow, murder to-day means killing, and though we unfortu-nately have to use the word anarchist, we are not anxious to perpetuate the species. The world is rapidly emerging from the darkness where priestly rule was possible: the shackles are broken; the chick is hatched and no amount of pen or tongue lashing, of anpacity he may be called upon to act, athema or maranatha can frighten it WILL HOLD A DISCUSSION in the back into the old shell again, and your Reverence will find it equally impossible to ridicule the Freethinkers among Spiritualists out of court, or in any way to coerce them into swallowing your quack ecclesiastical nostrums. So, if you really want a nice quiet, orthodox churchianity, with all its reverend appurtenances, you had better put up your ecclesisatical fences good and high and get a strong, thick door to your sheep cote, and keep out these overgrown, unruly members of the flock who refuse to be hobbled or tied to your make-believe churches, and who have lost all fear of God, man or the devil; for I am afraid you never can break them in so they, like good sheep, will meekly follow the bellwethers and bleat in chorus with the Hull flock.

Most truly your friend, MRS. H. A. STOCKEY. Seattle, Washington.

Eternity.

In The Progressive Thinker, No. 723, C. P. Mitchell replies to an article of mine, headed Eternity, as appeared in No. 720.

Thanks to Brother Mitchell for his reply, but he seems to have overlooked the vital point I am so anxious to have answered. I am not troubled at all about Eternity. It is simply time, that never had a beginning and can never ave an ending. I know it is here and everywhere, now, and always has been. and always will be. That is easy.

But, oh, my! can Brother Mitchell, or any other brother, either on earth, or from any other sphere, convince me that man, as an individualized being is coexistent with eternity?

If I had a beginning, then I am sure I am not immortal. That I will go to pieces somewhere down the ages. And the pieces will be so small you cannot find me. I will simply become a part of the great ocean of elements, an ocean that has no bottom, no shore, no surface.

I fully believe that, in the sense of annihilation, nothing is ever lost. But does not the change destroy man's individuality? JOHN T. DOW. Duluth, Minn.

It is with regret that we are called upon to announce the passing to the higher life of Mrs. Moore, wife of our esteemed co-worker, Harry J. Moore. Mrs. Moore passed away at Colorado Springs, Colo., where she had gone with the hope of recovering her former health. It seems as though all the best skill of medern science, including change of climate, failed to bring other than temporary relief. Too much cannot be said in praise of Mrs. Gehring, mother of Mrs. Moore, for the constant care she gave her daughter, 'even accompanying Mrs. Moore to Colorado Springs. As a result of a request of Mrs. Moore, made before she passed away, her body was buried at Oakwoods cemetery. Mr. Moore wishes to thank all the friends for their verbal and written expressions of sympathy that he re-ceived during his wife's sickness and also those received since his wife has joined the angels and spirit loved ones. from whom she received many beautiful and comforting messages while she was in earth life. THE ALLEGED GOD'S LAWS.

In Which God Do Spiritualists Believe?

J. J. Morse, on his way from Australia to England, made a solourn in San Francisco and did some good work and speaking there, which is well able to do. However, one part of his philosophy did hot meet my approval. He spoke of what he call "higher Spiritualism" and "the higher aspects" of it; and he gets it so high, it is out of reach of ordinary mortals. He would divide our people into distinct classes and resolve Spiritualism into "phenomenal, philosophical and mystical." There are those who would be separate from the common herd and sail under distinctive names and doctrines, but we would rather have mity and fraternity of the whole body maintained, with liberty, equality, toler-ance for each and all. We had better stick to plain Spiritualism. If classified as proposed, how long would it be till other divisions and subdivisions would occur? If divided into parties according to differences in opinions sentiments, beliefs, we would make a greater number of sects than the old churches. The proposition should meet

Mr. Morse says: "The outcome of the movement, if it is to survive, must be a science that is spiritual, a morality that is rational, and a religion that finds Brother Morse may have and hold his god-idea and preach it as his opinion and belief, and we offer no objection to that; but when he affirms that Theism is a doctrine of Spiritualism, we meet it with square denial. There is no god in Spiritualism, yet there are innumer-able gods in the minds of many Spiritualists, which are ideal images, haps no two of them alike) acquired in childhood by false teaching. gods belong especially to people who hold them, and to no others.

'If there is a god in Spiritualism we want a definite understanding what kind of a god and which god it is; for there are many gods claiming supremacy, or rather many devotees and godbelievers claiming supremacy for their

Spiritualism has a pure religion of its own, and we want nothing to do with "religion that finds God in man." We have had too much of that sort of religion—the worst curse the world has

There are speakers and writers who persistently push their god-idea to the front without any proof of it, and make it appear that it is a doctrine and fact of Spiritualism, and try to carry this point hr declaration, assumption, vehement assertion. That mode of argument is

We may ask the question: Who and what is God? and a million people are ready and anxious to answer and tell what they know; and when we sum up the answers we find they don't know anything, but believe much delusive nonsense. Many answer by repeating the old dogmas of Theism. Some answer by giving their own ideas, and not two in a score are alike, showing conclusively that the deity is an ideal be-

Which god is it that enlightened Spiritualists of America believe in and talk so much about? It is not the one that Hindoos recognize—not the one that that Christians worship—it is not any of the old gods of fable.

Their first idea or conception of a god was old Jehovah of the Jews and Christians; but it is not that now; because they have learned something more: their minds have changed: their conceptions altered and improved so that the god of their childhood is completely transformed into another image, a different being. Can we find bette evidence that it is an ideal god. an image of the mind that changes as people's minds change? Can we find better proof that it is unreal, delusive and has no existence only as a vagary of the

When these people were taught in early life to believe in a god, they were also taught to believe in a devil, one as real to the imagination as the other How is it now? They hold firmly to the god-idea, but have let the devil drop out of sight, and repudiated him-they deny his existence and also the ex-istence of hell, his place of abode. This god and devil should go together in faith: for if they do not, it makes a bad break in theology. If the devil is unreal so is the god; and that is correct.

I want to propound a question or two to Spiritualists of long standing—say five years or more—to god-believers. Are your conceptions and belief in a god the same now as they were before you became a Spiritualist? Have you changed your faith and ideas of the character and attributes of your, god since becoming a Spiritualist?

Perhaps all will answer the first in the negative and the second in the affirmative.. Then does not this convince you that the god is an ideal being or fabrication changing with your mind?—changing as your thoughts, sentiments and understanding change? If this does not convince you, we do not

A writer in The Progressive Thinker writes: "We are finite—God is infinite, and the finite cannot comprehend the

And yet this finite writer makes statements pertaining to the infinite as though he comprehended it definitelygoes on to state what "we clearly per-ceive through his laws." If a thing is clearly perceived it ought to be comprehended. Some folks say God is unde finable and incomprehensible, then proceed to tell what they know about him and more too. They are not bright enough to discern their own contradiction and confusion; and they occasionally regale us with some interesting nonsense on that subject. "God's laws are immutable—are never mended suspended, set aside, ed or repealed."

Theists should prove the existence of about his laws. This they never have best morality in the world.—Sarah lione and cannot do. If no god exists, Grand.

into the tangled maze and labyrinths of Theism, we perceive that the alleged 'God's Laws" are the most mutable, uncertain, confused, variable things in exstence; and we are thoroughly convinced they are very much "amended, suspended, set aside, overruled, re-pealed." All this is good evidence that the alleged god is an imaginary being.

There is much truth affirmed of immutable laws, of laws of nature, science, philosophy, of cause and effect, but when men aver that these are "God's laws" the averment has no basic foundation in truth. Men do not agree on "God's laws," neither in text nor interpretation; and who shall determine who is right and who wrong? There are many chances to be wrong and none o be right, for every statement of the alleged "God's laws" is false; and people who claim to know so much succeed n demonstrating that they have no facts to sustain their assertions and assumptions.

A wise Theist says: "Religion is worship on the principles of a God who embraces in himself all differences and all opposites, and whom man discovers as he discovers himself."

That is a fair idea of a theistic religion and pantheistic god.' He inadvert-ently expresses a truth in that, for when we consider the confused and contradictory things affirmed, we perceive it does embrace all differences and all opposites." And the devotee who discovers himself measures his ideal god by the confused thoughts of his own mind. We have observed that men affirm about anything of a god, no matter how visionary or fanciful, so that the worst perversions of language may be found in the line of Theism

Such devotees may fancy they have discovered a wonderful delty, containing opposite principles and attributes. but they will some times discover that tney are trying to grasp impalpable emptiness.

The victims of insanity caused by the vagaries of Theism may be counted by the millions, and the insane from this source have at times outnumbered those of all other causes combined. It a religious doctrine may be, the more firmly do its deluded victims believe it and cling to it.

Men have asserted, assumed, affirmed until we have a mass of Theism made up of error, ignorance, superstition. If writers want their essays to be read generally, they should leave out the vagaries of Theism, for many sensible people will not waste time reading that kind of stuff. ind of stuff. A. H. NICHOLAS. THE SMALL THINGS OF LIFE LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN.

This Impressive Sketch from the Spirit Side of Life imparts an important lesson that all should heed. The small things of life compose the sum total of existence, and with them we must deal in our journey through life, and be judged by them in the realms above.

light Desired on an Important Subject

Your discourse Sunday evening was first-class. It was especially good in regard to gambling. That is a wide-spread evil.

There is one little point I wish to speak of in all kindliness. To an educated mind the errors of speech and composition are as jarring notes to the musical ear. In the same manner the implication of imperfection to the Creator by the use of such a term as "God became discouraged" is repellant' to those who believe the Infinite Ruler has no weaknesses. I have become sufficiently acquainted with you to feel assured that whenever you use such an expression (it is not the first time), it s a lapsus linguae, and without thought of its real significance.

Infinite Wisdom ne'er can err; Omnipotence fulfills all tasks; Mercy preme shall none debar; Love Divine cannot change to wrath.

A Christian lady to whom I was speaking some time ago feared that I was trying to destroy the faith of the righteous. This I have not the slightest wish to do; but desire to replace all faith that has reason as an enemy with an invincible faith, having such a strong and sure foundation that the forces of eason will become the sturdlest champlons of it. Yet where those who are ever striving to do right still cling strongly to erroneous religious beliefs, the pointing out of their weaknesses may not prove beneficial, but simply result in hurting the feelings. This seems unwise. With yourself, however, there is an apparent desire to know the truth, whatever it may be. I believe you fear no criticism that is honest and that is dictated by worthy motives. Therefore am inclined to be less afraid of speak ing plainly to you.

Do you believe that the story of the birth of Jesus is an object lesson of the mother is represented as a married woman; but all the emphasis is placed upon her virginity in order to prove that Jesus Christ was God Himself. Notwithstanding the knowledge I have gained of the power of spiritual beings, am unwilling to believe Jesus did not have an earthly father. Were it possible to verify such an occurrence, it would not be proof that the offspring was God Himself. This is not touched upon in a spirit of ridicule; it is considered with due regard to the sincere be lief of millions in its verity. Can you imagine the great body of Christians openly discarding this belief?

Except when studying the strength or weakness of individual character, the matter of origin has no bearing on the should be honored above all others if his life came the nearest to perfection. Though I never tried to find defects in his character, his cursing of the fig-tree because it was barren has made me wonder if that was not at least a fast, temporary weakness. Of course it could be said he meant that it was accursed in being in such a condition: or it could be said that his words were intended as a lesson to his disciples. The fact remains that he cursed the tree when he knew it had no power to be other than it was. Is there not in this a resemblance to the Christian plan of salvation, as it applies to many unfortunates, not withstanding the freewill argument? "They know not what

You have said there can be but one head of the church. May I suggest God Himself. Then you might have as many leaders as you choose, though by the very force of circumstances Jesus Christ would be the principal one. It would be difficult, however, for the average Christian to worship God alone and to cease worshiping Jesus Christ.

OBSESSION CONSIDERED.

The frequency of ignorant or vicious Obsessions in the Churches, as Illustrated by Mrs. McIntyre in an article last week, and also in the ranks of Spiritualism, renders the subject of paramount importance at the present time. H. S. Dailey speaks from his own experiences, giving interesting particulars. Those who are obsessed by unpleasant, ignorant or vicious controls, are requested to send full particulars to this office.

Memorial'Services at the Church of the Soul, Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

Our loved friend, co-worker and arisen brother, Dr. George Dutton, passed into spirit life just at the close of our services in the spring time. Your pastor was still here and the Doctor's wife desired that the funeral services should be from your speaker; but it was not convenient at that time to have any service. The remains were taken to Vermont, where the formal services were held.

As much of Dr. Dutton's work had been in this city, his wife desired that, some memorial service be held here. So we have decided to set aside a part of this morning for that memorial. Dr, Dutton was known to nearly all of you. Whenever it was possible, both Dr. Dutton and his wife attended our services, and sometimes our classes.

At the time of his passing away, Dr. Dutton was 73 years and 2 months old. He was born in the Green Mountain State. And like all New Englanders nurtured upon rocks and trees, and with ruggedness which comes from striving to earn one's daily bread and gain an education at the same time, he grew up in the midst of those surroundings, with the usual accompaniment of orthodox teaching. The rigorous cli mate and the hardness of obtaining a livelihood formed, perhaps, the excuse for that kind of a religion.

Nevertheless he found himself teach ing school in summer as a boy that he might carry forward his education in winter in colleges and universities. He finally graduated from Dartmouth Col lege in 1855. In those days the man who hoped to cope with human life thought it necessary to train himself in something more than football in order to obtain the required university or college education. Dr. Dutton then became a medical student and graduated in a medical colege.

A thorough anatomist and physiologist, and a very progressive student of therapeutics, he early discovered that the science of materia medica as taught in the schools is not a finality, and that if one understood physiology and the human organism well, one was at liberty, or ought to be at liberty, to avail himself of all the healing methods that nature and intelligence had discovered.

Therefore, Dr. Dutton early became a medical heretic. But not until his works upon physiology and anatomy were standard works in medical schools. L's also provided other works and charts for the common schools, and these were authority. But it is not the purpose of these remarks to tell of his literary work, although it was quite extensive, but to say:

As a man, Dr. Dutton had a progressive spirit and early entered into that which was in advance of the world socially, politically and spiritually. could not live, being what he was, in the time that he did, and not be an abolitionist, therefore, he was one. He could not live when that thought was coming into the world, and not be a Spiritualist, consequently he was one. He could not live in the time of the latter part of his life and not accept as many forms and phases of new thought as came into the world through others and through his own wonderfully susceptible organism. He was not only a student, but he was especially intuitive and much even of his technical work was assisted by this very active intui-

Mediumistic to a very great degree, he early became a teacher and advocate of spiritual truth. A lecturer of great conciseness and ability, he spoke a great deal in New England, and in the early days of Modern Spiritualism was one time secretary of the Vermont State Association of Spiritualists-he spoke in Boston, New York and many other Latterly a great deal of his work was in Chicago, in connection with the establishment of a liberal college of medi-

Recognizing all healing gifts and therapeutic agents not included in the curriculum of the usual medical colleges, he joined with Dr. Bland and others in seeking to wipe out the disgraceful laws from the statutes of the state that were continually enacted for fostering medical schools inimical to advanced thought. Dr. Dutton was, of course, among the foremost in this thought, and the foremost in seeking to establish these colleges. He complied with the full requirements of this state but, as we have often said, this is not a representative form of government, for you are under the control of the state board of health, and the liberal colleges are not recognized by the only power which can sit in judgment upon the lives of human beings in this state or city—the board of health.

We hope you understand this: That you are in bondage; that it is not a state law, it is not your suffrages, it is not anything you have done with your votes, that they, these boards, have been constructed; but you are under the absolute control of the board of health. We think you understand that you cannot have a doctor nor do without one without the authority of the board of health. It was this, in the later life of Dr. Dutton that he and his compeers vere endeavoring to remedy. It was this that caused the starting of the liberal colleges, some of which are in existence, bearing the charters of the states in a perfect legal manner, nevertheless, are not recognized by the boards of health. Clairvoyance, healing by the power of the spirit, hypnotism and various things that are not considered medically orthodox have been recognized. Clearly Dr. Dutton was a medical prophet.

Whatever we may think of his later efforts, he adapted most of the ethics of the spirit to therapeutics, he always understood the power of the spirit over the body. He never made the mistakes, as many scientific minds do, of suppos ing the spirit is in the bones, muscles nerves and arteries and that when the body dies that is all. He clearly recognized that the body is the instrument for the spirit to use; he recognized that there were healing agencies within and without. Still he never accepted the extremes of Christian Science or Mind Cure. He accepted that which your teachers have always insisted uponthat the spirit is greater than the body; that many human ailments can be con quered and overcome from within and

He understood also much of these higher teachings. To him Spiritualism '(and spirituality) was the law of life; to him the body and spirit were subordinated to the highest perception of truth from within. His life clearly illustrated that, as he passed on from year to year, from decade to decade. He claimed no exemption from the fulfillment of what he believed to be his highest duty. With the profoundest conviction of truth, he looked forward, as all well thinking and human people do, to greator fraternity and brotherhood among nations. He hoped for greater fraternity among those who claimed to be helping people in the practice of medicine. He found great respect from them as long as he did not depart from the little, old-fashioned lines. As soon as he did, he found great opposition from them. But he never shrunk nor complained; he simply went forward to do his duty.

When you last saw him in this city, and your pastor last saw him, he was hoping to bring out a book, the "Cos 'in which he hoped to include the sum total of the physical, spiritual and soul knowledge that had come to him during the three score and thirteen years he had lived.

It was a wonderful thing to have lived in all that part of the nineteenth century and the dawning of the twentieth century. It is a wonderful thing to have kept pace with the times and to have not fallen back, not to have be come fossilized; to not have had an other course, but to have gone steadily forward fearlessly. He believed in faithfulness and fidelity to all highest feaching; he understood that there may be different view-points concerning truth. But he accepted the good intentions of all. He was willing to listen and appreciate; and no doubt if he did not seem to follow "The Soul Teachings" it was because he knew that he was aspiring and aiming to find the truth. Though he-never believed he had found the finality, but he was on the way to find it. He thought he understood many methods of how to maintain the spirit and body in perfect bal-

He was associated with many societies that were humane, wise, broad and just. He never pursued wealth, for he never made the mistake of supposing the body could regulate the soul: he did not make the mistake of thinking the body must govern the mind or spirit. He accepted the spiritual nature as the dominating nature; he accepted the thought that the body must be governed by the soul: and he accepted the thought that if the balance can be maintained there will be no encroachment of disease; there will be no suffering; there will be no inharmony. His religion was the application of this knowledge to life, physically, spiritually and socially.

He believed and understood that the dominating power of spirit intelligences have ever aided men in bearing forward the light of the world. He was ready to accept advance thought from whatever source it might come and in whatfrom a divine source that shines upon the world; though mostly it shines feebly here, there is a great central light. Many times we have worked in unison; many times we have seen him in private and in public. We have known him to always be gentle, courageous, kind and just in this life.

He leaves behind in the household his son and his wife (second wife). There is the consciousness, that although leaving nothing of this world's goods, he left a record that, in and of itself, even if there had been no other life contemporaneous with it, would have marked a period of progress that the world is passing through and has been passing through for the last 75 years.

Then let us think of him freed from the disabilities of advancing years, advancing feebleness, and Teeling alive. active and alert, and joining with us tolay, and happy to join with us spiritualin our work. But in the larger unity of the spirit keeping pace with his arisen compeers in that greater and added life, where opportunity is not folded around thoughts, and the envir onment does not shadow, and the presence of a ministering spirit is not looked upon with suspicion and doubt. Where illumined people can stand upon heights and see from afar that which is coming to the human race, and declare t without fear of the fagot and torch, or the prison and execution. Where un der the light of the sun of Truth he has found he might clasp hands with those who have brought to bear upon the world for the last half century the be printed and sent to those who need noblest sentiments and highest incentive to lofty endeavor that the human race has ever received.

PRAYER TO THE MASTERS OF LIFE

O Masters pure and high and grand To you, this night, I pray, Give me the genius I demand, Yours is the light and way!

O Masters mine, from every state, From every world and land, Endow me with love-power great, Give me a mission grand!

Give me thoughts of power! Give me words of flame! Let Love's mystic shower Breathe on my life His Name! O genil of the love-light! O Master of the world-thought!

Plant in me a might That shall not be gold-bought! O Masters great of every land! O Lords of every state!

Give me the power I demand To make Love conquer Hate! Give me strong words of fire, And thoughts that sear and burn. That men of vice shall tire, And to the good may turn!

Give me the gift or art-Love's sacred genius-passion-Play on the human heart In a Savior's divine fashion! To play upon the strings of life. To touch each grand emotion,

To feel the burst of storm and strife In War's cyclonic ocean! Souls of the great departed! Souls of the mighty past!

Come to me, noble-hearted, Come ye to me at last! Souls of the vet unborn! Souls of the shadow-light! Come to me in the morn Or in the dread midnight

Souls of the yet unborn! Souls of the men to be-Thoughts of the coming storm From Life's eternal sea! Souls of the yet untried! Souls of the yet unknown!

With thoughts held high in pride-Thoughts that die with a moan! O Masters great from every clime! O Mystics full and free! O Sages from the Land of Time, Give, oh, give unto me Beauty's flower in its bloom Passion's seed within its prime: Construction making place and room For Eternity in Time! JOHN A MORRIS.

Facts and Opinions Concerning the N. 8. A. Convention.

Well, the child is born and named the eleventh session of the annual N. S A. convention has met done its work and adjourned to meet in St. Louis, in 1904. What the results may be cannot be definitely forctold. The personnel of the convention was quite equal in intelligence, enthusiasm and earnestness, if not in wealth, to any of its predeces-

The consensus of opinion among those there assembled was that everywhere Spiritualism is gaining ground This is true of the higher types of Spiritualism. While the Spiritualistic phenomena are in great part true, the Latin phrase, "Cul bono?" is more frequently than ever before applied to it. The time has come when Spiritualism should be made to reach the more intelligent por ions of the world.

The great effort in the future is not to be directed so definitely in the direc tion of reaching the senses of the world, as to try to set it to thinking. Spirit ualism as a great philosophical and religious movement has as yet scarcely begun its work. The movement for deeper and more integral education among our workers is also gaining ground. The world is nearly as tired of meaningless Spiritualistic platitudes as it is of frauds and fakes in its sacred

Also an effort is to be made in the fu ture to make Spiritualism a great moral or ethical movement. The day has passed when persons without standing education or character can ordain them selves and set themselves up and be re celved as Spiritualistic leaders.

Perhaps Spiritualists are some like clock pendulums, only in the centre while swinging from one extreme to another. This was partially illustrated at the very first session of the convention The first committee to report was one appointed last year by Vice-president Locke, to prepare a kind of guide or schedule of usages. This committee was composed of three of our most able workers, namely, Rev. Fred A. Wiggin, George A. Fuller, M. D., and President H. D. Barrett.

It could hardly be expected that a re port made by these three men, however ntelligent and honorable they might be, could be received without objection. They all reside in the same state, in close proximity to each other. were Spiritualists equally intelligent and honest in at least fifteen or twenty other states; some of them did not quite feel like being entirely ignored, especially when such important matters are to be settled. When this committee, which it was supposed would bring in a report of from five to ten thousand words brought in a report of over seventy thousand words, and, so far as known, not one Spiritualist in the world was asked even for an opinion on the natter, some in the convention felt as some did toward Moses of old, "You take too much upon you." Here were delegates from Maine to California, and from the extreme north to the gulf of he south. When the effort was made to force this report on the convention, there was a kick of rather enormous proportions. A war was at once preciptated which for a time looked like a battle to the death of the association. After much discussion, which looked as if it might equal in vehemence and ength the noted Nicean council of the year 325, a committee was finally ap pointed, who brought in a proposition to dopt that portion of the report which pertained to usages, in christening, and in marriage and burial services. This was only adopted as a kind of formula for the guidance of those who need help n that direction. The committee fur ther recommended that the responsive readings and other parts of the report it for study during that societies and churches may know what to do with it next year. This was almost unanimously adopted and thus was order brought out of chaos, and the war-clouds disappeared. It is more easy to prophesy correctly s to how a thing will turn out after it is done, than it is before. Anybody can now see that it must have been so; but somehow from the time the delegates began to assemble, the prophecies be gan to grow more profuse that Harrison D. Barrett would settle the squabble among the aspirants for the office of president of the N. S. A., by "reluctantly" accepting the position himself; and so it was. It semed that a "star chamber" session of certain wire-workers and manipulaters was held and numerous names were attached to a petition pleading with Mr. Barrett to, in the interest of peace and harmony, accept the position once more. The candidate on whom the west depended, deserted his constituents and publicly read the petition of the "star chamber" actors to Mr. Barrett. Of course the unexpected dramatic episode took like wild fire, as was anticipated; and as had been predicted, Mr. Barrett "reluctantly" accepted the position. The leader of this work and reader of this petition was rewarded by being made vice-president. Some of us, who under other circumstances would have voted for Mr. Barrett and Mr. Warne, could not under these conditions do so. It seemed to us to be duty to vote against any such intriguing as brought the unexpected denouement. These gentlemen are now our president and vice-president, and it is the duty of all Spiritualists to hold up their hands, and in every way try to

Surely a more efficient president than Mr. Barrett never handled a gavel, and as to Mr. Warne's ability and integrity, it is above question. Now with the same secretary and treasurer we have had so many years, and with the good men and women we have on our board of trustees, it seems that nothing but success can attend the N. S. A. during the present year.

I have no means of knowing, but it is my opinion that the same missionaries who have so faithfully done their work in the past, will serve the association during the present year.

The lyceum work has greatly grown under the able management of that Texan "Boanerges," John W. Ring. It is well that the association voted financial aid in that direction.

When a certain renegade from the Morris Pratt School, who apparently went into it on purpose to kill it, began the circulation of reports concerning the school and its management, it was leared by a few that the reports, though they contained very few grains of truth, would damage the school. But the guns were too heavily loaded: they killed "the man who stood behind the guns." In front they were harmless. An hour was voluntarily granted us in which to present the work and the claims of the Morris Pratt Institute. All seemed to be friends of the school; many were enthusiastic in its endorse ment. Though no collection was taken for it, and no public effort made to raise money, money was subscribed and some of it paid in. A committee was appoint ed, on motion of Brother Warne, to go to Whitewater and investigate the man-Brother Warne moved that the N. S. A. assist the school by a donation of five hundred dollars out of its treasury. This passed without a dissenting vote, so far as I could hear. The convention is over; never did a convention do a better or more important work. It now remains for Spiritnalists everywhere to second that work by placing their shoulders to the wheel and assisting in giving Spiritualism an impulse forward.

Harrison D. Barrett has always been a remarkable man; in the convention it seemed that one of the greatest of all marvels was to see him stand up there, gavel in hand, day after day, from nine o'clock in the thorning, and with only one or two hours' recess, until ten or eleven o'clock ist night, without one complaint of being tired. Individually, I did not do one-fourth as much work as did Mr. Barrett, and when the convention was done I was completely worn out. 👙 1

Many thought that the committee of arrangements made a serious mistake in its program of entertalnments. Such old and venerable workers as Hudson Tuttle, "The Sage of Walnut Farm," and his talented wife, Emma Rood Tuttle, and such faithful war-horses as Lyman C. Howe, and some others who had "borne the burden and heat of the day," and who cannot stay here much longer should not have been entirely ignored. The people wanted to hear them, and did not; they did not want to hear many of these who were appointed to entertain the evening audiences. The result was the smallest evening audiences the National Association ever

If in the future we profit by such mistakes, the leason may have been cheap enough. MOSES HULL,

A CLEAN LIFE.

In Those Who Set Up as Mediums and Teachers.

I see in The Progressive Thinker of September 26, an article from Brother D. W. Hull that touches me in the right spot. I quite agree with the worthy brother who speaks of the word "Reverend" as he does. I have been a physiorend as no does. I have been a physician in regular practice for twelve years before giving it up for the spiritual work entirely, and was justly proud of the degree of M. D. to my name, and will say I tried always, as I believe all should to be a result to the title. I was should, to be a credit to the title. I was ordained a Spiritual minister August 11 last, and am as I believe justly proud of the word "Reverend." I shall always try to prove myself a worthy teacher. I believe we should all look for the better or higher of all things, if we expect to accomplish much good during our sojourn on the mortal plane during our sojourn on the mortal plane of physical life.

The article has the right ring when he says we ought to be patterns of virtue and morality. I desire to here cite an instance and its results. Some four years ago while a practicing physician in Grand Rapids, Mich., and after having gone through a severe course of development in which I seemed to have gone through a thousand hells of sufferwas pondering the matter in my mind as to whether it was of God or the devil, and Spiritualism the wrong or right teaching. I was made acquainted by a lad friend of the cause, with a medium then engaged by the Grand Rapids Spiftualist Society and working at the camp meeting there. Said medium has the name of being one of the leaders of the great cause of Spiritualism, an inspirational speaker and test medium of renown. While in conversation with him we came to the point of development, Naturally enough I asked if all mediums had to go through such a hard course as I had. He informed me "no," and said I was to blame that I did not get out more (well I will through courtesy refrain from using the is they cut me to the quick, spiritually speaking). And coming from one who had been lauded to me as a great spiritual medium, but sorry to say, whose breath gave forth in unmistakable fumes the presence of liquor as well as tobacco. Needless to say I was sorry I had met such a one; it gave me a tinge of regret that I had believed Spiritualism to be an uplifter of humanity, and it caused me misery, and I believe had it not been that I was a moral man myself, and as such firmly believed that morality should be upper most in anything so grand as the great truth of Spiritualism, I might have then and there set it down as a rank fraud morally, being represented to me by one whom I consider morally unfit to stand as a leader or teacher of anything so elevating to mankind as I have proven the philosophy of Spiritualism to be. Like Brother Hull, I too, stand for our public teachers being men and women of moral habits, and patterns of virtue and morality. I could not now be led higher by any one whose breath gave forth that detestable odor to me of filth, and whose advice sends me to those of low habits for help. Let our teachers be models of purity, showing conclusively they are led by the master minds of spirit life, not the low ones. While in Vancouver, B. C., lately, I met many who pointed the finger of scorn because some of the teachers had been caught doing low miserable things to further their own ends. They said to me, does Spiritualism teach people to drink and frequent low places? It looks to me as if we ought to be more careful in our daily walk, and as teachers let the world see we have the true light. I believe the N. S. A. should take the matter up and see that no one is given ordination papers that is not socially, morally and spiritually fitted for the grand work; then the "Reverend" to a name might mean something to be ooked to, and the public would have a safeguard against the frauds who infest the fields of Spiritualism. But I leave that to those old heads who are more capable than I to determine. Let us all, however, strive to raise the standard of the workers, then give them our undivided supposition of the property of the prope

SKEPTICISM

What Has Spiritualism Forced It to Acknowledge?

Let us take a partial inventory of the power of Spiritualism as exerted upon skepticism. What has Spiritualism wrought in the last fifty years? What has been its effect upon materialism?
It has forced Huxley to say:

"I I believed that I had any claim to the title of materialist, as that term is understood in the language of philosophy and not in that of abuse, I should not attempt to hide it by my gilding But to repeat what I have more than once taken pains to say in the most unadorned of plain language, I repudiate as philosophical error the doctrine of materialism It seems to me pretty plain that there is another thing in the universe, to-wit: Consciousness, which I cannot see to be matter or force; or any conceivable modification of either however intimately the manifestation of the phenomena of consciousness may be connected with the phenomen known as matter and force.

It has forced Spencer to say of Typ "Prof, Tyndall was much more conscious than physicists usually are that every physical inquiry, pursued to the end, brings us down to metaphysics and leaves us face to face with an insoluble problem." It has forced Spencer to say of him

"I have had to rebut the charge of materialism times too numerous to remember, and I have now given the matter up. It is impossible to give more emphatic denial or assign more conclusive proof that I have repeatedly done. .I. cannot prevent them. Practically they say, 'It is convenient to us to call you a materialist, and you shall be a materialist whether you like it or

It has forced Prof. Shaler, dean of the scientific faculty of Harvard, in his book upon "The Individual," to say: "A number of men, of no mean authority as naturalists, some of them well trained in experimental science have, after long and apparently careful inquiry, become convinced that there is evidence of the survival of some minds after."

. It has forced the Rev. S. D. McConnell, D. D., D. C. L., in his book on "The Evolution of Immortality," in comment ing upon the foregoing from Prof Shaler's book, to write as follows:

"But, at the same time, it must be confessed that there is a growing willingness to admit that 'there is something in it.' * * It is not easy to find educated men who will categorically deny the assertion that there are in stances wherein one human personality communicates with another without physical media of intercourse. * • Thus we may fairly conjecture that we may be on the verge of something like a demonstration that the individual conclousness does survive the death of the body by which it was nurtured." It has forced the late Prof. John Fiske to write as follows:

Precisely as in the most embryonic condition the prefigured wing of the bird or fin of the fish infallibly indicates the element necessary to its life, so the whole analogy of evolution bears us with irresistible momentum to the conclusion that the religious nature and cravings of mankind are correlated with " hirow measure an

In a moment of inspiration it has forced even an ingersoll to exclaim: "In the night of death, hope sees a star, and listening love hears the rustling of a wing."

It has forced a Crookes, a Wallace, a Flammarion, a Hodgson, a Hyslop, a James, a Coues, a Judson, a Whiting, a Wilcox, a Newton, an Austin, a Howe, a Hull, a Tuttle, a Barrett, a Francis, a Watson, indeed, a grand constellation of worthies throughout worship at its shripe. And last, but by no means least, even my skeptical and materialistic Brother Jamieson has been forced to acknowledge the fact that there are under the banner of Spiritualism, genuine, true phenomena, but he claims to be able to explain them as Prof. Thomson Jay Hudson endeavored to explain them. e., on other grounds than the supposi tion that they are caused by the spirits of the dead. Brother Jamieson's explanations have not yet appeared. The readers of The Progresive Thinker are patiently awaiting them in answer to a few experiences I have published there in, which certainly require them. He gives us to understand that he is well stocked with explanations, but, for some reason or other, he won't let any of them loose; he has probably not "got a string to each one of them"vet, to enable him to pull back as occasion may require. I have read Hudson's explanations which are very interesting and well written; they display great effort, study and research; they may, indeed, be called "scientific," "logical" and "philosophical." The only objection I have to them is that they do not explain my experiences. They are explanations, however, even if they do not explain. But I am very thankful to Prof. Hudson for his most emphatic declaration that "the man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day, is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant." The clear and very interesting account of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, with the inciting causes of that Lincoln, with the meritag causes of that tragedy, will serve to excite renewed interest in the great work-of Father Chiniquy, entitled "Fifty years in the Church of Rome." In this book he exposes in the minutest details the corruption that exists in that church, and its iniquitous methods and aims.

It is a book of absorbing interest, and should be read by every patriotic Amer-ican, and by every one who would be well informed concerning the cyll works and designs of the Romish hierarchy, It is a large volume of 832 pages, Price, $3.25.

Why this shrinking from responsibility, why this non-use of a reputable and well known publishing house? The claim is made that this book has been twenty years in process. There is no evidence of that being a fact, it is up-to-date and deals with the present times, almost all through. The mysterious witness who stalks in masked and cloaked inspires a smile; we do not take him seriously. It needs no shrewd guess that the author is either a theosophist, a dabbler, in socalled occultism, or one possessed of a highly sensational literary faculty who in cleverly exploiting the known dangers of hypnotism and mediumship has magnified them out of all proportion that his own "more excellent way," whatever that may be, shall be sought for in the third volume which is advertised in several places in the body of the text. But if only, for the curious point regarding the ultimate fate of souls subjected in this life to hypnotic control on earth the reader should purchase the book, for he will find a sin-gular recrudescence of an old idea that one thought had long since been discarded by intelligent thinkers. Millions can testify that not all controlling spirits are evil. Thousands of reputable families, in all parts of the world, know by experience that mediumship is not the deadly matter our author avers. The wrong, improper, or excessive use of any faculty or function, will prove disastrous to the individual, no matter what his or her profession or walk in life may be. Personally the writer's experiences give no countenance to the criticisms leveled at mediumship, and he ventures to say that the greatest psychological crime one can be guilty of is to make lectual grasp of the subject; for abundanonymous criticism with bias against, and intent to degrade, the experiences or studies of honest, pureminded and intelligent investigators in a field which the critic professes he has explored by methods peculiar to himself, but undis closed. I certainly feel that the author has done a great and good work by directing the attention of the public to the matters discussed, and I am confident that every parent will be all the better equipped for educating his children and guarding them against the snares and pitfalls which beset their path. by a careful study of The Great Psychological Crime. It is evident, too, to my mind that the author might have carried the subject into a much broader field than that covered by the domain of mediumship and hypnotism and have shown that the great majority of so called failures of life had their origin in that passive state of the will-that same passive state of the will power that renders one so susceptible of control from other intelligences. How often does the parent in his ambition to teach his children to be good, develop that very passive habit of the mind that causes them to go through life the willing tools of circumstances and the wills of stronger and more positive intellects. Twenty-five years' practice at the bar and several of these devoted officially to the prosecution of criminals, have convinced me that a malority of law-breakers become such through the lack of will power; that is through acquiring or inheriting that very habit of passivity that the author emphasises and deprecates so when exemplified in the hypnotic subject or wall! The time has hardly yet come to estimate the good and measure the exact influence wrought by Modern Spiritualism. It arose at a time when materialism was gathering its forces to undermine faith in God and the human soul. The creeds of Christendom receded, Knock-down arguments only were in evidence and the fight was on, and for at least a quarter of a century waxed Theology apologized, receded, and went to the wall under the "solar plex-us" blows of "Scientific Materialism," and the "Higher Criticism" is its flag of truce, its capitulation.

Admitting its crudeness, its apparent flaws and contradictions, "it held the fort," till scientific materialism gave its last gasp. Spiritualism wrenched the flag of immortality from socalled Science and theology, and bore it aloft till the spirit of the age came to the rescue. That neither science nor theology have acknowledged openly their defeat, or the service done by Spiritualism, does not in the least alter the facts. "New Thought," the New Psychology (see Prof. Henry James' "Gifford Lectures") has gone like a whirlwind and s held by millions of people to-day. But the Constructive era cas arrived.

A new science, a new theology; a new sychology is at hand. Even Spiritualism must ADJUST AND RECONSTRUCT. If it elects, it may pull back in the harness and meet the fate of the old materialism and the old theology.

At the end of an hour one-third of the assemblage arose and left the Madison Square garden, where the Chicago prophet was conducting the first great general assembly. Dr. Dowie forbade the people to go, and ordered Deacon Barnard and the Zion guard to stop them, but the departing throng swept the thin blue line > of Zion warriors before them as a flood sweeps billets of wod. Elijah III was first annoyed, then exasperated, by the behavior of his departing auditors. He called them names, he abused the newspapers for having given them false ideas about him and making them think that he gave a wild west show. But his scolding was wasted on the curiosity seekers who had remained only long enough to take a good look at him and hear him read and pray. They departed without waiting for the preaching that followed. The speaker declared that in future he would have "none but mannerly persons admitted, .who will not run away as soon as their idle curiosity is sated."

One can but wonder, in view of his claims, why this modern Elijah does not follow the example of his prototype of old, and call down fire from heaven to consume his ungodly opposers. That would establish his authority beyond dispute.

"A Plea for the New Woman."

A Pathetic Case of Prevision.

When our occasional correspondent, Dr. G. W. Brown, of Rockford, Ill., was preparing to remove from Conneaut ville, Pa., in 1854, to Kansas, to estabassisted the new publishers in their editorial work. She had formerly been a poetical contributor to the columns of the "Courier."

Dr. Brown sends us an extract from a poem written by Mrs. Mason, sent by her to him, and published in the Kansas "Herald of Freedom," head of first column, on fourth page of that paper, of issue January 31, 1857, four years and near three months before the rebelion of April, 1861. We quote verbatim, as copied from that paper, files of which may be seen in the archives of the Kansas Historical Society at Topeka, the rooms of the Antiquarian Society, Worcester, Mass., the New York State Library at Albany, and Dr. Brown has a file in his office at Rockford, III. The poem is headed:

WAR: By Mrs. A. J. Mason. I had a dream which was not all a dream,—Byron, dreamed of war-the battle-field

Was strewn with ghastly dead and groans Ascended constantly from heaps Of dving-the flery missiles fley

Uninterruptedly, and men, Transformed to flends, imbrued their Each in his brother's blood-homes

Destroyed and hearths made desolate. Sad, sickening sight! And yet more More wildly terrible to see

The life-blood welling from the hearts I cherished most. My brain ran wild, My senses reeled, and I awoke, And from my inmost soul there gushed strain of thankfulness. But was it all a dream?

Time passed. Mrs. Mason gave birth to a son, now living in Florida; and still

The great civil war came on. The second battle of Manassas was fought, disastrous to the federal arms.

Mr. Mason, who had become sole owner of the "Courier," hurriedly disposed of his interest in that paper, raised in a few days a full company of volunteers, was elected captain, and, under instruction of Gov. Curtin of his state, bade adieu to his little family, and started at once for the front. He arrived at Petersburg, Va., on the morning of the desperate battle at that point, plunged into the thickest of the fight, and fell several paces in advance of his command, his thigh severed by a cannon ball. Knowing his injury was fatal, he took from his pocket his note book and pencil, and wrote:

"Dear Alma:-I am fatally wounded. Do the best you can. Mason." And thus was fully and accurately realized the sorrowful vision of the first "And yet more sad, More wildly terrible to see The lifeblood welling from the hearts Of those I cherished most.

But the end of the record is not yet reached. The living Mrs. Mason received a telegram announcing her mournful be-reavement. She left home at once for the battle-field, to recover the body of her patriotic husband. Her mission was successful, and the body of Capt. A. . Mason was removed to his greatly loved borough, and now rests calmly in Conneautville Cemetery, a lasting reminder of the cruelty and savagery of war, for Capt, Mason was really a peace

Several years again passed. In 1870 Dr. Brown visited the scene of his former labors, to deliver an agricultural address to a society he there founded. He paid a visit to the widow of his cousin and successor to his first paper, and listened to her distressed and exaggerated account of her trip by rail passing through deep morasses and impenetrable forests, miring in the one. and bumping over logs, running against trees and rocks, three weeks en route. The next day he told his friends who had already complained of her disregard of late for truth: "Poor Mrs. Mason is a monomaniac in regard to her husband's death, and is closely verging on insanity." A little later she was adjudged by legal authority a lunatic, and was sent to an asylum, where she has remained a mental wreck.

Read again the first Mrs. Mason's narration, as told by herself more than four years before the event culminating in the death of him she cherished most then say, good reader, if you will, that there is nothing in prevision. And if the mind can take cognizance of events so far in the future, who is able to define its limit?

Nearly Equally Divided.

At a General Methodist Conference lately in session at Aurora, Ill., a reso lution was introduced, reflecting on the Garrett Biblical Institute, which it is understood favors the higher criticism of the Bible. It was in words follow

"Resolved, That hereafter we will not knowingly favor the election as teach ers in our schols, or as editors, book agents, secretaries, bishops or represen tatives to the General Conference any who cast discredit on the Holy Scrip tures, or who argue their plain histories into myths, legends, or pseudographs, thus bluntly antagonizing our fifth article of religion."

So soon as the resolution was read Judge Horton, president of the board of trustees of the Biblical Institute, sprang to his feet, remonstrated against its passage, and said:

'I have read all the books about which there has been criticism, and for the life of me I am unable to determine whether Moses wrote about his own death or not. If this body can settle the question by passing a resolution, it ought to be canonized."

The resolution by a small majority, was laid on the table by a rising vote.

WADES OUT TO DEATH.

Frederic G. Tuttle of the Banner of Light Publishing Company, Commits Suicide at Haverhill Mass. Suicide is a Crime against one's self when calmly, sanely and premeditately committed; but when a person is rendered insane by overwork, or mental strain, then the mind is a wreck, and the victim walks as if in total darkness or in a somnambulistic dream. Mr. Day, for 20 years connected with the Banner of Light, doing efficient work thereon, also committed suicide. Amelia Bauer returns to Earth and gives most interesting experiences. She seems to have attached herself to Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Babcock, and they appear to greatly enjoy her presence. She refers to the materializing medium in no complimentary language. The report is interesting and suggestive.

THE N. S. A. REPORTS.

The N. S. A. Reports are especially valuable this year, and will be read with interest. As at present managed the Association will advance along well-defined lines, and do a most excellent work. Mrs. Longley makes an ideal Secretary, and the President, H. D. Barrett, will continue to perform his duties efficiently and push the cause along. Circumstances have always brought this brilliant young man to the front when the N.S.A. meets, and he is elected President with a hurrah!

ANNUAL REPORT

Of the Secretary of the National Spiritualists Association.

National Spiritualists Association, and to the the Spiritualists of the United States and Canada, Greeting: Dear Co-Workers and Friends:--- As secretary of the National Spiritualists Association, it gives me pleasure to submit to your kindly consideration, the incident to the home office in Washington. The fiscal year of this association —from Oct. 1, 1902 to Oct. 1, 1903, has been a year of constant labor and usefulness for the N. S. A., and I pause here to commend the sincere fidelity and earnest efforts of each of its officers, missionaries, and, as a rule, of its chartered societies. During the year, the work of the home office has moved clong smoothly and has consisted of the zsual correspondence between societies, individuals and the secretary. Our letter files, and copy press books attest to the many hundreds of letters received and answered in this office during the year. All this correspondence has shown and cemented the interest taken tin the N. S. A. by societies and individtuals, and the harmony existing be-Atween our association, and the public at large. Of course, we have had somewhat of adverse criticism, and offers from individuals here and there to show ins how the N.S. A. office and work should be conducted, but on the whole, the contact of your secretary with the world-by correspondence and personally has been of a most pleasing nature As is customary, we have forwarded the , usual quarterly circular letters, and all other needed literature to our charered societies, and written frequent etters to the several spiritual papers, which have appeared in print, Reeping the public informed of our work. In this connection it is proper to gratefully state, that the editors of the spiritual papers have constantly extended the utmost of courtesy to the N. S. A. officers, and have generously published all that we have sent to them from our office. Our sincere thanks are due to The Progressive Thinker, Banner of Light, Light of Truth, Sunflower, Religio-Journal, and Lichtstrahlen for favors and courtesies too many to enumerate. In addition to the circular letters sent our chartered societies, each society has received separate letters from our office whenever the needs of any particular auxiliary called for the

Our N. S. A. free library is in most excellent condition; we have adopted the Index system which is most satisfactory; have about seven hundred valspiritual-and other liberalbooks on our shelves and continue to loan out these works without money or price to those who come to our office for This is a branch of our good work that seems to be highly appreciated by residents, and by "the strangers within our gates."

During the year we have issued twenty-one charters: Two state charters, viz., Oregon and Montana, and nineteen local charters. These societies start out with good prospects, and seem to be in fair way to do good work for the cause of Spiritaalism. We learn, indirectly, that several of the former socie ties in the South and West have dis banded, but as such societies are negligent in reporting to this office, we have no official report of such decay. And just here, let me say that I find it almost impossible to get any returns from societies in arrears—and often just as we think a society is a hopeless case, and it must be stricken from our list, it assumes new life, pays up back ques, and wheels into line; we have wo such instances within a few months. The general report to date, from societies is, a lack of established funds, difficulties in meeting current ex-of their work. In matters of organized work, it is cheering to note, that in several parts of the country, spiritual temples and churches have been purchased erected by our societies, and that the growing tendency is to own our halls and buildings, and to cease to be dependent upon rented rooms for the pur-

penses, and the need of circuit speakers and mediums, for the best continuance

In matters of wills and testaments of deceased Spiritualists we have nothing new to report, such bequests as were left to the N. S. A., before reported have not been paid, with the exception of the W. F. Espenmuller case of Los Angeles, and that of Wm. Case, of Lafayette, Ind.; these bequests have been paid, although the legal expense of defending the will of Mr. Case, was so large that the N. S. A. cleared but about four hundred dollars, out of what ought to have been a payment of nearly, if not more than two thousand dollars Several other will cases have yet to be settled from which bequests will be received by this association.

Owing to the difficulty of Spiritualists having their means go to such objects as they devise, because of the liability of their wills being contested in the courts, some of our good friends express their determination to bestow tneir property where they wish it to go, before they pass from earth. Such an instance we are glad to report, is that of Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair of New Jersey who have deed their fine estate of house and nine acres of good land, outright to the N. S. A. The deeds of this property are now in possession of this association, and the generous donors are guaranteed their life-lease in the home, they to be care-takers of the same while they live.

The matter of establishing a mediums' home has been abandoned by the N. S A. for the present, owing to the impos sibility of securing sufficient funds to warrant the opening of such a home; therefore it was decided by the board to turn its mediums' home fund into a mediums' relief fund, from which monthly pensions should be paid to as many veteran, destitute or needy mediums as it could care for. We have now five such old age have a right to the aid of Spirit-ualists. The names of these pensioners will be furnished our people who desire to learn them, by the secretary. Dr. Henry Slade is also completely support ed by our mediums' relief fund, at the Reed City Sanitarium, and our latest reports from him show that he is improv No the Officers and Auxiliaries of the ing in health-but that he never can be else than an invalid in need of care. Temporary aid has been furnished needy mediums—to tide them over some financial strait, according to the wisdom of the executive board. We call upon the benevolent, to remember the needs of our worthy mediums while dis-pensing their benefactions. During the last winter, our building at Reed City, Mich., was consumed by fire, but the in-surance received for the loss, covered our investment in that direction; the N. S. A. has since disposed of its land at Reed City, to our co-worker, Dr. Spinney, and this organization now holds no property in that vicinity. Among other good works accom-plished by the N. .S. A. during the year has been the erection of a suitable monument, also granite posts at the graves of Maggie and Katie Fox, in Cypress Hill Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y. This was a duty that Spiritualists owed to their pioneer mediums, and it has been freely discharged by this organization, Our missionaries have done a good work during the year, as their respective reports will fully show; to those of last year, the trustees added Mr. J. S.

Scarlett as missionary for New England, and for the spring and winter months this brother did faithful work for the cause in the section mentioned; with the opening of the summer he re signed his commission. At request of many prominent workers in our ranks, who felt the need of an efficient office being appointed to inspect the various publications of the day-secular and re ligious, and to reply to any unjust critcism or attack on Spiritualism and its workers, which such publications might contain, the board of trustees decled to appoint that veteran worker, Mr. Hudson Tuttle, to an office of Editor-atlarge, engaging him to keep himself alert towards the attitude of pulpit and press towards our cause. Mr. Tuttle has done this in a most wise and efficient manner, as his annual report will show, and I venture to recommend that this able man with his trenchant pen, be continued in this important office, for in this instance at least, it has been shown, that "the pen is mightier than the sword." No special fund has been created for the engagement of such a representative of our cause: the expense of his service has been met from the N. S. A. general fund, although I am pleased to report in this connection that the generous editor of The Progressive Thinker, Mr. J. R. Francis, contributed one hundred dollars to this object, without solicitation.

Another office created by the N. S. A.

is that of General Superintendent of Lyceums, and Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, was chosen for that position. No immediate salary was attached to the office for lyceum work, and only a small appropriation to aid in establishing a little lesson paper for ly ceums, was made. Brother Ring has taken hold of the work with a will, and an enthusiasm that shows him to be well fitted for it.

The subject of state persecutions of our mediums still threatens to handicap the dissemination of our works; the atest report comes from Seattle. Washington; out there our well-tried worker Mrs. Loie F. Prior, has been arrested under the "Fortune Teller" pursuing her legitimate calling of mediumship. Mrs. Prior is under the auspices of the spiritual society there, and it and the state association will do all possible to forward the case in her be half, but it is very possible that this National Association may be called upon to assist in the defense. Valuable additions have been made the books in our free library by Hon. Chas. R. Schirm, Miss Maggie Olive Jordan, Mrs. Florence Huntley and others; Miss Jordan and Prof. Longley have also made donations of their respective publications to be sold for the benefit of the N. .S. A.

From the incorporation of the N. S. A. to the present, it has issued 324 charters, of these, nineteen are for state as sociations, eleven for camps, four for lyceums. The National Lyceum and Young People's Union have dissolved as previously reported; many local so cieties have joined their state associations, while in some localities where so cleties have failed, they have been revived again. In December last, a most trying experience and terrible tragedy came into the lives of our beloved friends, President and Mrs. Barrett, in the heart rending and violent death of their pre clous and only child, sweet little Xilia. No pen can depict, no tongue describe the awful suddenness of that blow and the direful anguish that it brought to the parental hearts, only the conscious ness of the truths of Spiritualism could have saved them from the depths of de spair, and it is with reverence for their sacred sorrow, that I recommend the addition of the name of Xilia Barrett to the list of our departed dear ones that will be presented to this convention under the head of "Necrology" in whose memory resolution will be devised, and towards whose loving ones of earth, our words and sentiments of respect and sympathy will be extended. Suffering physically and mentally from the effects of this tragic blow, our president found it necessary to pass the duties of his office for a time to our honored vice-president, Brother Locke, and for a period of several months the administration of presidential duties was ably conducted by Mr. Locke; in this direction I can only say, he did his duty and discharged it well. In passing, I wish to call attention to the list of books, which the Massachu setts State Asociation has published, as suitable reading for beginners and investigators in Spiritualism; it is a most excellent list, and worthy the com mendation of this convention.

In closing, allow me to state that the duties of the secretary's office have been discharged to the best of my judg mediums on our list, they are not pau- ment and ability. During the month of pers or medicants, but worthy veterans August I was permitted by the board to whose life forces have been given to the remove my office work to New England, cause of Spiritualism, and who in their and from that section the office correspondence was attended to. While at Onset, I had the pleasure and privilege of participating in the N. S. A. day generously given by that camp, and in the exercises of Massachusetts State Day. President Barrett, Dr. G. A. Fuller, Mr. J. B. Hatch, with others, rendered most efficient service on those days. It is with pleasure that I here attest to the unfailing help given to me during the year, in the discharge of duties incident to our work, by our loyal members of the N. S. A. board, whenever they have been called upon for advice and opin-ion; that our worthy and faithful treasurer stands first among these helpers, is assured, since he is often the first to be called upon, and is at times the only one who can attend to the pressing business at hand, and it is with a grateful heart that I hereby acknowledge his unfailing assistance and encouragement.

It also gives me pleasure to give well deserved recognition to the valuable aid of Miss Agnes Wink, and Prof. Longley, which has ever been cheerfully bestowed; owing to the help of these assistants during the last few years, your seretary has been enabled to keep all expense for assistant work at the home office, within the fifty dollars annual allotment, which has been all that she has asked the board to allow for clerk hire.
It would not be well to close this report without mentioning the large demand that has been made upon the N. S. A. during the year for the free distribution in the form of spiritual literature. So extensive had this become that it kept Mr. Longley busy day after day doing up and mailing packages of tracts from our office; the bill for printing of tracts during the year amounts to $500.54 and the bill for postage alone for the mailing of these printed lectures has been a very large one. In but few instances have we received any money for the tracts, and seldom has even the postage been forwarded for the literature, yet the good work has gone on, and we are satisfied that a great missionary work is being done by the distribution of this grand liberalizing and spiritual literature.

To our honored president, Mr. H. D. Barrett, who has stood at his post during all the years of the N. S. A. work, and who has been the kindly and able co-worker of your secretary during her years of service with you, I wish to pay a tribute of love and esteem; courteous. generous in sentiment, bearing and deed at all times, brilliant in oratory, faithful in devotion, spiritual in aspiraton, sparing not himself in advocacy and defense of Spiritualism, I feel that it will be long before we find his like in all respects again. Others there are who are also honorable, conscientious, faithful and able souls, who will in the future, no doubt go on with the work of the National Association, but at this time, I ask your kind indulgence, while pay tribute as a co-worker with and a riend to President Barrett, and thank him for his service for this organization and for the cause at large. I only express my trust, that future presidents and future secretaries of this great or-ganization will labor as harmoniously and faithfully together for the good of humanity, as those of the present have endeavored to do.

All of which is respectfully submitted. MARY T. LONGLEY, Secretary of the National Spiritualists'
Association of the United States and the Dominion of Canada

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRESI-DENT'S REPORT.

Your committee upon President Barett's annual report respectfully submits the following:

Railroad Lines.—We most heartily concur in President Barrett's recommendation that engrossed resolutions of thanks under the seal of the N. S. A., be forwarded to the chairmen of the Western, Central, Transcontinental and Southwestern passenger associations, expressing the obligation of this body our clergymen. We earnestly recommend that the ocal and state auxiliaries of the N S. ., as well as our Spiritualist papers be kept advised of any or all railroad lines which discriminate against our clergymen because they are Spiritualists, while they grant special rates to ministers of other denominations; also that the next official board be authorized to resent any case of that nature, which, in its judgment, is of sufficient importance to call for such action to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Editor-at-Large. - We congratulate ooth the board of trustees and Spiritualists generally upon the selection of Hudson Tuttle as editor-at-large, and urge the importance to our cause of continuing the employment of his able brain and incisive pen in that capacity.

Missionaries. — We recognizze the earnestness, loyalty and devotion with which the missionaries of the N. S. A., for the past year have performed their abors. The compensation granted them is but partial return for their personal sacrifices and continuity of efforts in the face of serious hindrances. Your committee believes that there is good reason for radical changes in the methods now employed to utilize their labors. They should not be required to cover so great a stretch of territory. They should visit fewer fields and he allowed to labor a longer period upon each one. In this way their visits would not become so great a drain upon the financial resources of the struggling local workers and they would not only create but nourish to the point of independent existence the local societies they organize. We feel that this convention should seriously consider the advisability of asking the official board it will elect to throw the responsibility for all missionary work in the independent jurisdiction upon the several state associations responsible therefor. We advise that the N. S. A. only send its missionaries into states and territories as yet unorganized in its interests, but that its trustees from time to time appropriate such sums as can be spared to aid its auxiliary state associations in promoting their missionary efforts, distributing such allowances in proportion to the amounts first expended for that purpose by each state body upon its own

Camp-meetings.-We recognize the value of camp-meetings as a means of spreading the truths of Spiritualism and acquainting our own people with the aims, objects and methods of the N.

We recommend that the thanks of this body be extended to every campmeeting association whose co-operation for the season of 1903, contributed so great financial benefit to this associa-

We endorse the president's sugges ion that the board of trustees furnish speakers to all camp associations who ssign a special day for the National work upon their summer programmes. Local Societies .- We recommend that methods for strengthening the effectiveness of local societies be left to the several state associations where such exist; with urgent solicitations that they give them the most earnest attention, for upon their active use must depend the very life of all of our organized bodies. We advise that each state hody at once put into effect President Barrett's suggestion of sending a special representative, happily adapted to mose duties, to visit each local society cannected there with and that such sists be made as freuently as possible. Local societies freuently as possible. Local societies have more important functions than simply to breathe and then die.

Lyceum.-We, your committee, fully realize that the lyonum cortainly demands our earnest devotion, and we heartily agree with lour esteemed president in the need of lyceum workers. No more efficient or certain avenue for misionary work is to be found than through the progressive lyceums whereby our literature will be placed in the hands of all persons of all ages, many of whom would not otherwise read of Spiritualism; and by touching the lives of little children, we will establish a thor oughly spiritual Spiritualism.

We, your committee, with the president, deem it wise to continue the appointment of National Superintendent and that sufficient funds be furnished for representative literature to be supplied to the lyceum; let effort continue by the national superintendent to estab-lish lyceums in the several states through the co-operation of the state officials, by devoting proper time to the yceum movement at all of their meetings, and by the appointment of at least one individual in each local auxillary whose special duty shall be to promote the work of the lyceum.

Morris Pratt Institute.-Your committee heartily endorses the recommenda-tion that this convention assign a special hour for the consideration of work and claims of the Morris Pratt Institute and suggest that their import ance calls for the exercise of calm judgment and the elimination of all irrelevant personalities.

Medlums' Home.—We commend the conclusions of President Barrett that under existing conditions the N. S. A. should not now further promote the establishment of a general home for mediums.

We suggest to our state associations careful consideration of the future possibilities for the maintenance of such institutions, as illustrated by the success of the work so grandly done by the Michigan State Spiritualists Association. Pensions for Mediums.—We feel that the present official board of the N. S. A. has acted with great wisdom in extending aid to needy mediums, and recommend that its successor shall continue the work as necessity demands, and its resources will permit. We recommend compliance with the president's suggestion that all mediums be asked to make stated contributions for such relief and that proper steps be taken to interest every layman in giving special offerings for this purpose.

Wills and Donations.-We feel that all Spiritualists should be profoundly grateful for the favorable termination of litigation over the wills mentioned in our president's report. Fundamental principles of lasting benefit to Spiritual ism have been thereby judicially estab-

We earnestly endorse President Barrett's suggestions that donations and wills of which the Na S. As is to be the future beneficiary shouldn be either made or carefully drawns while the donor or deviser is in health.

History of Spiritualism, Your committee fully recognizes the importance of this work and would recommend that the incoming board continue the same along lines suggested by President Bar-rett in so far as can consistently be

Medical Legislation.—We owe it to ourselves and to our cause that we, as Spiritualists, take all proper and reasonable measures for the protection of our honest mediums, heaters and speakers before legislative and judicial

The recommendations of President Barrett are urged upon the attention of the incoming board with view to their being carried out in so far as advisable. We would urge upon all mediums the importance of making contributions to the General Mediums' Fund which can be used for no other purpose except for the protection and defense of their rights. Settlement of Speakers.-We feel that this question is so interwoven with yarlety of environments, differing degrees of financial ability and dissimilarity of tastes that its decision should rest with each local society, which best of its own field. What is best for one locality may prove a hindrance to another one. We heartily recommend following the president's counsel, advising settled pastors in every instance where it is believed to be practicable. Mass Meetings.—We suggest that the question of holding general mass meetngs during this associational year be referred to the enlightened judgment of the next board of trustees, asking it to remember that some of our most active state associations have been born at such gatherings. Cuba and Porto Rico.-We rejoice over the spread of truth in all parts of the world, and would encourage co-operation with our brothers and sisters in Cuba and Porto Rico, and recommend that the incoming board be instructed to carry out such plans as in their judgment will promote the well-being of the cause in those countries.

Spiritualism at St. Louis In 1904.-We, your committee, most heartily con-cur with the president's recommendation that the incoming board be empowered to act in conjunction with the existing societies of that city to take such steps as will secure a dignified. scholarly and spiritual presentation of Spiritualism during the entire season of the Exposition.

An International Spiritual Congress.-We, your committee, heartily concur with President Barrett's recommendation to abandon the fdea of an Interna tional Spiritualist Congress during the St. Louis Exposition, but hope that the thought may be kept in Wind until at some future fime it may 9/be accomplished.

Home Circles.-We most heartily enorse President Barrett's position as to the importance of home, and would add to them neighborhood circles, and believe our state and local dassociations should make the promotion of their establishment a feature: of , their safeguarding the participants in them directions for their conduct and advis ing the study of the writings bearing thereon, of Andrew Jackson Davis, J. and others of our well-known authors. Postoffice Mission.-We endorse all our president says on this matter, and recommend that Spiritualists file their names and postoffice address with the secretary of their own state associations, who shall be requested to forward duplicates to the headquarters of the N S. A., and we would refer the recom mendation of the president to the incoming board with power to act according to their judgment and discretion. Protection of Our Cause,-We recommend to the Spiritualists of our country, careful consideration of the presilent's suggestions under this head, and pelleve that the welfare of the N. S. A. and respect for and advancement of our cause depend upon morality of life, hon-of this and its auxiliary bodies.

Some Special Needs.—Surely there is no greater need for the perpetuity and efficacy of our organization than the vitality afforded by young, progressive workers and we recommend the atten-tion of Spiritualists to the advantages to be gained by properly conducted lyceums, the Morris Pratt Institute and reading circles.

We most heartily endorse the president's recommendation for the necessily of dignifying the presentation of the various phases of demonstration and guarding their sacredness.

Endowment Fund.—We concur in our president's presentation of the very great need for the establishment of an endowment fund to aid in extending the work of the N. S. A. We do not agree fully with the plan he recommends for immediate creation thereof. Such an attempt shoud be extended over so long a period of time and be so conducted as to divert to the least possible degree the flow of funds into the N. S. A., treasury which are sadly needed by our local and state asociations as well as the conduct of our educational enterprises and continuation of the relief of our worthy and needy mediums. We therefore recommend that for the current year voluntary donations for this fund shall be received by whomsoever tendered, but that active solicitation for contributions thereto be confined to our well-to-do, or wealthy adherents, or friends of our cause. This would hold in abeyance for one year the beginning of a nonular or house to house canvass, in aid of this special fund.

Necrology.--We would respectfully add the name of Morris Pratt to those already mentioned by President Barrett and then refer this number to the committee on Resolutions.

Spiritualist Press .- Recognizing the power and value of the press, we en-dorse the recommendation of President Barrett to extend a vote of thanks to the different editors who have opened their columns to the N. S. A. and its subordinates during the year, and we would request the incoming board to be watchful of our interests in so far as they may be infringed upon by unwarranted interpretations of state and national laws.

Board of Trustees and Home Office .-Your committee takes note of all our worthy president says relative to the work of the board of trustees, the home office and Treasurer Mayer, and we feel that the unanimous thanks of Spiritualists at large and delegates here assembled are due to these able and efficient workers and we also want to especially express ourselves as grateful to Secre tary Longley for her untiring efforts in promoting the good of the cause through the home office and by personal efforts when and wherever possible. Treasurer Mayer is to the N. S. A. as a Corner Stone" and is so recognized by ail who come in touch with the work. Special recommendation.—All these ecommendations we most heartily endorse and we would request the incoming board to see they are carried out as promptly and fully as possible. President Barrett.-Our hearts are with our noble president, and we feel he has filled the office with dignity and honor.

No one can estimate the extent of his labors, nor the effect of labor done un der such circumstances as has characterized the past year. He will ever be enrolled in the hearts of American Spiritualists as one to whom we owe more for the recognition of the N. S. A. than the present generation can comprehend.

Lyceum Work From December 1, 1902, to September 1, 1903.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the National Spiritualists Association Greeting:

When the board of trustees of the National Spiritualists Asociation acted upon the recommendation of the convention held in Boston last year (1902) and appointed me to the office of General Superintendent of Lyceum Work, I feel that I was complimented with a be stowal of the highest possible honor, for I was placed in a position, where with proper co-operation, I may do more for the molding of lives and the forming of characters than in any other office which can be created or betowed.

With my appointment, I received $50, and some months later $4.61 to accomplish the work of the year; you will note by the financial statement that $292.05 has been spent in the work and that there is a balance of $24.87 in the treasury.

The passing months have been filled with earnest, cheerful service, many have responded with loving helpfulness and hearty support; while I have received not a few criticisms and many obstacles have at times barred my way I would breathe through this my formal report, a spirit full of thankfulness for favors bestowed and hopefulness for the coming work in this most valuable department of our work. With the financial outlay mentioned above there has been issued 24,500 copies of the Progressive Lyceum esson sheet, two issues of which contained eight pages, the others four pages, 10,000 cards bearing the picture and favorite saying of our workers, About one thousand letters have been written in the interest of the lyceum work and these, with kindly support of the spiritual press, reached from Maine to California and awakened a pleasing interest in the lyceum work. l'here are sixteen lyceums in Maine. California, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois Misouri, Texas, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Canada, District of Columbia and West Virginia and several other states have furnished single subscrip-

The office of superintendent seems to me to be that of a servant, one who should in every possible way come in touch with the lyceum movement which it seems to me can best be ac complished through the officers of the state associations, if they will but co-opperate, and with individuals every where.

The demand with all lyceums is plans for concentration of effort, proper order of session, responsive readings and proper lesson matter for the little folks. With the marvelous foundation for lyceum work afforded by Andrew Jackson Davis and the further detail given by Emma Rood Tuttle and others, we shall be able to unite the forces, that we may soon have lesson matter which will satisfy the workers over the United States and Canada; when the housands turn in concentration to conider the same lesson matter, then will we feel the helpful waves of cheer which are certain to establish a spiritcussed in advance of their presentation, we shall be able to have efficient leaders, develop the inspirational powers of the young people and at the same time furnish much matter for the lesson sheet, by asking each to write their thoughts upon the matter discussed.

When the matter of a recognized organ through which the various lyceums may meet and exchange ideas, is adjusted surely the movement will take on such form as will guarantee growth in the way of materially adding to the personal membership of the local socieies with efficient workers and in the establishing of libraries throughout the country where the best psychic literature may be studied.

My report seems feeble, for so many hearts have reached out to the move-ment that the minds of the little folks may be illuminated with the beautiful life which blesses this age, and my heart is so full of earnestness for this cause which surely holds as much of promise as any department in our work. During the eight months for which time I herewith give report I have done my little part as faithfully as I knew and the many dear letters which I have received from the little folks, and the encouragement which I have received from almost everyone to whom I have appealed for co-operation, makes satisfactory compensation for the energy use, which in connection with the duties of local speaker and state president has oftentimes been very taxing.

I will not attempt to mention the names of those who have assisted me in this work of the lyceum for they, like myself, have, I believe, done it for the sake of sweet and loving service to the little folks. I only ask that those here assembled may, in the presence of the angel host which has given us the sared charge, accept a copy of the lesson sheet into their hands, and closely pressing it in a moment of silent consecration, see if they are not moved to return to their respective homes with a firm determination to think and act for the lyceum which stands for the liberal and harmonious education and proper unfolding of the physical, mental, moral and spiritual natures of the little folks -the sacred buds of promise.

I am always, JOHN W. RING, General Supt. of Lyceum Work.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DELE-GATES' REPORT.

Mr. President and Fellow Delegates:-The committee on delegates' reports respectfully submits the following: Your committee has received reports from sixty-five societies for consideration out of a hundred and fifty-four number of chartered societies in good standing auxiliaries of the N. S. A. three camp-meeting associations, fourteen states, two lyceums and one educa-tional institution, the Morris Pratt Institute. Examination of the various reports show that many societies make no attempt to comply with the requirements of the N. S. A. Fourteen state associations have sent in reports as follows: Missouri, Oregon, Massachusetts, Michigan Iow: Maine, California, Minnesota, Ohio, Texas and Wisconsin. We desire to commend especially those states who nave made careful reports, not only of their state associations but all of their subordinate societies, and would recomnend that all states make special efforts in making their full reports.

Your committee calls your attention to the fact that though only fourteen states have filed reports, there are three different plans of organization. This is liable to create confusion in the election of delegates to the N. S. A., and steps should be taken to secure uniform plan of organization in the election of delegates. Some state associations have individual membership only, oth ers have individual memberships and subordinate associations. Some have subordinate societies.

Local Societies.—The returns from the various societies have, as in pre vious years, been most sadly neglected many send no financial statements, and some of the reports are only partially completed, and a few only comply with the requirements of the N. S. A., which requires a brief written report of the work accomplished by the societies during the year. We would suggest that the care for societies already chartered be regarded as more important than the organization of new societies, and recmmend that special attention be given this matter by the missionaries of the Camp-meeting Associations.-Three camp-meeting associations have been reported: Niantic, Conn.; Compounce, Conn.; and Madison, Maine, and only two lyceums reported—Austin Spiritual Lyceum and the First Spiritualists Association of Philadelphia.

Educational Institution .- The Morris Pratt Institute, Whitewater, Wis. As this school is chartered by the N. S. A. and is the only one of its kind under the management of Spiritualists, your committee recommends that every effort be made to sustain it financially, as it is a most important factor in the progress of Spiritualism.

Financial Statement.-While it is imossible to give a complete report of the standing of the charter societies, owing to the meagre details furnished, your committee wish to present the following and figures: The total receipts from all states is $33,710.79; the expenditures $26,130.81; the balance on hand, $4, Building and property valued at $29.432.82. Your committee recommends that all societies be requested to have their complete reports in the hands of the N. S. A. secretary ten days before the annual convention, in order that the statistics may be compiled as far as pos sible in advance of the assembly of the same. As it is almost impossible to do this properly in time of the convention

Your committee recommends, in order to expedite business, that all reports of delegates or money coming in after the closing of the fiscal year, be given as a supplementary report at the convention, it being deemed necessary to establish some system in regard to these reports. The reason for this recommendation is, owing to the lack of ystem in the arrangement of the re ports this year, the work of this committee is very much increased.

of the same be sent to the Spiritualist press for publication Your committee again desires to call attention to the unwise method of voting by proxy, and therefore recom-mends that where there are not the full number of delegates present to which any state is entitled, the number may be filled from visitors present, provided only that such visitors shall be members of some society in said state which is affiliated with the N. S. A. Any society not chartered by the state society that has not paid its dues for two consecutive years ought not to be considered in active operation. We recommend that the condition of. such societies be looked into and if it cannot be revived that the charter be revoked. All of which is respectfully submitted for your consideration.

Chairman. LYMAN C. HOWE, LAURA G. FIXEN, E. E. CARPENTER,

Report of Committee on Finance.

Your committee on finance, ways and means, would most respectfully offer the following recommendation for the consideration of this convention.

We recommend that a day be named that shall be called N. S. A. day, upon which every local society in the United States shall have some gathering either in excursion, picnic, hall-gathering, or in some way to get the people together and have the funds of the day sent to the secretary of the N. S. A. This is in no sense to do away with the annual col-lection of societies, but to be a day that shall have its place in the history of our organization as a day on which the work of the N. S. A. shall be emphasized so that from the oldest to the youngest, there will be a clear understanding that the interests of the N. S. A. is the interest of every local organization and of every lyceum in the whole country. The idea is not only for funds to work with, but that it will draw all the Spiritualists of the country nearer to their parent organization, and thus bring about harmony in work and a surety that all means put into the hands of our National Organization will be used for the good of the cause whether it be the missionary work, lyceum work, the protection of mediums, or the care of our aged or sick workers

Respectfully submitted CARRIE E. S. TWING, MRS. J. B. WHITWELL, JULIA R. LOCKE, GEORGE W. WAY, REV. H. C. DORN.

Moses Hull lectured in Sandusky Ohio, Tuesday of last week.

Several issues of The Progressive Thinker have been devoted to a symposium on the book mentioned in a late issue, "The Great Psychological Crime." Leading Spiritualists have rallied to the support of mediums and mediumship; while there are not wanting testimonies from mediums who corroborate the statements of the book, and who have experienced in themselves the changes involved in surrendering themselves to spirit control. These are given with evenhanded fairness by the editor of the paper. Criticism, for and against, seems to be about equally divided, and the great Spiritualist philosophers differ about it so completely that the ordinary reader may well hold his opinion in reserve. One whole page is devoted to Florence Huntley, editor of the book, who answers the questions previously propounded by the editor of The Progressive Thinker. Readers of the Tribune will do well to send a dime to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill., for the issues of October 17 and 24. -Woman's Tribune.

Nora Batchelor writes: "The Spirit-ualists of Southern Oregon, at the town of Medford, enjoyed a rare treat recently listening to two fine addresses by the Rev. Mr. Love, president of the State Spiritualists Association. In his method of presenting Spiritualism and forcing its truths from biblical evidence Mr. Love reminds one strongly of Moses Hull. He is not only a good speaker and a very pleasant gentleman, but possesses no small gift in psychic power, being both a healer and a good test medium, qualifications not often found in one individual. It is hoped that some arrangement will be made whereby Mr. Love will be employed permanently in the interests of Spiritualism, in this 'neck o' the woods.' "

"Spiritualism and the Bible" was the subject which interested the members of the Terre Haute (Ind.) Literary Club at the regular meeting last night. The paper read by Prof. Wickersham an interesting one in two ways—literary, and also dealing with the subject of Spiritualism, so far as it pertains to religion. As given to members of the club, it was in the form of a short story ending with expressions and opinions by Prof. Wickersham. The discussion was just as interesting as the paper and led to many points being brought as to the advance made in scientific research regarding the truth or unreliability of Spiritualism so far as communication between this world and the next. Dr. Cooper's announcement that he had entered into contract or compact with the late Mayor Ross for a materialization after death if it was possible, showed the spirit of the discussion.

The crowd that assembled on the opening day to view the recumbent figure included a member of the South African constabulary. This person went with a skeptical mind, and seeing the figure move he at once denounced the whole business as a fraud. The professor, not a bit disconcerted, engaged him in conversation, and the skeptic was soon kenly interested in the wondrous tales the man of science was relating. Suddenly the policeman fell into the arms of the professor and went through some very strange antics, one of which was to arrest the professor as a dangerous criminal. When it dawned upon the crowd that the man of law was really hypnotized the joke was greatly relished. After putting his victim through a few more tricks for the enjoyment of the other visitors, the professor stored him to his senses as quickly as he had hypnotized him. When he realized what had happened the policeman, looking white and frightened made a hasty exit and has not been seen near the shop since.-London Globe.

Laura C. Morse writes: "I am profoundly interested in the Symposium; the same greatly exceeds in value a year's subscription. You can imagine my interest in the great subject, Mediumship, when I say that 76 years have rolled over my head and I have had many messages from the other side, mostly through that great spirit postmaster, Dr. J. V. Mansfield. I am thankful for such names as Hudson Tuttle, Lyman C. Howe, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Longley, Prof. Lockwood, Will C. Hodge, E. W. Sprague, and last but not least, Andrew Jackson Davis, with numberless other lights that handle this subject wisely and well. Without doubt they know whereof they speak." The Chicago American has the following item, illustrating the power of hypnotism: "To the mysterious possibly hypnotic influence of a railway mail clerk is attributed by the police the disappearance of Miss Nellie Smith, seventeen years old, formerly in the employ of Mrs. H. F. Snyder, 243 East Ohio street. Mrs. Snyder said to-day: 'Nellie has often told me of this man, who seems to have had a remarkable influence over her notwithstanding her repeated assurances that she disliked him greatly. She showed me a telegram from him last week asking her to elope with him. She tore it angrily into hits when I had finished reading it, but I believe nevertheless that she has gone with him. The girl's mother, Mrs. Henry Smith, has begged the police to bring back her daughter. She disappeared about noon last Friday."

While there I served them for five public meetings and one social. We had at all meetings fine, intelligent audiences, and at the evening meetings we were greeted with packed houses. I want the public to know that the society in Rockford is far from dead. It is very much alive and progressing nicely, and I hope it may live as long as it seeks for truth and truth alone. Let us wish it long life with harmony and prosperity. I have been interested in your paper for a number of years, and it has my best wishes for a long life."

Wilson Duncan writes: "I have read every article in the two last numbers of Progressive Thinker with great profit: and made a little talk for the paper in our meeting. How people who have the means, can go from year to year, calling themselves Spiritualists, and take no paper, is strange to me."

tered by the effects of a hypnotic se-ance, Miss Pansy Ballard, a freshman in the University of Nebraska and the 18year-old of Elias E. Ballard, a prominent capitalist, committed suicide in St. Theresa's procathedral about 10 o'clock Oct. 17. She swallowed carbolic acid and tottered to the confessional. Then to the amazed priest Father Boarman of Chicago, she exclaimed that she had taken poison. He absolved her and called for medical aid. Four years ago a traveling hypnotist held a seance at Wilber. Pansy Ballard. then 14 years old, was in the audience. She was brought under the spell of the hypnotist and after that time she was addicted to spells of melancholia. Her friends declare that it was in a fit of this kind that she bought acid of a druggist, went to the church and took her life.

H. F. Coates writes: "Sunday, October 25, T. W. Sherk occupied the platform for the Church of the Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. His subject was 'Mediumship.' He presented it in such a light that it could not help but awake an interest in his audience and start them seeking to attain that great and noble gift. Mrs. Gage, the blind musician, rendered an instrumental selection. Mr. Cole, the veteran singer and Spiritualist, sang one of his beautiful songs with true inspiration, assisted by Mrs. Gage. Miss Jesie Williams also recited for us in her charming manner, making it a day of enjoyment as well as of enlightenment. Messages were given by Mrs. Cutter and myself, demonstrating that our teachings are not simply philosophy. We invite all to come to our meetings. We meet at 3 and 8 p. m. each Sunday in the above hall, where those who have not found consolation in their church onstration of his mysterious art, and will find a welcome and will without a doubt find those loved ones whom they thought were 'dead.' Dr. Hewitt is expected to be with us Nov. 8. The Progressive Thinker is to be obtained at our hall each Sunday."

The St. Paul (Minn.) Globe has the following: "The ghost of Herman Neitzl, whose body was found on the Great Northern tracks, near Sauk Center, Minn., some weeks ago, and which the section men aver still walks, is attracting attention far beyond the limited sphere about Sauk Center. Prof. Louis H. Vath, of St. Cloud, has an interesting letter apropos of the subject from a gentleman resident in Washington, who is evidently a student of natural phenomena. At his suggestion Prof. Vath has promised in reply to take a party of Sauk Center friends to the scene of the ghost's nocturnal operations, and ascertain, if possible, from the wraith the manner of poor Neitzl's ueath. A delegation of prominent Sauk Center citizens will accompany them to be sure that nothing happens to the board of inquiry, headed by Prof. Vath. The letter from Washington, which is appended, will be found to be interest-'Prof. Louis Vath, Sauk Center:-Dear Sir: I saw in the Osagis Lake Review an account of the supposed ghost of Herman Neltzl. I am studying psychic phenomena and know that this thing is possible, although it is no spirit. If you will take a man with you and wait to see this wraith and ask it in an imperative way why it appears and what it would tell, you may solve the mystery of the crime-you must believe that you will see it or you will not see it. The reason I write you is because I believe you too intelligent to believe in ghost or devil. If you are a student of psychology, you will understand me when I say that the man Neitzl resolved that his subjective mind should visit that spot until the manner of his violent death should be disclosed. If his subjective mind is powerful enough and a person who visits the spot is en rapport with his subjective mind. a vision is possible. See Hudson's 'Law of Psychic Phenomena,' chapter on ghosts. If you make this experiment, it will give me very great satisfaction to get a thorough account of your work, if in any way successful. Very respectfully, M.

Madison, Census & Office, Washington, D. C.'" August Yung, 56 years old, of North Bergen, N. J., walked into an undertaker's shop two weeks ago and said he would like to make arrangements for his funeral. The undertaker remarked that Yung didn't look ill. "I never felt better." said Yung, "but something tells me that I won't live long." He selected a coffin, gave to the undertaker a list of the pall bearers and stipulated how many carriages and the kind of a hearse he wanted at his funeral. Three days later he caught cold and took to his bed. Pneumonia set in, and he died late on Saturday night .- New York

It is not generally known that Rev. George Landon, of Dunkirk, formerly of Hartford, Ind., whose sermonette appeared in Monday's issue of the Muncie Morning Star, was once a trumpet me-dium of that city. Landon was once the pride of the local Spiritualists and he was pointed out to the skeptical as positive proof of the genuineness of the doctrine. Landon kave a number of seances and afterwards announced the whole affair as a fraud. The announcement came as a great surpirse and local Spiritualists refused to believe his statements, so perfect was his work as a trumpet medium. They were very bitter in their denunciation of him and even now believe that he can materialize spirits. Landon afterwards became local preacher and recently was given a charge in the United Brethren conference at Dunkirk.—Muncie Star.

An interesting exhibition of mental telepathy of "blind-sight reading" was given this afternoon by Prof. Rostelle, who is being starred by the Himmelein Stock Company this week at the Academy. A committee consisting of Edward Chase, Burry Fry, Fred Boyer and Frank H. Colbeck was selected to put Rostelle to any fair test they might decide upon. They drove to the Hotel Hay shortly after 2 o'clock, blindfolded the professor and seating him in the carriage drove about the city At the county jail a mail box key borrowed early in the afternoon from Dr. E. P. Wilbur. was taken into the fourth ward of the jail and concealed. Rostelle remained blindfolded in the carriage. The party next drove to the postoffice, told Ros tene they were in front of the govern-ment building, then took him back to the hotel. Still blindfolded Rostelle mounted the box, took the lines and without removing his bandages, drove to the county jail. He walked into the office, took the jail keys and went directly to the fourth ward, unlocking the doors without trouble. A minute later he returned with the postoffice key, mounted the box again and drove di rectly to the postoffice. Without hesitating he walked to Wilbur's mail box unlocked it and took out the mail. Fol lowed by a crowd of spectators and still blindfolded, he ran nimbly across the street and up a flight of stairs to the doctor's office, Dr. Wilbur responded to his knock and received his mail. Members of the committee say they were more than satisfied with the test Kalamazoo (Mich.) Telegraph.

J. Woolman writes: "We are having very instructive and pleasing meetings. Brother Gilray is an earnest student of the natural law and the manner in which he handles the various subjects he has spoken upon proves this. He hands out positive and eternal truths in a way that it hurts some people, those that love darkness better than light. Commencing Sunday evening, Nov. 1 he will discourse upon The First Day of Creation, which will occupy the best part of five Sunday evenings. These lectures will be of great interest to the enquiring mind, as they will put to flight the old orthodox idea of the world being created in six days. We shall hold serivices in our new hall, which is one flight higher than the old one. It has just been newly reconstructed, redecorated. replastered and recarpeted We will have a grand pipe organ which will add greatly to our music. Taken altogether it is conceded to be the finest small hall in the western country; it cost $10,000 to reconstruct it. Sister G. E. Aitkins grows stronger and better with each meeting, and the satisfying comments made upon her psychic powers by the various recipients proves our statement. 1 Our music is a distinctive feature, as it differs materially from that usually heard in the various Spiritualistic meetings Great attention is given to this department which adds to the interest of the meetings, as almost everyone enjoys good music. We have The Progressive-Thinker on sale every Sunday evening, and those we do not sell we give away, so that those who have never taken it or have never read a copy will have the opportunity, as we consider its value far above dollars and cents as an instrument that leads people to think for themselves.'

Attention! Spiritualists of Indiana!-E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A missionaries, are now laboring in the state of Indiana. They wish to visit every Spiritualist society in the state, as well as every locality where there is a prospect of organizing one. The purpose of their visit to Indiana is to help to build up the local societies, organize new ones, and so far as possible, assist in devising methods and means whereby they may become self-supporting, and with a view to organizing a state association composed of these local so cieties. Indiana has a goodly number of societies and may be easily made the banner state under the N. S. A. Officers of local societies, and all Spiritualists who are interested in this move ment on the part of the N S. A, please write these missionaries at once, so they may arrange their route through the state so as not to miss any locality where work is needed, Address E. W Sprague and wife, Rochester, Ind. Mail thus addressed will be forwarded to them wherever they may chance to be.

Clara L. Stewart, an efficient worker in the cause of truth, writes: "As the work of the school is so arranged that it is not necessary for me to be at home all of the time, and it is essential for the best interests of the school that I am out in the field as much as possible, I desire to request the Spiritualists to assist me in reaching all who are interested in the work. I would like engagements with societies for short periods and will make special rates with them if they will correspond with me. Would like to work westward through Minnesota and the states towards the coast, or eastward towards the New England States. Am not partial as to direction, only to plan a series of stops en route. I will be glad to hear from different localities. Address me at Whitewater, Wis."

Thos. J. Havnes writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Our society here is in a very flourishing condition. Mrs. Cora Morrill is the speaker for the months of October and November. We have intelligent and appreciative audiences, Mrs. Morrill's lectures are very inspiring and instructive. Although she is comparatively a new worker in the field; she is one Grand Rapids may well feel proud of. Her controls handle the subjects in a masterly manner and leave the audience in a condition to think further along the lines she lays down in her lectures. Otto Eckhardt writes from Milwau kee, Wis.: "Farmer Riley, the well-known materializing medium has been an honored guest in our home the past two weeks, holding searces every night with great success, every form recognized, at the same time distributing slate messages and flowers among the guests. At one seance a guide wishing to play a prank on the lady of the house, ran after her, chasing her to a seat. At the same time the medium with his control standing over him, and a form coming out on the other side of curtain was in view of all, making three forms, and the medium in sight at the same time. This was witnessed by reliable people. His dark circles are beyond description. Mrs. C. L. Stewart of the Morriss Pratt Institute, attending, Morris Pratt materialized for her and handed her a slate message which she prizes highly. We also received an independent slate message standing in the bright sun-light without the aid of pencil. At one eance a double slate was removed from the room and later returned with a closely written message. Mr. Riley re ceived many beautiful flowers, gifts from his well pleased patrons. May nealth and success follow him, is wish of many warm friends he left in Milwaukee.

Soul Teachings," Mrs. S. C. Jones writes from Rochester, N. Y.: "My step-grandson, (the blind man of whom I spoke) was more than pleased to have the premium book, The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science. He is a very remarkable man for one who has only been totally blind for about six years. He goes all over the city alone in the pursuit of his profession. I think he is a natural psychic. Here he is sometimes spoken of as one of the seven wonders of the world. He is master of the typewriter, also of the New York point print system. He has acquired both since losing his sight."

I. S. Getchel writes from Rockford

son, after a month's vacation, the Spiritual Science Society, of Rockford, Ill. again took up its public work. Brother and Sister E. W. Sprague were the first to serve us, doing us much good in strengthening the work. Next came Ella Johnson Bloom, of Chicago, her talks and messages being greatly appreclated. Then Mrs. Frances Wheeler. of La Crosse, Wis., served us two weeks. Her meetings were largely at tended with increasing interest manifest. Last Sunday Mattie E. Hull was with us. Her good work is well known, The next two Sundays Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes, of Boston, followed by Harry J. Moore. New names are being added to our membership roll at nearly every meeting, with an average attendance of over 200 each Sunday. A Ladies' Auxiliary is doing good work. We are turning our backs to the past, and with a united harmonious endeavor pushing forward to better things we believe the future holds in store for us."

W. H. Harlow writes from Erie, Pa.: "There is an excellent field in this city for a good organizer who will come here and stay for the fall, winter and spring seasons. Erie is a large manu facturing city of about 70,000 population. We have, I suppose, 500 Spiritualists as near as I can estimate, and without any organization of any Here is a chance for the right kind of a good worker in our cause. The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rappilly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautisful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a place that sented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the con-stant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

KING DAVID.

A Scholarly Account of His Life and Character.

Emanuel Swedenborg in his Spiritual Diary and other writings, assigned to King David of Jewry, a very exceptionable place in the regions of souls. Later writers have plucked at feathers which he had worn as the "Sweet Singer of Israel." The Psaims ascribed o him are set forth as the composition of different authors. His name would be in such case only a species of dedica-They would compare with the speeches made from the Throne in England when Parliament assembles. The lovereign perhaps knows less than any body else what they mean or what they are for. So, David has been extolled as long-time saint, and I have even heard old gossiping church members of Sunday morning in winter when sitting around the stove at the meetingiouse, declare him "a Christian man." The principal testimony respecting him in the New Testament, is that he is not ascended into the heavens. He had then completed his Adonis career, though bearing one of the Adonis Pierre Bayle created a great sensation in religious circles by a sketch of the history of this eponymous king, which though in every point confirmed by the Hebrew accounts, exhibited him in a most unflattering light. Whether the erudite Frenchman mentioned the incongruities apparent in the story I do not know. The first book of Samuel seems to be a collection of clippings rather than a consecutive story. For example David is twice presented to King Saul.

The first account is that Samuel the prophet who had been displaced as chief magistrate of the Israelites, had allen out with Saul, because he had spared the cattle and king of the Ama-lekites, after putting all the people, men, women and children, to the sword. So "the Lord repented that he had made Saul king over Israel." Samual was accordingly sent to Beth Lehem, to Jesse, because the Lord had provided him a king among his sons. Of these there were said in I. Chroncles, ii:13-15 to be seven; in I Samuel xvii:12, to be eight. David is described as the youngest. Jesse was a Zakan. alderman or shelk, among his towns-men. The prophet at once held a sac-rlace or sacred repast, and "sanctified" Jesse and his sons. When he proceeded to select the future king, he declared the oldest to be the "Lord's anointed," the Messiah or Christos. It was a mistake, and so the whole seven were refused. Then Samuel learned that there was another. He had been omitted, he vas away keeping the sheep. He seems to have been regarded as of 'less importance than the others, perhaps as hardly to be counted with them, except as an underling.

Perhaps the 51st Psalm explains this. Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." It may be a story of Jophtha (Judges xi.) Samuel then anointed him as king, and "the spirit of the Lord came upon him from that day forward," departing from Saul. This "spirit" was evidently the "kingly majesty" which is represented in Zamyad—Yasht as created by

Yet no significance seems to be at tached in subsequent chapters to this anointing. When at a subsequent period a prophet is recorded as having anointed Jehu, that chieffain set himself at once to a conspiracy, and exterminated the entire reigning family. But Jesse and his sons act as though nothing of the kind had happened, and indeed no other reference is made to the matter. In the very next chapter the older brother is represented as giv-ing David a severe scolding for having lest the sheep to come and see the battle. We have conflicting accounts of his forming the acquaintance of the king. One sets forth that Saul is troubled by 'an evil spirit from the Lord," and hearing of David, sends to his father for "And he (Saul) loved him greatly, and he became his armor bearer." So he was retained in the royal family, and as he played with his harp the evil spirit went away from the king.

In the next account David has gone back to his sheep at Beth Lehem. An invasion having taken place, his three older brothers go to the army, but he being the youngest, stays at home. His father sending him to enquire after his brothers, he kills Gollath, the cham-pion of the Philistines. He carries the enemy's head to Jerusalem—then held by its own people. Meanwhile Saul en-quires after him, desirous to know whose son he is. No one is able to tell. The king then attaches him to his own household and gives him a command over his soldiers.

It is also related that when Goliath terrified the Israelitish forces, Saul offered to his slayer the hand of a daughter, great riches, and the freedom of his father's house. Then again, as though nothing of the sort had taken place, he now offers David the hand of his daughter on condition that he shall be valiant in war. David pleads off, on the ground that he is a nobody, that he is poor and his family of no account. Yet the king persists, and he wins the maid by a new success in battle. Jephtha—an illegitimate son—upon a new career as an outlaw. When at Aduliam, near Moab, his brothers come to him, together with every one in distress, every one in debt, and every one discontented—about four hundred men. six hundred. "And he became a captain over them." A later chapter increases the number to wife of Nabal (I. Sympel xxvi:36), and Bath Sheba, the wife of Urlah and granddaughter of Afiltophiel, and also by the world confession! of the 38th Psalm. The extermination of the family of Saul may be imputed to their restlessness, due to the expectation that disaster in the family of David would restore them to name, or like would restore them to power (II. Samuel xvi:8-8). The king spems, however, to have disregarded the jaw of Deuteronomy, xxi:22, if there was then any such law.

The pretext for these executions was priests and others were massacred (I. Samuel xxi:19). But it was also a violation of the law of Deuteronomy (xxiv:16). David seems to have put of several of his revenges to later dates, and to have left them as heirlooms. At least his successor used them to vindi-cate the execution of Joah, who had taken sides with his older brother, the denosing of Abiathar as chief priest and the slaying of Shimei, a kinsman of King Saul.

Yet dispensing with many of these details as actual occurrences, there are two ways to account for the narration.

The Canon of Scripture appears to have been determined when the Hasmonean priests became sovereign in Judea. They were ambitious, and aimed to subjugate the territory around them. The conquests of David were represented as extending from the Mediterranean to the river Euphrates, including Syria, the Perea, and Arabia Petraea. The purpose was to educate the Zionists of that period to regard all that region as to be gained anew. The story of the book of Genesis described the territory as belonging to the kindred peoples. John Hyrkan added Samaria and Galilee, thus classifying the region as belonging to the sons of Israel. The acquiring of Idumea was suggested by the twing Esau and Jacob. Arabia indicated as Ishmael; the Perea, the sons of Lot, and Syria the brother of Rebekka. Doubtless this might all have yielded in time, but that Herod brought in the Romans, and when they came, whether in guise or friends or foes, the result was the same. The proconsul with his army of plunderers wined out the past and changed the course of events. There is room also for another hypothesis which I will outline but not elaborate. The name "Saul" is the same as "Sheol" the region of departed souls. David or Dud, signifies the Lover or Beloved One, and properly de-notes the Adonis of Orlental mythology. 'Dido" is an appellation of the goddess Astarte or Ashtoreth, the Venus of Western Asia. In the legend, the divine youth is wounded to death by a boar, descends into hell or sheel, comes forth and ascends to the embrace of his goddess consort. Jerome records that the rites of this divinity were observed at the cave in Beth Lehens. They generally began by a procession denoting the search for the body, the sacrifice of the search for the body, the sacrifice of the swine, the mourning by the women, all which concluded by the announcing of the rising of the Divine One on the third day. If a heavy shower of rain came, it was esteemed most propitious. (I. Kings xviii.) Spring was ushered in with promise of abundance.

The dominion passing from Saul or Sheel to David, the gening of life, love, the new season, may be an under meaning of the story.

In No. 711 of The Progressive Thinker, under the caption of "Creation vs. Evolution," H. W. B. Myrick quotes a paragraph from Hudson Tuttle's reply to A. R. Wallace, and proceeds to criticise the same. He seems to have sought every known author or scientist favoring his especial theories, to establish the fact (or belief) that there exists an Infinite Intelligence, personal God, or impersonal Force, (he does not fully decide which), who created this magnificently beautiful universe. It seems an endless subject for con troversy, and the opposing parties may well put all their intellectual vim and vigor into working order. Of course each one may search the records of modern and ancient history at will, or call forth all the requisite force and inspiration that may be obtainable from higher intelligences, before making a final, infallible (?) decision and prove to the world (each in their own mind) that there was no beginning, and therefore no necessity for a special Creator, and as well upon the other hand, that there is a personal being, or, creative force which guides and holds the universe in its proper course and equipoise.

While it seems an "irrepressible con

However, of late, to my discomfiture, this great question of a "He," or "It" sary for the guiding and furnishing of a motive power to evolve and run the universe with its unvarying exactness, seems to have been laid upon the table until greater wisdom may be ac-cumulated for the perfect solution of the great problem, and thus it may "hang fire" indefinitely. Still, Mr. Editor, I am very desirous, as opportunity presents, that you may find space in your columns for the opposing "literary lights" of evolutionary (or, revolutionary) thought, to again come to the front for the edification and spiritual develonment of all concerned.

Nevertheless, this pertinent question may be raised by some wise (?) critic: "What matters it all, anyway, whether the universe was conceived, designed and intelligently put together in the twinkling of God's all-seeing eye for the benefit of the human race at large, (and especially for the ministers and priests particular, that they may wear broadcloth and obtain a neat living by hypnotizing the ignorant with false doc trines, or whether it was formed through infinite evolutionary processes at present somewhat incompr to finite mind?

A MOST IMPORTANT DISCUSSION.

Between the Veteran Worker, Lyman C. Howe, and Florence Huntley.

Please remember, LYMAN C. HOWE, of Fredonia, N. Y., one of the ablest lecturers on our rostrum to-day, a profound thinker, and in all respect amply qualified to maintain himself in any capacity he may be called upon to act, WILL HOLD A DISCUSSION In the columns of The Progressive Thinker, with MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY, a lady who ranks high in the literary circles of Chicago, and who is the editor of "The Great Psychological Crime," and the author of several other books, of great value to the world. She and Mr. Howe will enter into a discussion In regard to the merits of THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME, and the same will be published in The Progressive Thinker, affording a rich and valuable intellectual treat, never before offered to the readers of any Spiritualist paper. The discussion between Mr. Howe and Mrs. Huntley will follow right along afterethe Symposium, which will appear some time in October.

Now is the time to send in your sub-

SOME HIGHER CRITICISMS.

On Some Religious Fads, Isms, Soph isms, Etc.

Dowie claims to be the reincarnation of the prophet Elijah. But it is well to bear in mind that Elijah was fed by ravens at the command of God, while Dowie is fed by gulls at repeated requests of his own.

These remedies are useful in many cases, but a large class of diseases of a mental or nervous character, can be cured without them.

I can do considerable in the way of mental and magnetic healing myself, and if I was to practice it with prayer, and in the name of a new system of religion, like Christian Science and other forms, I could soon be a Dowie No 2. Those old scriptures declare that the prayer of faith shall save the sick. Dowie takes them at their word and puts that idea into practice and thousands declare themselves healed, and of course they know better than we do. and we have no right to dispute their

The fact is now becoming apparent to all that Dowie is the greatest religious that Do and business agitator that has arisen in modern history. I never could see why the newspapers and thousands of the people are so down on the old prophet, for as a business manager he heats the world, and his peculiar form of religion is just as good as any of the sects. He preaches Christ and him crucified, and that a personal God was his father, whom he begat by a Jewish maiden called Mary. He preaches a big black personal devil and a literal brimstone furnace called hell, and a literal material place called heaven; and hundreds of other dark and ignorant ideas born in the unenlightened minds of the ancient Jewish heathen world. But the dear old man must have the credit of founding the first purely moral pity of the world.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH, INC IU-MUKKUW UF ULAIT, Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuler. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific stibjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says:
"There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, 61.60.

He pretends to cure, and does cure, thousands of sick people without the use of poisonous drugs, by the laying on of his magnetic hands, and prayer to Christ and God, whom he thinks does the curing. medium, for the two names are of the same meaning. Christ was a magnetic healing medium. His body and nervous system was always surcharged with this pure and divine essence, and when he came in contact with a weak, negative and sick person, the magnetic es-sence passed from the positive to the negative to restore the equilibrium and the invalid arose and walked forth a cured man or woman. I can cure to a considerable extent that way myself. That same divine pure magnetism, by which Christ and his apostles, and many others cured disease, is in this world now the same as it was in their day, and learned men have reduced it to a science, and it is taught in books to day. It is the magnetic principle (anciently called "the Holy Ghost") that cures or drives out diseases from human organisms, and not the person in whose name you perform it. He knows nothing of the case and hence I can cure in the name of Abraham Lincoln, or George Washington just as well as in the name of Jesus. The name of some person with whom the mind of the patient is familiar is only used to concentrate the mind, for this is absolutely a necessary condition of the mind that must be had before a good cure can be obtained. There are several, instances found in the disconnected, fragmentary history of Jesus the psychometric healer, that show plainly that he was only a healing me-dium, and his powers were not well understood either by himself or the people. At one time he found himself surrounded by a pressing surging crowd, and some one was accidentally pressed against him, and he immediately cried out, "Who touclied me? Someone certainly did, for I felt virtue [magnetism] go out of me." He was a good clairvoyant mind-reader.

He took a short look into the mind and life of a certain young lady he met at a well where he stopped to get a drink of water while strolling through the country. He told her fortune for her without money or price, and he told her everything she ever did. But I could keep on and write a book, but I will close with a few remarks about those ravens that fed Elijah. How easy it was for those ancient scribes to get things all mixed up in their copying and translating business The original manuscripts said nothing about "ravens" feeding Elijah, Those nasty birds, of course, had nothing to feed him on but such carrion as they carried to their young in their nests.

or all of the unwholesome mess that they were carrying to their young The original says that "Arabians" fed Elijah. He was fed by human beings, and not unclean wild birds, the nasty scavengers of the country. Yes, the Arabians fed old Elliah, and no doubt they brought him the very best they had in their cupboards, such

Now, there is some sense to this view of the question, but as it stands in the Bible, there is neither sense, truth nor decency in it. And there is the foolish story about old Sampson tying the tails of whole droves of foxes together, and then set ting their tails on fire, and chasing them across the wheat fields and there-

fox's tail. I do wonder what kind of a pack of hounds the old man kept to catch so many foxes, all at one fox hunt The whole foolish story is all made plain when we learn that what we now call a sheaf of wheat, they called "a fox of wheat;" and Samson perhaps tied these sheaves of wheat together, and set fire to the dry straw, and had them drawn across a wheat field to the de struction of all the shocks of wheat and perhaps cleaned up the stubbles. I could give many more instances of this kind of mistakes to be found in that old book, which ignorant sapheads think was made by God himself, and the salvation of a world hinges upon it. We often hear saphead preachers talking about the "inerrancy" of this book in which scholars have found not less than 40,000 errors, and still there's more to follow. That part of this book called the Old Testament is a nice piece of religious rot to be dragged down through our beautiful civilization, the
